lift-latch (lift'lach), n. A door-fastening consisting of a latch which is raised by turning a knob.

lift-lock (lift'lok), n. A canal-lock which lifts a boat confined in it by flotation from one level to a higher level when water is allowed to flow into the lock.

lift-pump (lift'pump), n. Any pump that is not a force-pump.

lift-tenter (lift'ten″tėr), n. In mach., the governor of a windmill that is employed in driving grinding-stones, designed to regulate the distance between the upper and the lower stone according to the velocity.

lift-wall (lift'wâl), n. The cross-wall of a lock-chamber in a canal.

lig (lig), v. i. An obsolete or dialectal form of lie[1].

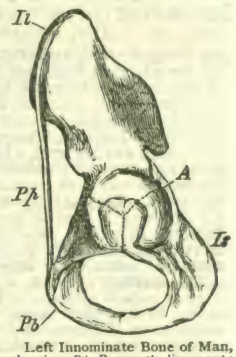
ligament (lig'a-ment), n. [< F. ligament = Sp. ligamiento, ligamento = Pg. It. ligamento, < L. ligamentum, a tie, band, < ligare, bind. Cf. lien[2].] 1. A connecting tie or band; anything that binds objects or their parts together; any bond of union, material or immaterial.



Common and described prayers are the most excellent instrument and act and ligament of the communion of saints. Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), II. 284.

I find here a man, a woman, a child, amongst whom and myself there exist the closest ligaments.
Hawthorne, Scarlet Letter, iv.

2. Specifically—(a) In anat., a band of connective tissue serving to bind one part to another. Most ligaments have a particular shape, site, and office, and consequently receive special names. See phrases following. (b) In conch., a band of uncalcified chitinous cuticular substance which unites the valves of a bivalve shell. It is usually elastic, and so disposed that when the valves are closed it is either compressed or put upon the stretch, in either of which opposite cases it antagonizes the action of the adductor muscles and tends to divaricate the valves.

Conchologists commonly draw a distinction between an internal and an external ligament; but, in relation to the body of the animal, all ligaments are external, and their internality or externality is in respect of the hinge-line, or the line along which the edges of the valves meet.
Huxley, Anat. Invert., p. 406.

Acromioclavicular ligaments, alar ligaments, annular ligament. See the adjectives.—Annular ligament of the stapes, the capsular ligament connecting the foot of the stapes with the margin of the fenestra ovalis.—Arcuate ligament. See arcuate.—Atlo-axoid ligament. See atlo-axoid.—Broad ligament. (a) Of the liver, the falciform or suspensory ligament, consisting of two layers of peritoneum, passing between the liver and the diaphragm. (b) Of the uterus, the fold of peritoneum which extends from the uterus to the pelvis on either side.—Burns's or Hey's ligament, the upper border of the saphenous opening in the fascia lata of the thigh; the femoral ligament or falciform process. Also called femoral ligament of Hey.—Camper's ligament. See triangular ligament of the urethra, under triangular.—Capsular ligament. See capsular.—Central ligament. See central.—Check-ligaments, two stout fibrous cords, one on each side, passing from the occipital condyles and margin of the foramen magnum to the odontoid process of the axis, thus limiting or checking the rotation of the head upon the axis. Also called lateral or alar odontoid ligaments.—Ciliary, conoidal, coraco-acromial, coracoclavicular, coracohumeral ligament. See the adjectives, and cut under knee-joint.—Coracoid ligament, a fibrous band converting the suprascapular notch into a foramen.—Coronary, costocolic, cotyloid, crucial ligaments. See the adjectives.—Deltoid ligament, the internal lateral ligament of the ankle-joint.—Falciform ligament. See falciform.—Femoral ligament of Hey. Same as Burns's ligament.—Gastrosplenic ligament. See gastrosplenic.—Gimbernat's ligament, that portion of Poupart's ligament which is reflected along the iliopectineal line.—Glenoid ligament, a fibrocartilaginous band surrounding the glenoid fossa of the scapula.—Hey's ligament. Same as Burns's ligament.—Hyo-epiglottic, iliofemoral, iliolumbar, intermuscular ligaments. See the adjectives.—Ligament of Winslow, the principal ligament of the back of the knee-joint, largely derived from expansions of the tendons of muscles, especially of the semimembranosus.—Ligament of Zinn, a fibrous band attached to the border of the optic foramen, whence the recti muscles of the eyeball arise.—Ligaments of the diaphragm. See diaphragm.—Lumbosacral ligament. See lumbosacral.—Mucous ligament, a ligament traversing the synovial cavity of the knee from the anterior wall of the synovial membrane to the intercondylar notch of the femur.—Nuchal ligament. See ligamentum nuchæ, under ligamentum.—Odontoid ligaments. See check-ligaments.—Orbicular ligament, a circular band of fibers confining the head of the radius in the lesser sigmoid cavity of the ulna.—Poupart's ligament, the thickened lower border of the aponeurosis of the external oblique muscle of the abdomen, continuous with the fascia lata of the thigh, extending from the anterior superior spinous process of the ilium in the line of the groin to the spine of the os pubis; the crural arch, beneath which emerge the great vessels and nerves of the front of the thigh, and just above which is the inguinal canal for the spermatic cord, or for the round ligament of the uterus.—Rhomboid ligament, the costoclavicular ligament.—Round ligament. (a) Of the hip, a short, stout fibrous cord connecting the cavity of the acetabulum with the depression upon the summit of the head of the thigh-bone. (b) Of the liver, the impervious cord formed by the umbilical vein, passing from the navel to the under surface of the liver. (c) Of the uterus, a rounded cord on each side between the layers of the broad ligament, passing from the upper part of the womb to the internal abdominal ring and thence through the inguinal canal to the labia majora, consisting of fibrous, areolar, and some muscular tissue, with vessels and nerves inclosed in a fold of peritoneum. It corresponds in part to the spermatic cord of the male.—Stellate ligaments, the anterior costovertebral ligaments.—Stylohyoid ligament, the representative in man of the epihyal bone of some mammals, situated between the stylohyal and ceratohyal elements of the hyoidean arch.—Suspensory ligament. (a) Of the liver. See broad ligament (a). (b) Of the mammæ, processes of the superficial thoracic fascia entering and supporting these glands. (c) Of the penis, the fibrous attachment of the root of the organ to the symphysis pubis. (d) Of the spleen, a fold of peritoneum connecting the spleen with the diaphragm.—Tarsal ligament. See palpebral ligament, under palpebral.—Transverse ligament of the atlas, a stout cord extending across the ring of the atlas, and holding the odontoid process of the axis in place. Its rupture, as in hanging, causes instant death from impact of the odontoid process upon the medulla oblongata.—Trapezoid ligament, the squarish portion of the acromioclavicular ligament.—Vesico-umbilical ligament, the urachus.—Y-ligament of Bigelow, the lower forked part of the iliofemoral ligament.

ligamental (lig-a-men'tal), a. [< ligament + -al.] Same as ligamentous. [Rare.]

ligamentary (lig-a-men'ta-ri), a. [< ligament + -ary.] Same as ligamentous.

ligamentous (lig-a-men'tus), a. [= F. ligamenteux = Sp. Pg. It. ligamentoso; as ligament + -ous.] Of or pertaining to a ligament; composing a ligament: as, ligamentous tissue; a ligamentous connection or attachment.

ligamentously (lig-a-men'tus-li), adv. By means of a ligament.

Being also connected ligamentously with the scapulæ.
Encyc. Brit., XVI. 609.

ligamentum (lig-a-men'tum), n.; pl. ligamenta (-tä). [L.: see ligament.] A ligament. The names of the ligaments here given are commonly written in the Latin form.—Ligamenta subflava, the yellowish elastic ligaments connecting the laminæ of vertebræ with one another.—Ligamenta vaginalia, the sheathing ligaments, strong fibrous bands which form sheaths for the flexor tendons of the fingers and toes.—Ligamentum Botalli. See ductus Botalli, under ductus.—Ligamentum dentatum or denticulatum, a narrow serrated fibrous band on each side of the spinal cord, separating the anterior from the posterior roots of the spinal nerves.—Ligamentum mucosum, a mucous ligament.—Ligamentum nuchæ, a mass of yellow elastic fibrous tissue in the median line of the back of the neck of many animals, as the ox, serving by its elasticity to assist in the support of the head. It is rudimentary or wanting in man, in whom it is represented merely by an aponeurosis. It is readily seen in a neck of lamb as served on the table: called by butchers faxwax, fixfax, packwax, paxwax, paxywaxy, whitleather, etc.—Ligamentum patellæ, the ligament of the kneepan, the tendon of insertion of the great extensor muscles which lie upon the front of the thigh.—Ligamentum pectinatum iridis, the connection of the circumference of the iris with the cornea.—Ligamentum spirale, the spiral ligament of the cochlea.—Ligamentum teres, the round ligament of the hip-joint.

ligan (lī'gan), n. [In this form, and according to the def. ('a thing tied,' etc.), < OF. as if ligain,* an assumed var. of liain, lien (= Pg. ligame, etc.), a band, tie, < L. ligamen, band, tie: see lien[2]. But ligan is appar. a sophisticated form, feigning a connection with L. ligare, bind, as above, or with E. lie, lig, D. liggen, etc., of the older form lagan (formerly also lagon, lagam), < OF. lagan, also lagand, lagant, laguen, waifs or wreckage cast ashore, a seignorial right claimed to such wreckage; perhaps of LG. origin, from the verb cognate with E. lie[1].] In law, anything sunk in the sea, but tied to a support at the surface, as a cork or buoy, in order that it may be recovered. See flotsam and jetsam.

Jetsam is where goods are cast into the sea, and there sink and remain under water; flotsam is where they continue swimming on the surface of the waves; ligan is where they are sunk in the sea, but tied to a cork or buoy in order to be found again. Blackstone, Com., I. viii.

liganceţ, n. A variant of legiance, for allegiance.

ligate (lī'gāt), v. t.; pret. and pp. ligated, ppr. ligating. [< L. ligatus, pp. of ligare, tie, bind: see ligament.] To bind with a ligature; tie.

The possibility of ligating the ruptured artery could not, under the circumstances, be entertained.
Medical News, LIII. 78.

★ ligation (lī-gā'shon), n. [= OF. ligation (vernacularly liaison, F. liaison) = Sp. ligación, ligazón, < LL. ligatio(n-), a binding, < ligare, pp. ligatus, bind: see ligament.] A tying or binding, or the state of being tied or bound; constriction by a ligature or bond; especially, in surg., the operation of tying an artery to prevent hemorrhage, as after amputation, etc.

It is the ligation of sense, but the liberty of reason.
Sir T. Browne, Religio Medici, ii. 11.

ligator (lī-gā'tor), n. [< NL. ligator, < L. ligare, tie, bind: see ligament.] In surg., an instrument used to place and fasten a ligature. E. H. Knight.

ligature (lig'ā-tūr), n. [< F. ligature = Sp. Pg. ligadura = It. ligatura, < LL. ligatura, a band, < L. ligare, bind: see ligament.] 1. Anything that serves for tying, binding, or uniting, as a cord or bandage; hence, any binding, restraining, or uniting agency or principle.

Religion is a public virtue; it is the ligature of souls, and the great instrument of the conservation of bodies politic. Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), I. 81.

The many ligatures of our English dress check the circulation of the blood. Spectator.

Ligatures of race and family and family affections to bind them together.
Bushnell, Nature and the Supernat., vi.

Specifically—2. In surg.: (a) A cord for tying a blood-vessel, particularly an artery, to prevent hemorrhage. (b) A cord or wire to remove tumors, etc., by strangulation.—3. The act of binding; ligation.

Any stoppage of the circulation will produce a dropsy, as by strong ligature or compression. Arbuthnot, Diet.

4†. The state of being bound or consolidated.

Sand and gravel grounds easily admit of heat and moisture, for which they are not much the better, because they let it pass too soon, and contract no ligature.
Mortimer, Husbandry.

5†. Impotence supposed to be induced by magic.—6. In music: (a) In medieval musical notation, one of various compound note-forms designed to indicate groups of two or more tones which were to be sung to a single syllable—that is, similar to a group of slurred notes in the modern notation. Ligatures are often difficult to decipher, on account of the doubtfulness not only of the pitch of the tones intended, but of their relative duration. (b) In modern musical notation, a tie or band; hence, a group of notes slurred together, intended to be sung at a single breath or to be played as a continuous phrase. (c) In contrapuntal music, a syncopation.—7. In printing and writing, a type or character consisting of or representing two or more letters or characters united. In type-founding the ligatures fi, fl, ff, ffi, ffl are made on account of the kern or overhanging top of the letter f. Six others were formerly made with the similarly shaped long s, now disused—ſb, ſh, ſi, ſk, ſl, and ſt; and there was also a ligatured ct (ct). A still larger number of ligatures were used in old fonts of Greek type, all of which are now generally discarded. In medieval cursive or minuscule manuscripts, especially of Greek, ligatures are very numerous, and in the earlier printed editions about fifty such characters are of frequent occurrence. Some of the Greek ligatures and of the elements composing them seem to have originated in tachygraphic or shorthand characters. See tachygraphy.—Ligature forceps. See forceps.

ligature (lig'ā-tūr), v. t.; pret. and pp. ligatured, ppr. ligaturing. [< ligature, n.] To compress or tie by means of a ligature, in any sense; ligate.

If the sino-auricular junction of the heart of the turtle be ligatured under favorable circumstances, the action of the auricles and ventricle, temporarily arrested, may be resumed. Science, XI. 80.

ligeancet, ligeancyt, n. Variants of legiance, for allegiance.

ligget, v. i. A Middle English form of lie[1].

liggementt, n. An obsolete form of ledgment.

ligger (lig'ėr), n. [< ME. liggere,* var. of ligere,* lier: see lier[1], and cf. lig, lie[1]. Hence by assibilation lidger, ledger: see ledger[1].] 1. The horizontal timber of a scaffolding; a ledger.—2. A nether millstone.

The stones which composed these primitive . . . mills . . . were two: an upper stone or runner, and a nether, called in Derbyshire a ligger, from the old word lig, to lie.
Archæologia (1785), VII. 20.

3. A plank placed across a ditch as a pathway.—4. A coverlet for a bed.—5. A line with a float and bait used for catching pike.—6. A spent salmon; a kipper or kelt. [Prov. Eng. in all senses. Halliwell.] light[1] (līt), a. [< ME. light, liht, lyht, liȝt, < AS. leóht, lēht, līht = OS. lioht = OFries. liacht = D. ligt, licht = MLG. Hence light[1], v., lighten[1], enlighten, etc.; but light[1], n., is of different terminal formation: see light[1], n.] 1. Bright; clear; not dark or obscure: as, it begins to be light (said of the morning); a light apartment.

Even the night shall be light about me. Ps. cxxxix. 11.

O, now be gone: more light and light it grows.
Shak., R. and J., iii. 5. 35.

2. Pale or whitish in color; applied to colors, highly luminous and more or less deficient in chroma: as, a light complexion; a light pink.

The boy was so light-eyed and light-haired that the . . . rays appeared to draw out of him what little colour he ever possessed. Dickens, Hard Times, i. 1.

Sweet-hearted, you, whose light-blue eyes
Are tender over drowning flies.
Tennyson, In Memoriam, xcvi.

Light green, light green S. Same as acid-green.—Light meat. See meat.

light[1] (līt), v.; pret. and pp. lighted (less properly lit), ppr. lighting. [< ME. lighten, lichten, lihten, lyhten, liȝten, < AS. lȳhtan, līhtan, leóhtan, shine, lighten (also in comp. ālīhtan, inlīhtan, onlīhtan, gelīhtan, merged in obs. To become light or bright; exhibit a bright or luminous effect; shine, as from internal or reflected light: as, her face lighted up with joy; the picture lights up well.

But, natheles, it was so fair a syghte
That it made alle her hertes for to lyghte.
Chaucer, Squire's Tale, l. 388.

And that shall be the day, whene'er it lights,
That this same child of honour and renown . . .
And your unthought-of Harry chance to meet.
Shak., 1 Hen. IV., iii. 2. 138.

2. To catch fire; kindle, as something to which fire is applied.

II. trans. 1. To make light; give light to, or shed light upon, literally or figuratively; provide with light; illuminate; irradiate: as, to light an apartment; a smile lighted up his countenance.

And after that hire lokynge gan she lyghte
That never thoughte hym seen so goode a sighte.
Chaucer, Troilus, i. 293.

And all our yesterdays have lighted fools
The way to dusty death. Shak., Macbeth, v. 5. 22.

That one great eye [in the Pantheon] opening upon heaven is by far the noblest conception for lighting a building to be found in Europe.
J. Fergusson, Hist. Arch., I. 311.

From the intense, clear, star-sown vault of heaven,
Over the lit sea's unquiet way.
M. Arnold, Self-dependence.

2. To kindle; ignite; cause to burn, either literally or figuratively: as, to light a fire or a match; to light the torch of rebellion.

Whome we folowyd to all the holy placys with in the same Monasteri, with candels light [lit or lighted] in ower handys. Torkington, Diarie of Eng. Travell, p. 48.

With better flames than these, which only be Lighted to plunge in Darkness you and me.
J. Beaumont, Psyche, ii. 114.

★ light[1] (līt), n. [< ME. light, licht, liȝt, liht, < AS. leóht = OS. lioht = OFries. liacht = D. licht = MLG. LG. licht = OHG. lioht, MHG. lieht, G. licht = Goth. liuhath (liuhad-), light; with orig. noun-formative -ath, -th (the Scand. forms, Icel. ljōs = Sw. ljus = Dan. lys, having a diff. formative -s), from the Teut. √ luh, be light: see light[1], a. The noun light is thus of diff. formation from the adj. light, though from the same root.] 1. That which makes things visible; in physics, that form of energy which, acting upon the organs of sight, renders visible the objects from which it proceeds. The now abandoned emission or corpuscular theory, which was advocated by Newton, represented light as consisting of minute material particles emitted by the luminous body and traveling through space in all directions from it, with immense velocity; the sensation of sight being due to the action of these particles upon the eye. According to the undulatory theory, which is now generally accepted, light is a kind of undulatory motion produced by the luminous body in the particles of an elastic, imponderable medium called the luminiferous ether (see ether[1], 2), which is supposed to fill all space, as also the interstices of all bodies. This motion is propagated in waves (see wave) in all directions from the luminous body, and with a velocity in a vacuum of about 186,000 miles per second. The rays sent out or radiated in straight lines from the luminous body differ in wave-length, although apparently propagated with the same velocity; the eye is sensitive to those only whose wave-lengths are included between certain narrow limits, namely, those corresponding to red and violet light (see spectrum). Light is, then, a part of the kind of energy called radiant energy (see radiant energy, under energy, and radiation). The electromagnetic theory of light, proposed by Maxwell, supposes light (or, more generally, radiant energy) to be an electromagnetic disturbance propagated by vibrations at right angles to the direction of the ray, and taking place in the same ether the strains or vibrations of which serve to propagate electromagnetic induction. In confirmation of this theory, it is found that the experimentally determined velocities of the propagation of light and of electromagnetic induction are nearly the same. The principal phenomena of light are grouped under the following heads: (1) Absorption, or the transformation of the vibration of the ether into the molecular vibrations of the body upon which the light falls or through which it passes. The effect of the absorption of part of the light-rays by a body is to give it color; thus, grass is green because it sends back to the eye only the rays which together produce the effect of green, the other rays being absorbed; and a piece of red glass owes its color to the fact that it transmits only that part of the light whose combined effect upon the eye is that of red. According to the degree of absorption of light, a body is said to be transparent, translucent, opaque, etc. Connected with absorption are the phenomena of fluorescence and phosphorescence. (2) Reflection, or the sending back of the light-rays by the surface on which they fall into the medium through which they have come. The laws of reflection explain the action of plane, concave, and convex mirrors (see mirror). The irregular reflection, scattering, or diffusion of the light from the surfaces of bodies serves to make them visible to the eye. (3) Refraction, the breaking or change of direction of the ray as it passes from one medium into another of different density. This may be single or double, the latter when the ray is separated into two rays. The principles of refraction explain the use of lenses (see lens), with the various instruments in which they form the essential part, as the microscope, telescope, etc. (4) Dispersion, or the separation of rays of different wave-length, as when a pencil of white light passes through a prism, and a spectrum showing the successive colors is produced (see spectrum and spectroscope). (5) Interference, or the mutual action of different waves, producing such phenomena as Newton's rings, the colors of thin plates, and the colored figures of uniaxial and biaxial crystals. A special case is that of diffraction. (6) Polarization, or that change in a light-ray which limits its vibrations to one plane—a change produced by reflection and double refraction, and leading to a wide range of beautiful phenomena. See further under each of these terms.

Truly the light is sweet, and a pleasant thing it is for the eyes to behold the sun. Eccl. xi. 7.

Hail, holy Light! offspring of heaven first-born, . . .
Bright effluence of bright essence increate.
Milton, P. L., iii. 1.

It is possible to produce darkness by the addition of two portions of light. If light is a substance, there cannot be another substance which when added to it shall produce darkness. We are therefore compelled to admit that light is not a substance. Clerk Maxwell, Heat, p. 215.

No one who has studied the subject can doubt . . . that light really consists of a change of state propagated from point to point in a medium existing between the luminous body and that which the light affects.
Stokes, Light, p. 25.

2. In physiol., the sensation produced by the action of physical luminosity upon the organ of vision. See color.—3. Illumination or enlightenment as an effluence or a result; radiation from or to anything, in either a physical or a moral sense; luminosity; glow; radiance: as, the light of the sun, of a taper, or of a glow-worm; to be guided by the light of reason; to shed new light on a subject.

Lord, lift thou up the light of thy countenance upon us.
Ps. iv. 6.

Wearing the white flower of a blameless life,
Before a thousand peering littlenesses,
In that fierce light which beats upon a throne.
Tennyson, Idylls of the King, Ded.

Men and women who have developed power of mind and heart by simple fidelity to truth and conscience, until they have become sources of light and comfort to all the neighborhood. J. F. Clarke, Self-Culture, p. 43.

4. The state or condition of being visible; exposure to view; hence, public observation; publicity: as, his misdeeds have come to light.

The better to follow the good, and avoyd the evill, which in time must of force bring great thinges to light.
Booke of Precedence (E. E. T. S., extra ser.), i. 6.

A doleful story you shall heare,
In time brought forth to light.
The Children in the Wood (Child's Ballads, III. 129).

Oh, spring to light, auspicious Babe, be born!
Pope, Messiah, l. 22.

5. That which gives light; a source of illumination; a body that emits or transmits rays of light, as the sun, the moon, a star, a beacon, a candle, etc.; in pyrotechnics, any piece of fireworks which burns brightly.

And God made two great lights; the greater light to rule the day, and the lesser light to rule the night. Gen. i. 16.

The lights burn blue. It is now dead midnight.
Shak., Rich. III., v. 3. 180.

The lights of heav'n (which are the world's fair eies)
Look down into the world, the world to see.
Sir J. Davies, Nosce Teipsum.

That on a certaine night they laye an Image in a bed, and number a set bead-roll of lamentations; which being ended, light is brought in. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 89.

More than two thousand churches in England have lights upon the Altars.
F. G. Lee, Directorium Anglicanum, p. 46, note.

Hence—6. Figuratively, a source of mental or spiritual illumination; one who or that which enlightens, as an eminent teacher; anything which diffuses knowledge, instruction, or information; a guiding power or principle; also, a source of cheerfulness or joy.

The Lord is my light and my salvation. Ps. xxvii. 1.

The woman where we lodged was an ancient, grave, and serious person, to whom we declared the testimony of the light, shewing her the difference betwixt an outside and an inside religion, which she received with much kindness. Penn, Travels in Holland, etc.

One who has not these previous Lights is very often an utter Stranger to what he reads.
Addison, Spectator, No. 291.

But who shall comfort the living,
The light of whose homes is gone?
Bryant, Autumn Walk.

7. Means of communicating light or fire; something to kindle with: as, to give one a light for a cigar.—8. A lighthouse: as, Fastnet light; Sandy Hook light.

From Kingston Head and from Montauk light
The spectre kindles and burns in sight.
Whittier, The Palatine.

9. That which admits light; a medium or an opening for the entrance of light, as a window, or a pane or compartment of a window: as, a window consisting of three lights; a light of glass.

The lights, doors, and stairs [were] rather directed to the use of the guest than to the eye of the artificer.
Sir P. Sidney, Arcadia, i.

10. The manner in which the light strikes upon an object or a picture; also, an illuminated part of an object or picture; the part which lies opposite the point or place from which the light comes or is supposed to come.

Never admit two equal lights in the same picture.
Dryden, tr. of Dufresnoy's Art of Painting.

11. The point of view from which, or position in which, anything is looked at or considered; the side or features to which attention is paid; aspect.

Consider then, and judge me in this light;
I told you, when I went, I could not write.
Pope, Imit. of Horace, II. ii. 27.

12. In law, the right to have one's windows unobscured by obstructions on the part of one's neighbors.—13. In painting, a small patch or surface of very light color, as white, used in a design, to diversify the effect of the darker colors.—14†. A torch-bearer; a link-boy.

I went to my lodgings, led by a light, whom I put into the discourse of his private economy, and made him give me an account of the charge, hazard, profit, and loss of a family that depended upon a link.
Steele, Spectator, No. 454.

Aberration of light. See aberration, 5.—Accidental, albo-carbon light. See the qualifying words.—Ancient light, in law, a window receiving light over the land of another than the owner of the house benefited, which, by reason of uninterrupted enjoyment for twenty years or more, has become established as an easement, imposing a servitude of light and air over such adjoining land. The English law, followed in a few of the United States, establishes such a right by lapse of time, unless the enjoyment was under written permission; but it does not include a right of prospect. In other States such a right cannot be claimed by prescription, but only by contract.—Arc-light, light due to the intense incandescence of two carbon rods, nearly in contact, between which an electric arc is maintained.—Beale light, a form of Argand burner in which combustion is promoted by a current of air under pressure.—Bengal light, a vivid and sustained blue light used in signaling and displays of fireworks. It is composed of antimony 1 part, sulphur and mealed powder each 2 parts, and nitrate of soda 8 parts, pulverized, mixed, and pressed into shallow vessels. E. H. Knight.—Between the lights, between daylight and artificial illumination; in the twilight: as, "I was still busy between the lights," Dickens, Bleak House, xvii.

Between two lights, between two days; under cover of darkness; in the night: as, he was forced to leave town between two lights. [Colloq.]—Blue light, a composition which burns with a blue flame, used as a night-signal in ships or for military purposes, etc. The color is due to the admixture of ammoniacal copper-sulphate in the composition.—Boccius light, a form of gas-burner in which a pair of concentric metallic cylinders are placed over the flame inside an ordinary lamp-chimney, to reduce the combustion and give a more brilliant light.—Bude light, an exceedingly brilliant light, produced by directing a current of oxygen gas into the interior of the flame of an Argand lamp or gas-burner. See Bude burner, under burner.—Calcium light. See calcium.—Catadioptric light, a light used in lighthouses, in which are combined the catoptric and dioptric systems.—Catoptric light, a light in which the beam is produced by reflection. See catoptric.—Chatham light, a kind of flash-light produced by blowing a mixture of pulverized resin and magnesium-dust through the flame of a spirit-lamp. It is used for military signals.—Children of Light. See child.—Cockshut†, colored, converging light. See the qualifying words.—Collection of light. See collection.—Common light. Same as white light (a).—Decomposition of light. See decomposition.—Deviation of a ray of light. See deviation.—Diffusion of light, the irregular reflection or scattering of the light from the surface of a body not absolutely smooth. The light is called diffused light.—Dioptric light, a light in which the beam is produced by refraction, not by reflection. See dioptric system, under dioptric.—Divine light, that illumination which proceeds directly from God.—Double lights, in lighthouses, lights on different levels, either in one tower at different heights or in two towers.—Drummond light. Same as calcium light.—Electric light. See electric.—Equation of light. See light-equation.—Fixed light, in lighthouses, a light which is maintained steadily without change, in contrast with revolving or intermittent lights.—Floating light, a light displayed at the masthead of a vessel or light-ship anchored near a reef, shoal, or channel where there is no suitable foundation for a lighthouse.—Friends of Light. See Free Congregations, under congregation.—Ground lights, a row of lights used on a stage to light the base of a scene.—High light, in art, any part or point in a picture upon which the light falls or glances in full force and without shadow: as, the high lights in a portrait, or in a study of still life.—Holme's light, a device used, in practice, to show the movements of a locomotive torpedo. It is an arrow-headed canister pierced with several holes and filled with phosphide of calcium. The contact of water with this chemical produces bubbles which burst into flame on reaching the surface and also emit dense smoke having the odor of garlic.—Homogeneous light, light which is all of one color, or, more strictly, of one wave-length; monochromatic light.—Incandescent light. See electric light, under electric.—Increate light. Same as divine light.—Inner or inward light, spiritual illumination; knowledge divinely imparted; specifically, as used by the Society of Friends, the light of Christ in the soul.—Intermittent light, in lighthouses, a light which appears suddenly, remains constant for a short interval, and then suddenly disappears, the light being alternately displayed and hidden by the motion of circular shades in front of the reflectors.—Law of absorption of light. See law[1].—Leading lights, lights in different towers to indicate to seamen a certain course, channel, or danger. E. H. Knight.—Lead lights. See lead[2].—Light-elasticity, the elasticity of the luminiferous ether, upon which the velocity of light-propagation depends. This is ordinarily conceived of as being modified by the nature of the particular ponderable medium under consideration. Thus, the ratio of the velocities of light in water and glass (or the inverse ratio of their refractive indices) expresses also the ratio of the light-elasticity in each case. In crystallized media the light-elasticity may differ in different directions in the same substance, and its character determines whether these media are isotropic, uniaxial, or biaxial. See refraction, and axes of light-elasticity (under axis[1]).—Light of nature. (a) Intellectual perception; that faculty of the mind by which certain truths appear evident, or clear and distinct, independently of experience. The phrase was used by Descartes in this sense. Leibnitz remarks that there are certain innate truths, called instincts, which do not belong to the light of nature, because they are obscure. (b) In theol., the capacity which belongs to man of discovering some of the truths of religion without the aid of revelation: opposed to divine light.—Light-registering apparatus, an automatic device for recording the amount of light falling upon any particular spot during small fixed intervals. E. H. Knight.—Magnetization of light. See magnetization.—Monochromatic light. See monochromatic.—New Lights, a name sometimes given to persons who have seceded from a church, or formed a new religious connection, on account of some new view of doctrine or duty. See Campbellite, 1.—Northern lights, the aurora borealis.—Oxycalcium light. Same as calcium light.—Oxyhydrogen light. See oxyhydrogen.—Red light, a light colored by strontium.—Revolving light, in lighthouses, a light alternately displayed and concealed by the revolution of a frame with three or more sides fitted with large reflectors so arranged that those on each side have their axes parallel. The light appears, gradually increases to full strength, and gradually disappears as the opaque sides of the frame intervene between it and the observer.—The Lights. (a) The Jewish feast of the Dedication or Encænia. (b) In the Greek Church, the feast of the Epiphany, or manifestation of Christ to the world, especially at his baptism. The name also refers to the illumination (baptism) of believers, and to the great number of lights carried at the ceremony of the benediction of the waters (see water) on the day of that feast, symbolical of illumination and baptism.—To bring to light. See bring.—To see the light, to come into view; be made public; be brought forth.—To stand in one's own light, to be the means of preventing one's own advantage, or of frustrating one's own purposes.—White light. (a) In physics, the light which comes directly from the sun, and which has not been decomposed as by refraction in passing through a transparent prism. (b) A light produced artificially, and used for signals, etc. (See also arc-light, flash-light.) = Syn. 1 and 2. Flash, Blaze, etc. See flame, n.

light[2] (lit), a. and n. [< ME. light, licht, ligt, lyht, liht, < AS. leóht, rarely lēht, līht (orig. līht), = OS. līht* (in comp. līhtlīk, light) = OFries. līcht = D. ligt = MLG. līcht = OHG. lihti, līht, MHG. līhte, G. leicht = Icel. lēttr = Sw. lätt = Dan. let = Goth. leihts, light; perhaps orig. linht*, lenht* (with orig. pp. suffix -t), akin to Lith. lengwus = L. lēvis, earlier lēvis, orig. lenhvis* (?) = Gr. ἐλαχύς = Skt. raghu, light. lighten[3]† (lī'tn), v. i. [< light[3] + -en[1] (3). Cf. alighten[3].] To descend; settle down; light.

O Lord, let thy mercy lighten upon us, as our trust is in thee. Book of Common Prayer (Ch. of England), Te Deum.

lightening[1] (lī'ning), n. [Verbal n. of lighten[1], v.: see lightning[1].] 1. A becoming light; the break of day. See lightning[1], 1.—2†. See lightning[1], 2.—3. A brightening up, as of the mind or spirit. [Rare.]

You gave me good warning to take heed and beware, lest after a lightening I catch a foil.
J. Careless, in Bradford's Works (Parker Soc., 1853), II. 356.

4. In metal., the sudden brightening of the color of silver during cupellation when the metal reaches the point of greatest purity.

lightening[2] (lī'ning), n. [Verbal n. of lighten[2], v.] The act or fact of becoming or making light or less heavy.

light-equation (lī't'ē-kwā"shọn), n. The correction for the effect on astronomical phenomena, especially eclipses of Jupiter's satellites, of the time required by light to traverse the space between the planet and the earth. This is combined with aberration (which see).

lighter[1] (lī'tėr), n. [= D. lichter = G. leuchter; as light[1], v., + -er[1].] 1. One who or that which lights or illuminates; specifically, a torch or an electric device for lighting candles or gas-jets. A simple form of lighter is a strip of paper rolled into a tapering tube.

Twisting up a piece of waste paper into a lighter.
Wilkie Collins, Hide and Seek, ix.

An electric lighter attached to the gas fixture suddenly flashed brightness over a most curious place.
Weekly American (Waterbury, Conn.), Aug. 27, 1886.

2†. pl. Blinkers for a horse.

Ye'll take the bridle frae his head,
The lighters frae his e'en.
Blancheflour and Jellyflorice (Child's Ballads, IV. 298).

lighter[2] (lī'tėr), n. [= D. ligter; as light[2] + -er[1].] A boat or vessel, commonly an open flat-bottomed barge, but sometimes decked, used in lightening or unloading and also in loading ships, and for receiving and transporting for short distances passengers or goods, or materials of any kind, usually in a harbor.

Some pretty presentation, which we have addressed and conveyed hither in a lighter at the general charge, and landed at the back door. B. Jonson, Masque of Augurs.

The boatmen jump into the water and push the lighters against the stone stairs, while we unload our own baggage.
B. Taylor, Lands of the Saracen, p. 19.

lighter[2] (lī'tėr), v. [< lighter[2], n.] I. trans. To convey or transport in or as in a lighter, as goods or cargo.

And our effects of some three or four tons were lightered ashore by means of the Indian canoes.
The Century, XXX. 739.

II. intrans. To be employed in the business of transporting goods by means of a lighter.

The vicissitudes of business in their respective vocations—lightering, mule-driving, peddling, or bar-keeping, as the case may be.
J. W. Palmer, The New and the Old, p. 207.

lighter[3] (lī'tėr), n. Same as lafter.

lighterage (lī'tėr-āj), n. [< lighter[2] + -age.] 1. The act of unloading cargo into a lighter.—2. The price paid for unloading a ship by means of a lighter, or for conveying goods or merchandise in lighters.

The lighterage, carriage and porters' due.
Report to Lord Burleigh in 1583 (Arber's Eng. Garner, I. 46).

lighterman (lī'tėr-mạn), n.; pl. lightermen (-men). [= D. ligterman; as lighter[2] + man.] A man who manages a lighter; one employed on a lighter.

A poor lighterman, sir, one that hath had the honour sometimes to lay in the king's beer there.
B. Jonson, Masque of Augurs.

lighter-screw (lī'tėr-skrö), n. A screw for the adjustment of the relative distances of the grinding surfaces of a pair of millstones.

lighter-staff (lī'tėr-stȧf), n. In a grain-mill, a lever which supports and controls the adjustable end of the bray-plank or bridgetree, to which it is connected at one end by a stirrup, while its other end receives the lighter-screw or a counterbalance weight. E. H. Knight.

light-fingered (līt'fing"gėrd), a. 1. Light in touch with the fingers, as in playing the piano.—2. Dexterous in touching and taking; thievish; addicted to petty thefts: applied particularly to pickpockets.

Our men contented themselves with looking after their goods (the Tonquinese being very light-finger'd), and left the management of the Boats entirely to the Boats crew.
Dampier, Voyages, II. i. 14.

Great is Apollo with his golden shell,
The gift of Hermes in his infancy,
And great is Hermes' self, light-fingered god.
R. H. Stoddard, Arcadian Idyl.

light-foot (līt'fůt), a. Nimble; light-footed. [Poetical.]

There she alighted from her light-foot beast.
Spenser, F. Q., III. iv. 7.

Light-foot Iris brought it yester-eve.
Tennyson, Œnone.

lightfoot† (līt'fůt), n. Venison. [Old cant.]

"Wife," quoth the miller, "fetch me forth lightfoote, And of his sweetnesse a little we'll taste."
A fair ven'son pastye brought she out presentlye.
The King and the Miller of Mansfield (Child's Ballads, [VIII. 36).

light-footed (līt'fůt"ed), a. Light of foot; stepping or skipping lightly or nimbly, as in running or dancing.

Wood-nymphs mixed with her light-footed Fauns.
Drayton, Polyolbion, xi. 135.

A fairy Prince with joyful eyes,
And lighter-footed than the fox.
Tennyson, The Day-dream (The Arrival).

lightful[1] (līt'fůl), a. [< light[1], n., + -ful.] Full of light; bright. [Rare.]

That glorious lampe
Whose lightfull presence giveth suddaine flight
To . . . sleepe. Marston, Sophonisba, i. 2.

lightful[2]† (līt'fůl), a. [Irreg. < light[2], a., + -ful.] Light; cheerful. [Rare.]

Tho' my heart was lightful and joyous before, yet it is ten times more lightsome and joyous now.
Bunyan, Pilgrim's Progress, ii. 60.

lightfulness (līt'fůl-nes), n. The quality of being lightful, in either sense. [Rare.]

The eternal Intelligence . . . needs no recording of opinions to confirm his knowledge, no more than the sun wants wax to be the fuel of his glorious lightfulness.
Sir P. Sidney, Arcadia, iii.

light-handed (līt'han"ded), a. 1. Having light hands; soft, delicate, or dexterous in touch or manipulation.—2. Having or bringing little in the hands: as, to come home light-handed.—3. Insufficiently supplied with hands or assistants, as a ship or a factory; short-handed.

light-headed (līt'hed"ed), a. 1. Disordered in the head; giddy or dizzy; hence, flighty; delirious.

When Belvidera talks of "lutes, laurels, seas of milk, and ships of amber," she is not mad, but light-headed.
Walpole.

Some doubted and were sore afeard
That she had grown light-headed with her woe.
William Morris, Earthly Paradise, I. 152.

2. Thoughtless; volatile; frivolous.

If the man be graue, his speech and stile is graue: if light-headed, his stile and language also light.
Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 124.

Those often overturn a thick-witted or a light headed man. The Century, XXVI. 369.

light-headedness (līt'hed"ed-nes), n. The state or quality of being light-headed; dizziness; flightiness; wandering; delirium.

So lovely a voice uttering nothing but the incoherent ravings of lightheadedness. Miss Burney, Cecilia, x. 9.

light-hearted (līt'här"ted), a. Having a light heart; free from grief or anxiety; cheerful.

He whistles as he goes, light-hearted wretch, light-heartedly (līt'här"ted-li), adv. In a light-hearted manner; with a light heart.
Cold and yet cheerful. Cowper, Task, iv. 12.

=Syn. Gladsome, joyous.

light-heartedness (līt'här"ted-nes), n. The state of being light-hearted or free from care or grief; cheerfulness; playfulness.

These "gabes," as they are called, are merely frolicsome braggadocio, spoken in lightheartedness, and not intended to convey any serious intention.
Encyc. Brit., XX. 652.

light-heeled (līt'hēld), a. 1. Nimble or lively in walking or running; swift of foot.

The villain is much lighter-heel'd than I.
Shak., M. N. D., iii. 2. 416.

2†. Of loose character.

She is sure a light heeld wench.
The Bride, 1640, sig. G. (Halliwell.) light-horse (līt'hôrs), n. Light-armed cavalry.

One hundred Men at Arms, and Six hundred Light-Horse, led by the Earl of Warwick.
Baker, Chronicles, p. 303.

Ludovic comes forth with his army, and with his light horse beginnes the charge. Coryat, Crudities, I. 110.

light-horseman (līt'hôrs"mạn), n. A light-armed cavalry soldier.

lighthouse (līt'hous), n. A tower or other structure exhibiting a light or lights, for the purpose of indicating the presence of rocks, shoals, or other dangers to navigation, or for the guidance of mariners when approaching or sailing along a coast, entering a harbor, or navigating a river or other body of water. Lighthouses were formerly illuminated simply by means of a wood- or coal-fire, and afterward by candles and lamps. Coal-fires continued in general use till after the middle of the eighteenth century, and in some places many years later. The lamps in the lanterns of lighthouses in the United States are, for the most part, mechanical oil-lamps fitted with Argand burners, and employed with simple reflectors or with some form of the Fresnel lantern. Electric lighting has been tried in some lighthouses, but found objectionable on account of the depth of shadow produced by it in their immediate vicinity. In order that lighthouses may be distinguished by night, their lights vary in power, color, number, position, etc. As regards power, they are classified as of the first, second, third, or fourth order: the first two being employed in coast-lighthouses, and the others as sound-, harbor-, or river-lights. They may be fixed, revolving, flashing, or intermittent, in either single or combined colors: thus, a light may show two white flashes and a red flash followed by an interval of darkness, or the red and white flashes may alternate. These changes are obtained by various contrivances for causing the lenses, reflectors, or screens to travel in a circular path around the lamp, or to pass before it. Some lighthouses are painted with bands of color, or bear some other distinguishing mark, that their identity may be easily established in the daytime.

They saw . . .
The lamp-fire glimmer down from the tall lighthouse tower.
Whittier, Tent on the Beach.

Bureau of Lighthouses, an office of the Department of Commerce of the U. S. government, having supervision of the lighthouse system of the United States. The Lighthouse Service is charged with the establishment and maintenance of lighthouses, light-vessels, buoys, etc., on the coasts and rivers of the United States, and with the direction of the offices, depots, and tenders required.

lighthouseman (līt'hous-mạn), n.; pl. lighthousemen (-men). A keeper of a lighthouse.

The manners and ways of coastguardsmen, lighthousemen, and other amphibious creatures.
Athenæum, No. 3200, p. 257.

lighting[1] (lī'ting), n. [< ME. lihtinge, ligtinge, < AS. lihtung, lȳhtung, lighting, lȳhting, leóhting, verbal n. of līhtan, leóhtan, light, shine, illuminate: see light[1], v.] 1. The act of making light or becoming light. See light[1], v. t.—2. The act of igniting or illuminating: as, the lighting of a fire; street-lighting.

Electric lighting and working of railways and tramways are upon a commercial and useful stage.
Nature, XXXVII. 303.

3. In metal-working, same as annealing.

lighting[2] (lī'ting), n. [< ME. lihting,* < AS. līhting, a making or becoming light, alleviation, verbal n. of līhtan, lēhtan, make light, leóhtian, become light: see light[2], v.] The act of making or becoming light or less heavy. See light[2], v. t.

lighting[3] (lī'ting), n. [Verbal n. of light[3], v.] The act of alighting, as from flight.

Ere long it was noticed that in the process of lighting [of various birds] there was, very commonly, a conspicuous flashing-out of white on wings or tail, or on both.
Amer. Naturalist, XXII. 202.

light-iron (līt'ī″ėrn), n. An iron stand serving to hold a candle or a lamp: an early utensil, kept in use in some localities until lately.

light-keeper (līt'kē″pėr), n. The person who has charge of the light in a lighthouse or lightship.

I reached Dublin on the evening of the 5th, and, without giving the lightkeeper any warning of my visit, went straight to the lighthouse.
Nineteenth Century, XXIV. 67.

light-legged (līt'leg″ed or -legd), a. Nimble; swift of foot.

Lightlegged Pas has got the middle space.
Sir P. Sidney.

lightless (līt'les), a. [< ME. lightless, < AS. leóhtleás, without light, < leóht, light, + -leás, = E. -less: see light[1], n., and -less.] Without light; giving no light; dark.

Upon the chaungynge of the moone, Whan lightlees is the world.
Chaucer, Troilus, iii. 550.

The lightless fire,
Which, in pale embers hid, lurks to aspire.
Shak., Lucrece, l. 4.

These large lightless waves of the sun . . . are frequently called obscure or invisible heat.
Tyndall, Forms of Water, p. 13.

lightly (līt'li), adv. [< ME. lightly, ligtliche, lihtliche, < AS. leóhtlīce (= OFries. lichtelik = D. ligtelijk = MLG. lichteliken = OHG. līhtlīhho, MHG. līhtelīche, G. leichtlich), in a light manner, < leóhtlīc, a., light, < leóht, light, + -līc = E. -ly[1].] 1. Not heavily; with little weight or force; not oppressively or severely: as, to tread lightly; to punish lightly; his cares sit lightly upon him.

When at the first he lightly afflicted the land of Zebulun. Isa. ix. 1.

That the King's hands may not be rudely tied by others, he must consent to tie them lightly himself.
Macaulay, Sir William Temple.

2. With little effort; without difficulty; easily.

And verily you shall not lightly find in all the city any thing that is more commodious . . . [than] these gardens.
Sir T. More, Utopia (tr. by Robinson), ii. 2.

They come lightly by the malt, and need not spare it.
Scott.

And, pushing his black craft among them all,
He lightly scatter'd theirs.
Tennyson, Merlin and Vivien.

3. Without good reason; upon slight grounds; readily.

My wife is in a wayward mood to-day,
And will not lightly trust the messenger.
Shak., C. of E., iv. 4. 6.

4. With little regard; slightingly; indifferently.

Then, and long afterwards, colonial property was lightly esteemed. Bancroft, Hist. U. S., II. 362.

5. Parsimoniously; niggardly.

They are but lightly rewarded.
Shak., L. L. L., i. 2. 157.

6. Without deliberation; heedlessly; inconsiderately.

Matrimony . . . is not by any to be entered into unadvisedly or lightly.
Book of Common Prayer, Solemnization of Matrimony.

They choose the Tranibores yearly, but lightly they change them not.
Sir T. More, Utopia (tr. by Robinson), ii. 3.

7. In a light-hearted manner; cheerfully; cheerily; airily; with levity.

I'll lightly front each high emprize
For one kind glance of those bright eyes.
Scott, L. of the L., i. 24.

The seventy years borne lightly as the pine Wears its first down of snow in green disdain.
Lowell, Bankside, iii.

In the Spring a young man's fancy lightly turns to thoughts of love. Tennyson, Locksley Hall.

Lightly he answered her, and smile or kiss
Would change their talk to idle words of bliss.
William Morris, Earthly Paradise, II. 274.

8. With agility; nimbly; quickly.

It booted not to thinke that throw to beare,
But grownd he gave, and lightly lept areare.
Spenser, F. Q., II. xi. 36.

Watch what thou seest, and lightly bring me word.
Tennyson, Morte d'Arthur.

9†. Commonly; usually.

The folk of that Contree ben lyghtly dronken, and han but litille appetyt to mete. Mandeville, Travels, p. 157.

Short summers lightly have a forward spring.
Shak., Rich. III., iii. 1. 94.

The great thieves of a state are lightly the officers of the crown. B. Jonson, Discoveries.

lightly (līt'li), v. t.; pret. and pp. lightlied, ppr. lightlying. [< lightly, adv.] To make light of; slight; disparage. Also lichtly. [Scotch.]

I drew me near to my stairhead,
And I heard my ain lord lichtly me.
Lord Jamie Douglas (Child's Ballads, IV. 138).

His House, whose front vpreard so high and eaven,
That lightlied earth, and seemed to threat the heaven.
T. Hudson, tr. of Du Bartas's Judith, i. 78.

light-maker (līt'mā″kėr), n. That which yields light, as a heavenly body. Wyclif.

lightman† (līt'man), n. A linkman.

The stars might go to sleep a-nights,
And leave their work to those new lights;
The midwife moon might mind her calling,
And noisy lightman leave his bawling.
Tom Brown, Works, IV. 255.

light-minded (līt'mīn″ded), a. Of light mind; unsteady; volatile; capricious.

He that is hasty to give credit is lightminded.
Ecclus. xix. 4.

light-mindedness (līt'mīn″ded-nes), n. The quality of being light-minded; inconsiderateness; capriciousness.

The singular light-mindedness with which a king of France bestows upon a Lombard adventurer a county in the very heart and centre of his own kingdom.
Fortnightly Rev., N. S., XLI. 411.

light-moderator (līt'mod″ė-rā-tọr), n. An attachment for a microscope to secure a white light on an object when examined by artificial light. It consists of two disks of colored glass, one blue, the other red, mounted on a stand for convenience in adjustment.

light-money (līt'mun″i), n. Money levied for the maintenance of lighthouses; light-dues.

Apart from the Sound dues themselves, there were charges of light money, pass-money, etc., which caused a delay at Elsinore. E. Schuyler, Amer. Diplomacy, p. 308.

lightness[1] (līt'nes), n. [< ME. lightnes,* < AS. lihtness (= OHG. liuhtnissa), lightness, brightness, < leóht, līht, light: see light[1], a., and -ness.] The state or quality of being light or bright.

lightness[2] (līt'nes), n. [< ME. lightnesse, ligtnesse (= MLG. lichtnisse); < light[2], a., + -ness.] 1. The state or quality of being light in weight; lack of heaviness or gravity: as, the lightness of a burden; the lightness of cork or of hydrogen.

Its [cork's] specific lightness, combined with strength and durability, recommends it above all other substances for forming life-buoys, belts, and jackets.
Encyc. Brit., VI. 402.

2. In cookery, sponginess; the state of being well raised; freedom from sogginess.

This matter of lightness is the distinctive line between savage and civilized bread.
H. B. Stowe, House and Home Papers, x.

3. Freedom from heaviness or clumsiness in act or execution; dexterity; nimbleness; agility: as, lightness of touch in painting or music; lightness of foot in running or dancing.

Somtyme, to shewe his lightnesse and maistrye,
He pleyeth Herodes upon a scaffold hye.
Chaucer, Miller's Tale, l. 197.

He [Rab] . . . trotted up stairs with much lightness, and went straight to that door.
Dr. J. Brown, Rab and his Friends.

4. Inconstancy; unsteadiness; fickleness.

Commanded always by the greater gust:
Such is the lightness of you common men.
Shak., 3 Hen. VI., iii. 1. 89.

5†. Levity; wantonness; unchastity.

Can it be
That modesty may more betray our sense
Than woman's lightness?
Shak., M. for M., ii. 2. 169.

Ready to sprinkle our unspotted fame
With note of lightness?
B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, v. 3.

6†. Light-headedness.

And he, repulsed—a short tale to make—
Fell into a sadness, then into a fast,
Thence to a watch, thence into a weakness,
Thence to a lightness. Shak., Hamlet, ii. 2. 149.

=Syn. 3. Briskness, sprightliness, ease, facility, swiftness. —4. Volatility, Frivolity, etc. (see levity), instability, giddiness, airiness.

★lightning[1] (līt'ning), n. [Also in the first sense lightening, after the present form of the verb, but according to the orig. type lightning; < ME. lightning, liztnyng,* illumination, verbal n. of lightnen, liztnen, illuminate: see lighten[1]. Cf. lighting[1].] 1. A becoming light or bright; a flashing of light: in this sense usually lightening.

Be the liztnynge of a sterre,
To Jhesu alle thre presentis thei brougte.
Hymns to Virgin, etc. (E. E. T. S.), p. 45.

The great brand
Made lightnings in the splendour of the moon.
Tennyson, Passing of Arthur.

2. A sudden illumination of the heavens caused by the discharge of atmospheric electricity from one cloud to another or from a cloud to the earth; a flash of light due to electricity in the atmosphere. The lightning-flash may have a length of a mile or even more, and commonly takes an irregular direction (forked lightning), the path of the electrical discharge being that of the least resistance. In sheet-lightning no definite spark is seen, but a general illumination over a broad surface; it is commonly due to the reflection by the clouds of the discharge proper. This is called summer lightning or heat-lightning when the storm is at a great distance, so that only the broad flashes of light are seen, usually near the horizon, and unaccompanied by thunder. Sheet-lightning is also described as occurring when there is neither storm nor cloud; if such cases be authentic, it is probably due to a weak electrical discharge in the air at a considerable altitude. In globular lightning or globe-lightning, which is a rare phenomenon, the discharge takes a spherical form (fire-ball), sometimes apparently a foot or more in diameter, and lasts for a number of seconds, descending slowly to the earth, and often exploding with a loud report. The discharge of frictional electricity in the laboratory gives phenomena similar in kind to those of lightning, and the "brimstone odor" which sometimes accompanies the latter (due to the formation of ozone) is often observed. Dark lightning is the name given to the dark lines shown on developing a photographic plate after exposure to several flashes some of which show as bright lines while others appear as dark flashes.

And when the cross blue lightning seem'd to open
The breast of heaven, I did present myself
Even in the aim and very flash of it.
Shak., J. C., i. 3. 50.

Mr. A. S. Barker photographed outside objects on an excessively dark night by the light of lightning alone. The wind was strong, and the interesting feature was brought out, when the plates were developed, that the foliage had perceptibly moved during the exposure. The flash must therefore have a measurable interval, probably decidedly longer than the thousandth or ten thousandth of a second, as got by Wheatstone. Amer. Meteor. Jour., III. 101.

Jersey lightning, apple-jack or peach-brandy (as made, or alleged to be made, in New Jersey); very crude and bad whisky. [Slang, U. S.]

lightning[2]†, n. [Same as lightening[2].] A becoming light or less heavy; an exhilaration of the spirits. [Perhaps really the same as lightening[1], the senses being easily interchanged.]

How oft when men are at the point of death
Have they been merry! which their keepers call A lightning before death. Shak., R. and J., v. 3. 90.

lightning-arrester (līt'ning-a-res″tėr), n. An apparatus used for protecting telegraph or telephone lines, offices, instruments, and operators from lightning-discharges. It usually consists of two wires or plates placed in close proximity, one of them connected to an earth-plate and the other to the line. The opposed surfaces of the plates are sometimes covered with sharp corrugations in directions at right angles to each other, and sometimes filled with sharp points which face each other and increase the power of the instrument.

lightning-bug (līt'ning-bug), n. A firefly or phosphorescent beetle of the family Lampyridæ, related to the European glow-worms. Two common species are Pyractomena angulata and P. borealis. The genera Phengodes, Zarhipis, Microphotus, and Pleotomus have more or less wingless, degraded, larviform females, which are luminous in abdominal patches. The males of the same genera are winged, and resemble the common lightning-bugs, giving a more or less intense flash-light. Another lightning-bug of the eastern United States is Photuris pennsylvanica, about half an inch long, of a yellowish color with a few ill-defined lines of black or brown; both sexes have wings and long elytra, and the luminous larva has a brush-like anal leg. A third species, common in parts of the Mississippi valley, is Photinus pyralis, which has blackish-brown elytra margined with pale yellow, and a yellow prothorax with a central black spot. The two last-named belong to the subfamily Lampyrinæ.

Lightning-bug, or Firefly (Photuris pennsylvanica). a, larva (line shows natural size); b, leg of larva, magnified; c, beetle.

lightning-conductor (līt'ning-kọn-duk″tọr), n. Same as lightning-rod.

lightning-discharger (līt'ning-dis-chär″jėr), n. Same as lightning-arrester.

lightning-print (līt'ning-print), n. A branched or tree-like marking sometimes found on the skin of men and animals and on clothing struck by lightning, or in the neighborhood of the stroke, and popularly supposed to be an impression of the images of surrounding objects. That this is the case is highly improbable, and the few well-authenticated instances yet remain to be accounted for.

lightning-proof (līt'ning-prōf), a. Safe or protected from lightning.

lightning-protector (līt'ning-prō-tek″tọr), n. Same as lightning-arrester.

lightning-rod (līt'ning-rod), n. A pointed, insulated metallic rod erected to protect a building or a vessel from lightning; a lightning-conductor. Lightning-rods are attached to buildings and other structures for two purposes: (1) to prevent as far as possible sudden discharges of electricity from clouds to earth through or in the neighborhood of the building; (2) to form a line of least resistance for any such discharge, should it take place, and thus prevent damage to the building. In order that a lightning-rod may be efficient for the first purpose, it is provided with one or more (preferably several) sharp points at its upper end, with the view of gradually discharging the electricity of the surrounding atmosphere to earth. (See power of points, under point.) With regard to the most efficient form for a lightning-rod to fulfil the second purpose for which lightning-rods are erected, there have been great differences of opinion. Recent developments of electrical theory and experiment indicate that the form of the conductor is the most important element, the particular kind of metal being of comparatively little account. The conductor should be in the form of a ribbon or a thin tube, or consist of a number of separate thin wires not spun together to form a rope. The object is to obtain a conductor having small self-induction, which is the main impediment to a sudden rush of electricity. Care is also taken that the rod or conductor be well connected to earth, either through wet soil or through a network of water-mains.

light-o'-love† (līt'ọ-luv″), n. [From the phrase light of love, i. e. trifling or capricious in love.] 1. A light, capricious woman; a wanton coquette.

So, my quean, you and I must part sooner than perhaps a light-o'-love such as you expected to part with a—likely young fellow. Scott.

2. An old dance-tune.

Clap us into Light-o'-love; that goes without a burden; do you sing it, and I'll dance it. Shak., Much Ado, iii. 4. 44.

light-organ (līt'ôr″gạn), n. In entom., one of the luminous organs of certain insects, situated in the thorax or abdomen.

light-room (līt'röm), n. 1. A small apartment next to the magazine in a ship of war, in which lights for illuminating the magazine are placed behind thick glass windows, to avoid danger from carrying fire among the explosives. Also called light-box.—2. The room at the top of a lighthouse containing the lighting apparatus.

light-ship (līt'ship), n. A vessel riding at anchor and displaying a light for the guidance of mariners, in a position where the bottom or the depth would render a fixed lighthouse-structure impracticable. Light-ships have only such masts and sails as will enable them to reach a port if driven by storms from their anchorage.

light-shot†, n. In Anglo-Saxon times, a contribution of wax payable to the church three times yearly.

lightsome[1] (līt'sum), a. [< light[1], a., + -some.] Emitting or manifesting light; luminous; not dark. [Now chiefly poetical.]

However dark the habitation of the mole to our eyes, yet the animal itself finds the apartment sufficiently lightsome. Goldsmith, Vicar, vi.

If thou would'st view fair Melrose aright,
Go visit it by the pale moonlight;
For the gay beams of lightsome day
Gild but to flout the ruins gray.
Scott, L. of L. M., ii. 1.

lightsome[2] (līt'sum), a. [< light[2], a., + -some.] Having the quality of lightness or buoyancy; light-hearted; cheerful or cheering; gay; airy; sportive.

It suiteth so fitly with that lightsome affection of joy wherein God delighteth when his saints praise him. Hooker, Eccles. Polity.

This news should make you lightsome, bring joy to you. Fletcher, Loyal Subject, ii. 1.

Pope's understanding was no less vigorous . . . than his fancy was lightsome and sprightly. Lowell, Study Windows, p. 410.

lightsomely (līt'sum-li), adv. In a lightsome manner.

lightsomeness[1] (līt'sum-nes), n. The state or quality of being lightsome or of emitting or showing light, luminousness. [Rare.]

It is to our atmosphere that . . . the lightsomeness of our air and the twilight are owing. G. Cheyne, Philos. Prin. of Nat. Religion.

lightsomeness[2] (līt'sum-nes), n. The quality of being lightsome or not heavy.

Drayton could write well, and had an agreeable lightsomeness of fancy. Lowell, Among my Books, 2d ser., p. 138.

light-spirited (līt'spir″i-ted), a. Having a light or cheerful spirit.

light-struck (līt'struk), a. In photog., injured by exposure to actinic light; fogged, as a sensitized plate which has been insufficiently protected from light, or has been used in apparatus leaking light.

light-tight (līt'tīt), a. Impervious to light; excluding the light perfectly. Compare air-tight.

light-vessel (līt'ves″el), n. Same as light-ship.

light-wave (līt'wāv), n. A wave of the luminiferous ether; a wave of light.

light-weight (līt'wāt), n. In sporting, a man or an animal of a certain weight prescribed by the rules, between that of the middle-weight on one hand and that of the feather-weight on the other; hence, any person of light weight or of comparatively little importance.

light-winged (līt'wingd), a. Having light or fleet wings.

Light-wing'd toys
Of feather'd Cupid. Shak., Othello, i. 3. 269.

light-witted (līt'wit″ed), a. Having a feeble or weak intellect.

For lyght-witted or dronken, sure, men will name thee in talke. Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 82.

lightwood[1] (līt'wụd), n. [< light[1], n., + wood[1].] Any wood used in lighting a fire; kindlings; especially, in the southern United States, very resinous pine wood.

They [Indians] make a hearth in the middle of their canoe, raising it within two inches of the edge; upon this they lay their burning lightwood, split into small shivers, each splinter whereof will blaze and burn, end for end, like a candle. Beverley, Virginia, ii.

A negro woman on her knees was hastily lighting a fire on the broad hearth with fat lightwood, and in another moment there was a strong aromatic odor, and the brilliant blaze. Harper's Mag., LXXVIII. 243.

Lightwood knot. (a) A pine knot used for kindlings. (b) The ruddy duck, Erismatura rubida: so called from its toughness. [New Berne, North Carolina.]

lightwood[2] (līt'wụd), n. [< light[1], a., + wood[1].] An inappropriate colonial name for the Australian tree Acacia Melanoxylon, more properly called blackwood.

lightwood[3] (līt'wụd), n. [< light[2], a., + wood[1].] Same as coachwood.

lighty† (lī'ti), a. [ME. lighty, lizti; < light[1], n., + -y[1].] Full of light; illuminated; not obscure.

The lanterne of thi bodi is thine yghe; if thin yghe be symple, al thi body schal be lighty, but if it be weyward, al thi body schal be derkful. Wyclif, Luke xi. 34.

★Ligia (lij'i-ạ), n. [NL., < L. Ligea or Ligia*, < Gr. Λίγεια, a water-nymph, fem. of λιγύς, clear-voiced.] 1. A Fabrician (1798) genus of isopod crustaceans, now referred to the family Oniscidæ. It contains certain sea-slaters, as L. oceanica. Also Lygia.—2. The typical genus of Ligiinæ or Ligiidæ, having a few European and Asiatic species. Duponchel, 1829.

Ligiidæ (li-jī'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Ligia + -idæ.] The Ligiinæ rated as a family. Usually called Ligidæ.

Ligiinæ (lij-i-ī'nē), n. pl. [NL., < Ligia + -inæ.] A subfamily of geometrid moths, typified by the genus Ligia: also named Ligiidæ as a family of Geometrina or Phalænites. It is widely distributed, and contains 7 genera of moths, with the body stout, front prominent, palpi variable, antennæ stout, pectinate in the male, thorax very short, wings entire and unmarked or very slightly speckled, tarsi spinose, and hind tibiæ four-spurred. Usually called Ligiinæ.

lignage† (lī'nāj), n. A Middle English form of lineage.

lignaloes (līn-al'ōz), n. [< ME. ligne aloes, < OF. lignaloes, lignaloe, ligne aloes, lingaloes, lingnaloel, etc., < L. lignum aloes: lignum, wood; aloes, gen. of aloe, aloes: see aloes.] 1. Aloes-wood or agallochum: same as aloes, 2.—2†. A bitter drug: same as aloes, 1.

The woful teres that they leten falle
As bittre weren out of teres kynde,
For peyne, as is ligne aloes [var. lignum aloes] or galle. Chaucer, Troilus, iv. 1137.

lignatile (lig'nạ-til), a. [< NL. lignatilis, < L. lignum, wood. Cf. saxatile.] In bot., growing on wood; lignicole.

lignet†, n. A Middle English form of line[2].

ligneous (lig'nē-us), a. [= Sp. ligneo = Pg. It. ligneo, < L. ligneus, wooden, < lignum, wood: see lignum.] Consisting of or resembling wood; wooden; woody; in bot., having a wood-like texture; woody, as distinguished from herbaceous. Also lignose.

For it may be they [shoots of vines and roots of red roses], being of a more ligneous nature, will incorporate with the tree itself. Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 504.

Ligneous galls, in entom., galls which are hard and inelastic, resembling wood in structure.—Ligneous marble, wood coated or prepared so as to resemble marble.

lignescent (lig-nes'ẹnt), a. [< L. lignum, wood, + -escent.] Tending to be or become ligneous or woody; somewhat woody.

lignicole (lig'ni-kōl), a. [< L. lignum, wood, + colere, dwell.] Same as lignicoline.

lignicoline (lig-nik'ọ-lin), a. [< lignicole + -ine.] Growing upon wood, as some mosses, lichens, and fungi.

ligniferous (lig-nif'ẹ-rus), a. [< L. lignifer, < lignum, wood, + ferre = E. bear[1].] Producing or yielding wood.

lignification (lig″ni-fi-kā'shọn), n. [= F. lignification = Pg. lignificação; as lignify + -ation: see -fication.] The act of lignifying, or the state of being lignified; the process of becoming or of making woody: an alleged conversion of animal matter into wood, not confirmed by scientific investigation.

ligniform (lig'ni-fôrm), a. [= F. ligniforme, < L. lignum, wood, + forma, form.] Like wood; resembling wood.—Ligniform asbestos. See asbestos, 3.

lignify (lig'ni-fī), v. t. and i.; pret. and pp. lignified, ppr. lignifying. [= F. lignifier = Pg. (refl.) lignificar, < L. lignum, wood, + facere, make: see -fy.] To convert into or become wood; make or grow woody.

As internal cells grow older the protoplasm disappears, the cellulose lignifies, and a mere framework of woody cells is left. S. B. Herrick, Wonders of Plant Life, p. 6.

The object is, in brief, what appears to be a lignified serpent formed between the outer bark and the wood—in the cambium layer, in fact—of a native tree known as the Ipé misim. C. V. Riley, Sci. Amer. Supp., Feb. 17, 1883.

Lignified cells, in phys. bot., vegetable cells whose walls have been indurated and more or less thickened by the deposition of lignin, thus being converted into woody fiber.

lignin (lig'nin), n. [< L. lignum, wood, + -in[2].] An organic substance which forms a characteristic part of wood-cells, bast-cells, and all woody fibers, making about one half of the weight of most dry wood. It is superadded to the cellulose of primitive cells by deposition on their walls. It is harder and more elastic than the latter, and absorbs comparatively little water. Its chemical composition is not satisfactorily made out; but it differs from cellulose in being soluble in Schultze's macerating mixture and in potassium hydroxid, but not in cupro-ammonium. It has sometimes been called xylogen. See lignified cells, under lignify.

ligniperdous (lig-ni-pėr'dus), a. [< L. lignum, wood, + perdere, destroy; cf. F. ligniperdes, insects destructive of wood.] Destructive of wood; injurious to timber: specifically applied to various insects, crustaceans, and mollusks.

lignite (lig'nīt), n. [< L. lignum, wood, + -ite[2].] Brown-coal; imperfectly formed coal, or that in which the original form of the wood is so distinctly preserved that it can be easily recognized by the unaided eye. Lignite usually contains considerably more hygroscopic water than does true coal, and is inferior to the latter as a fuel. It contains decidedly more oxygen than true coal, and in its general chemical composition stands midway between coal and wood. It is not limited to any particular geological formation, but is more abundant in the more recent strata. The fossil fuel of the Tertiary is almost all lignite; and in the Tertiary coal, where the vegetable structure may not perhaps be distinctly recognizable, the presence of 10 or 12 per cent. of water is an indication of imperfect conversion of the material into coal. There are, however, Tertiary coals which are nearly as free from water as those of Carboniferous age usually are, as, for instance, some of the coal of the State of Washington, which is of very early Tertiary age.

lignitic (lig-nit'ik), a. [< lignite + -ic.] Consisting of or containing lignite.—Lignitic group. Same as Laramie group (which see, under group[1]).

lignitiferous (lig-ni-tif'ẹ-rus), a. [< lignite + L. ferre = E. bear[1].] In geol., lignite-bearing; containing beds of lignite or brown-coal, as certain strata.

lignitize (lig'ni-tīz), v. t.; pret. and pp. lignitized, ppr. lignitizing. [< lignite + -ize.] To convert into lignite.

A large log two feet in diameter, and completely lignitized, was also seen. Amer. Jour. Sci., 3d ser., XXXI. 203.

lignivorous (lig-niv'ō-rus), a. [= F. lignivore; < L. lignum, wood, + vorare, eat, devour.] Wood-eating; living in and devouring wood, either in a growing tree or in cut timber, as the larvæ of many insects; xylophagous.

lignose (lig'nōs), a. and n. [< L. lignosus, woody: see lignous.] I. a. Same as ligneous.

II. n. An explosive mixture consisting of wood pulp saturated with nitroglycerin. It has fallen into disuse on account of the special danger attending its use.

lignous† (lig'nus), a. [= F. ligneux = Pg. lignoso; < L. lignosus, like wood, < lignum, wood: see lignum.] Ligneous.

Their lignous fibers with continuous length,
Equivalent, compact, a bony strength.
Brooke, Universal Beauty, iii.

lignum (lig'num), n. [L., wood as used for fuel (or rarely for making tables, etc.); prob. 'that which is gathered' (sc. for firewood), < legere, gather: see legend.] Wood, as contrasted with soft tissues or with bark; that part of exogenous plants which comprises the alburnum and the duramen.—Lignum crucis, wood of the cross; eccles., a relic asserted to be a piece of the true cross, or a decorative object containing such a relic.

lignum-aloes (lig'num-al″ōz), n. Same as lign-aloes.

lignum-vitæ (lig'num-vī'tē), n. [NL., < L. lignum, wood, + vitæ, gen. of vita, life: see vital.] 1. The tree Guaiacum officinale, or its hard and durable wood; also, G. sanctum. See Guaiacum. —2. A name of several other trees of which the wood is more or less similar to that of G. officinale. That of Guiana is Ixora ferrea, also called hackia; that of Queensland, Vitex lignum-vitæ of the Verbenaceæ. Acacia falcata and Eucalyptus polyanthemos of New South Wales have likewise received the same name; and so has Melanorrhœa usitata, the black-varnish tree of Burma and Pegu.—Bastard lignum-vitæ, Sarcomphalus laurinus of Jamaica, belonging to the Rhamnaceæ.—Hickory lignum-vitæ, Acacia falcata of New South Wales.—White lignum-vitæ, Polygala diversifolia of the Polygalaceæ, found in Jamaica.

ligroin (lig'rō-in), n. [Formation not obvious.] That part of petroleum which has a boiling-point between 90° and 120° C.

ligula (lig'ū-lạ), n.; pl. ligulæ (-lē). [NL., < L. ligula, a var. of lingula, a little tongue, tongue of a shoe, strap, etc., a spoon, spoonful; dim. of lingua, tongue: see lingual.] 1. In bot., same as ligule.—2. In entom.: (a) A fleshy, membranaceous, or horny anterior part of the labium, attached to the inner surface of the mentum, by which it is sometimes entirely concealed; the terminal or distal one of the three component parts of the labium. In the Hymenoptera it is developed into a long tongue-like organ, split into three parts, of which the outer two are called the paraglossæ and the intermediate one the glossa or lingua. (See cut under Hymenoptera.) Sometimes the term ligula is applied to the united palpigers or palpus-bearing lobes of the labium, which cover and conceal the true ligula. In the Coleoptera the ligula is properly the central division of the labium, between the paraglossæ; but, as the latter are often wanting, the term ligula has come to be used synonymously with labium, where the term labium is used as applying only to the anterior division, excluding mentum and submentum. See cut under mouth-parts. (b) A process on the elytra of certain beetles. See elytral.—3. In anat., a band of white nervous substance bordering the membranous covering of the posterior part of the fourth ventricle of the brain on each side, and extending from the clava to the striæ acusticæ, where it winds around the restiform bodies. Also called tænia ventriculi quarti, ala pontis, and ponticulus.—4. [cap.] A genus of simple cestoid worms, type of the family Ligulidæ, having an unsegmented elongated body with two lateral depressions at the head end, and numerous sets of sexual organs in longitudinal series opening on the median line of the body. These endoparasites inhabit fishes and amphibians, and acquire their matured character in water-birds.

5. [cap.] A genus of mollusks.

ligular (lig'ū-lạr), a. [< ligul(e) + *-ar*3.] Of or pertaining to a ligula; consisting of ligulæ; strap-like.

As occasional appendages . . . must be mentioned stipules, ligular structures, and wood-like outgrowths.
Sachs, Botany (trans.), p. 191.

Ligularia (lig-ū-lā'ri-ạ), n. pl. [NL., < Ligula + -aria.] The Ligulidæ rated as an order of the class Cestoidea.

ligulate (lig'ū-lāt), a. [< ligula + *-ate*1.] 1. In bot.: (a) Strap-shaped: said chiefly of the rays of the Asteraceæ and the corollas of the Cichoriaceæ. (b) Furnished with a ligule; liguled: as, a ligulate grass; having a ligulate corolla: as, a ligulate flower; having ligulate flowers: as, a ligulate head.—2. In zoöl., strap-shaped: specifically applied (a) to the cochlea of vertebrates below mammals, in distinction from helicine or helicoid; (b), in entomology, to parts which are long, narrow, flat, and parallel-sided or nearly so, as the tongue of a butterfly.

ligulated (lig'ū-lā-ted), a. Same as ligulate.

ligule (lig'ūl), n. [< ligula, q. v.] In bot., one of several strap-shaped organs or parts. (a) The blade formed by the corolla in some or all the florets of numerous composite plants. See Ligulifloræ. (b) The membranous appendage which projects from the summit of the leaf-sheath in many grasses. (c) The name is extended by Gray to certain outgrowths, analogous to the last, from the inner side of some petals (for example, those forming the crown in Silene), and also of some filaments (as in the stamens of dodder). (d) In Selaginella and Isoëtes, a peculiar membranous scale or tongue arising from the upper surface of the leaf above the sporangium when that is present. Also ligula.

Ligulidæ (li-gū'li-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Ligula + -idæ.] A family of cestoid worms, typified by the genus Ligula.

Ligulifloræ (lig″ū-li-flō'rē), n. pl. [NL. (A. P. de Candolle, 1838), fem. pl. of liguliflorus: see liguliflorous.] A suborder of Compositæ, constituting the family Cichoriaceæ, in which the florets of the compound flowers are ligulate.

liguliflorous (lig″ū-li-flō'rus), a. [< NL. liguliflorus, < L. ligula, a strap, + flos (flor-), a flower: see ligula and flower.] In bot., having heads composed exclusively of strap-shaped florets.

liguliform (lig'ū-li-fôrm), a. [< L. ligula, a strap, + forma, form.] In entom., strap-shaped; flat and parallel-sided.—Liguliform tongue or lingua, a tongue or lingua which is rather short, flat, and partly free from the labium, and not concealed within the mouth, as in most wasps.

Liguorian (li-gwō'ri-ạn), a. and n. [< Liguori (see def.) + -an.] I. a. Of or pertaining to Alfonso Maria da Liguori (1696–1787), an Italian bishop and saint, founder of the order of Redemptorists.

II. n. Same as Redemptorist.

Liguorist (li-gwō'rist), n. [< Liguori (see Liguorian) + -ist.] Same as Redemptorist.

ligure (lig'ūr), n. [< LL. ligurius, lyncurius, lyncurion, lyncurium, < LGr. λιγύριον, Gr. λυγκούριον (Theophrastus), λιγκούριον, λιγγούριον, λυγγούριον, λαγγούριον, λαγούριον, a sort of gem (Septuagint, tr. Heb. leshem); origin obscure; appar. (in the form λυγκούριον, the other forms being then corruptions), < λύγξ (λυγκ-), a lynx, + οὖρον, urine, an etym. accompanied by, and perhaps originating, the statement that the gem was believed to be lynx's urine petrified. The origin has also been referred to L. Liguria (Gr. Λιγυρία, Λιγυστική) in northern Italy: see Ligurian.] Some precious stone. The word is used in the authorized version of the Old Testament to translate leshem, the Hebrew name of one of the twelve precious stones set in the breastplate of the Jewish high priest (Ex. xxviii. 19, xxxix. 12). The ligure has been identified by some with the jacinth, but by others with the opal or with the tourmalin. It was the seventh precious stone in the high priest's breastplate, representing the tribe of Benjamin.

Ligurian (li-gū'ri-ạn), a. and n. [< L. Liguria (Gr. Λιγυρία, Λιγουρία), < Ligures (Gr. Λίγυες, Λίγυρες), pl. of Ligus (Ligur-) or Ligur, a people in northern Italy. Cf. Ligusticum and lovage, from the same ult. source.] I. a. Pertaining to Liguria, an ancient district on the coast of northwestern Italy and southeastern France, including Nice, the south of Piedmont, Genoa, part of Parma, etc. In the present kingdom of Italy Liguria is a compartimento or department comprising the provinces of Genoa and Porto Maurizio.—Ligurian bee, Apis ligustrica, the Italian honey-bee, indigenous to the south of Europe.—Ligurian Sea, the Gulf of Genoa.

II. n. One of a race inhabiting in ancient times a great part of northwestern Italy, especially in the neighborhood of Genoa, and occupying also much of southeastern Gaul. The Ligurians seem to have been ethnically distinct from Iberians, Gauls, and the main stock of Italian tribes. They were subjugated by the Romans during the second century before the Christian era.

ligurinus (lig-ū-rī'nus), n. [NL., < L. Liguri-nus, Ligurian: see Ligurian.] 1. An old name of the green linnet, or siskin, now commonly called Chrysomitris spinus. Hence—2. [cap.] (a) A genus of fringilline birds having the siskin as its type. Brisson, 1760. (b) Another genus of birds having as type the greenfinch, Loxia chloris of Linnæus. Koch, 1816.—3. [cap.] A genus of spiders. Karsch, 1878.

ligurite (lig'ū-rīt), n. [= F. ligurite, < L. Liguria, name of a district of Italy (see Ligurian), + *-ite*2.] A variety of sphene or titanite, occurring in oblique rhombic prisms of an apple-green color.

ligurrition (lig-u-rish'ọn), n. [< L. liguritio(n-), ligurritio(n-), a fondness for dainties, < ligurire, ligurrire, be fond of dainties, lick, lit. desire to lick, desiderative of lingere, lick: see lick.] The act of licking. [Rare.]

The emptying of wine-glasses and the ligurrition of dishes. F. W. Farrar, Julian Home, p. 94.

Ligusticum (li-gus'ti-kum), n. [NL. (Linnæus), < L. ligusticum, a plant indigenous to Liguria, lovage, < Ligusticus (Gr. Λιγυστικός), Ligurian, < Ligus, Ligur, a Ligurian: see Ligurian. See lovage, ult. < L. ligusticum.] A genus of umbelliferous plants belonging to the tribe Ammineæ, subtribe Seselineæ, distinguished by an ovate or oblong fruit with numerous oil-tubes, and by having seeds with a flat or slightly concave face. There are about 20 species, which are found throughout the whole northern hemisphere. L. Scoticum, the Scotch lovage, is sometimes used as a pot-herb. It is common on northern shores, in America reaching south to Rhode Island. L. Canadense, called nondo and angelico, has a large root with the strong aromatic odor and taste of Angelica.

ligustrin, ligustrine (li-gus'trin), n. [< Ligustrum + *-in*2.] The bitter principle of the privet, Ligustrum vulgare.

Ligustrum (li-gus'trum), n. [NL. (Linnæus), < L. ligustrum, privet.] A genus of plants belonging to the family Oleaceæ and the tribe Oleineæ, distinguished by the induplicate corolla and the terminal panicles of the flowers. There are about 35 species, natives of temperate and tropical Asia, of Europe, and of Australia. They are shrubs with opposite entire smooth leaves. L. vulgare, the common privet, makes neat hedges, bearing clipping well, hence called prim and primprint. The hard white wood, though small, serves some purpose in turnery, the twigs have been used in Belgium in tanning, and the bark yields the bitter principle ligustrin. The Japan privet, L. Japonicum, with broader, evergreen leaves, is a cultivated species, which, like the former, will grow in shade, and may be used for hedges.

Ligyrus (lij'i-rus), n. [NL., < Gr. λιγυρός, pliant, flexible.] A genus of scarabs, of the subfamily Dynastinæ. It is an important group, confined to North and South America and the West Indies. Four species inhabit the United States. L. rugiceps is an occasional enemy of the sugar-cane in Louisiana, and also injures corn. L. bituberculatus is injurious to the sugar-cane in South America. Burmeister, 1847.

lik†, n. A Middle English form of *like*1.

likable (lī'ka-bl), a. [Also likeable; < *like*3, v., + -able.] Of a nature to attract liking; apt to be liked: as, a likable disposition.

Harry was liked because he was likable.
Thackeray, Virginians, xliii.

Ferris, the consul, is meant to be a good fellow in intention, and a likable one in person. N. A. Rev., CXX. 213.

We cannot make much out of his military services, but he [Franklin Pierce] is a likeable man, and has as much of "Young America" as we want.
Marcy, in Curtis's Buchanan, II. 38.

likableness (lī'ka-bl-nes), n. The quality of being likable. Also spelled likeableness.

The agreeableness of a thing depends not merely on its own likeableness, but on the number of people who can be got to like it. Ruskin.

likam†, n. [E. dial. leccam; < ME. likam, licam, likame, licame, lykam, lykame, lycome, lighame, licham, lichame, etc., < AS. līchama, līchoma (= OS. līkhamo = OFries. līkkoma, līcma = D. lichaam, ligchaam = MLG. līcham, līchame = OHG. līhhamo, līchamo, MHG. lichame (also OHG. līhinhamo, līhhinamo, MHG. lichname, G. leichnam) = Icel. līkamr, līkami = Sw. (obs.) lekamen = Dan. legeme), body, lit. 'body-covering,' < līc, body, + hama, a covering: see *like*1 and *hame*1. The compound has a poetical aspect, and doubtless originated in poetical use, like the equiv. Irving, Knickerbocker, p. 293.

Who the rôle of the priest and the soldier unites,
And, praying like Aaron, like Joshua fights!
Whittier, From Perugia.

[This use of like is so nearly prepositional that the word as properly receives the name of preposition in it as do, for example, save, during, except, in their prepositional constructions.]

3. Likely; probably.

I like the work well: ere it be demanded
(As like enough it will), I 'ld have it copied.
Shak., Othello, iii. 4. 190.

4. As it were; so to speak: used after clauses or phrases with a signification similar to that of like suffixed to nouns. See like[2], a., 2. [Colloq. or provincial.]

They say she was out of her mind like for six weeks or more. Thackeray, Vanity Fair, xxxv.

like[2] (līk), conj. [< like[2], adv.; being in part an abbr. of like as.] As; as if. This use is commonly condemned as incorrect, and is generally unacknowledged in dictionaries. It occurs several times in Shakspere, and not unfrequently in modern writers, and is common in colloquial and provincial usage: as, he limped like he had been hurt.

But, like in sickness, did I loathe this food.
Shak., M. N. D., iv. 1. 178.

Through which they put their heads, like the Gauchos do through their cloaks. Darwin, Jour. of a Naturalist, x.

Like for as is never used in New England, but is universal in the South and West. It has on its side the authority of two kings (ego sum rex Romanorum et supra grammaticam), Henry VIII. and Charles I. This were ample, without throwing into the scale the scholar and poet Daniel. Lowell, Introd. to Biglow Papers.

like[2]† (līk), v. t.; pret. and pp. liked, ppr. liking. [= D. lijken = MLG. liken = G. gleichen = Goth. galeikon, liken, compare; from the adj.: see like[2], a. Cf. liken.] To regard or describe as resembling; liken; compare. [Rare, liken being the form in common use.]

And like me to the peasant boys of France.
Shak., 1 Hen. VI., iv. 6. 48.

like[3] (līk), v.; pret. and pp. liked, ppr. liking. [< ME. liken, lyken, < AS. līcian, līcan, please (= OS. līkōn = OFries. līkia = D. lijken, suit, = OHG. līchēn, līchan, MHG. līchen, be like, suit, please, = Icel. líka, please, like, = Goth. leikan, also in comp. galeikan, please); prob. < līc, body, form: see like[1]. The exact transition of sense is not clear; appar. 'be the form' (for a person—governing the dative), i. e. the form or thing desired. It is usually explained as directly from like[2], a., 'to be like or suitable' (for a person); but the adj. does not exist in the earliest tongues (Goth., AS., and OHG.) except in the full form (Goth. galeiks, AS. gelīc, OHG. galīh), from which the verb without the prefix (Goth. leikan, AS. līcian) could hardly be derived, except by assuming an apheresis impossible at this early period.] I. trans. 1†. To please; be pleasing to; be agreeable to; suit; satisfy: used impersonally, and followed by an object, originally dative, of the person.

I wol you tell a litel thing in prose,
That oughte liken you.

2. A favorable or pleasing condition; attractive appearance; comeliness; in general, appearance. [Obsolete or archaic.]

They not onely giue it no maner of grace at all, but rather do disfigure the stuffe and spill the whole workmanship, taking away all bewtie and good liking from it.
Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 115.

Their young ones are in good liking. Job xxxix. 4.

I shall think the worse of fat men, as long as I have an eye to make difference of men's liking.
Shak., M. W. of W., ii. 1. 57.

On liking, on trial or probation; on approval: as, to engage a servant on liking.

Forced with regret to leave her native sphere,
Came but a while on liking here.
Dryden, Threnodia Augustalis, l. 153.

Pray excuse him, madam; . . . he [the waiter] is a very young man on liking, and we don't like him.
Dickens, Our Mutual Friend, iv. 4.

liking† (lī′king), a. [< ME. likinge, lykynge; ppr. of like[3], v.] Pleasing; comely; good-looking.

I wot no lady so likyng. Rom. of the Rose, l. 868.

She, thus in blake, likynge to Troilus,
Over alle thinge, he stod for to beholde.
Chaucer Troilus, i. 309.

likingly†, adv. [< ME. likingly; < liking, a., + -ly[2].] Pleasantly; agreeably.

Myn herte fil doun vnto my too
That was woont sitten ful likingly.
Hymns to Virgin, etc. (E. E. T. S.), p. 91

likingness†, n. [ME. likingnes; < liking, a., + -ness.] Pleasingness.

This hauk of herte in zouthe y-wys
Pursueth euere this feisaunt hen;
This feisaunt hen is likingnes.

lil, a. See lill[3].

lilac (lī′lak), n. and a. [Formerly also lilach, ★lelack; dial. laylock; = F. lilas, < Sp. lilac = Pg. lilaz = Bulg. lilĕk, ljuleka = Bohem. lilak = Pol. lilak = Turk. leilaq, < Ar. līlāk, < Pers. lilaj, lilanj, lilang, lilac (?), prop. the indigo-plant, with alteration of the initial consonant, < nīlah (also nīl = Hind. Ar. nīl), the indigo-plant (nīlak, bluish), < Skt. nīla, dark-blue indigo, nīli, indigo-plant. Cf. anil.] I. n. 1. A shrub of the genus Syringa. See Syringa. The common lilacs are S. vulgaris and S. Persica, with their varieties; they abound, especially the former, as ornamental plants, cultivated for their beauty and fragrance. S. vulgaris is the larger species, having heart-shaped leaves and large thyrsiform clusters of purple flowers—the ordinary purple lilac or Scotch lilac, or, with white flowers, the common white lilac. There is also a blue-flowered variety. S. Persica, the Persian lilac, is a smaller, slender shrub, with looser panicles and pale flowers, blooming later, and also having a white variety. Countess Josika's lilac, S. Josikæa, discovered by the Countess von Josika in Transylvania, is a tall shrub with elliptical-lanceolate wrinkled leaves and bluish-purple scentless flowers. The Himalayan lilac, S. Emodi, is large, with dense panicles, but is not preferred to the common lilac. The lilac was formerly called pipe-tree or pipe-privets, and blue-pipe, on account of the large pith that could easily be bored out of the straight shoots to make pipe-stems. The common lilac has febrifugal properties. (See lilacine.) An oil is extracted from it for use in perfumery. The name lilac has also been given to various plants having some resemblance to the true lilac (see phrases below).

A fountaine of white marble with a lead cesterne, which fountaine is set round with six trees called lelack trees.
Survey of Nonsuch Palace, 1650 (Archæologia, [V. 434). (Davies.)

2. The color of the common lilac-blossom; a pale-purple color. A color-disk composed of one half artificial ultramarine, one sixth Chinese vermilion, and one third white will give a lilac.—African lilac, Melia Azedarach.—Australian lilac, the labiate plants Prostanthera violacea and P. lasianthos.—Charles X. lilac, the variety grandiflora of S. vulgaris, a form with particularly large and fine panicles.—German lilac, an old provincial name for a valerian, probably the red valerian, Centranthus ruber.—Hungarian lilac. Same as Countess Josika's lilac. See def. 1.—Indian lilac, the crape-myrtle, Lagerstrœmia Indica, a beautiful lythraceous shrub from China, bearing large rose-colored flowers. It is hardy in the latitude of Washington, D. C. Sometimes, also, Melia Azedarach.—Victorian lilac. See Hardenbergia.—West Indian lilac, Melia Azedarach.

II. a. Of the light-purple color of the flower of the common lilac.

So Willy and I were wedded; I wore a lilac gown;
And the ringers rang with a will, and he gave the ringers a crown. Tennyson, The Grandmother.

lilaceous (lī-lā′shius), a. [< lilac + -eous (accom. to -aceous).] Of the color of lilac: as, the lilaceous throat of a humming-bird.

lilac-gray (lī′lak-grā), n. A very pale violet color. A color-disk composed of one third artificial ultramarine and two thirds white might be called a lilac-gray.

lilacin (lī′la-sin), n. [< lilac + -in[2].] A glucoside found in the lilac. Same as syringin.

lilac-mildew (lī′lak-mil″dū), n. A fungus, Microsphæra Alni, infesting the leaves of the lilac and forming a whitish coating.

lilac-rust (lī′lak-rust), n. Same as lilac-mildew.

lilacthroat (lī′lak-thrōt), n. A humming-bird of the genus Phœolæma.

lilburn†, n. [Origin obscure; perhaps < lile, contr. of little, + ME. burn, berne, etc., a man: see bern[2].] A heavy, stupid fellow. Halliwell.

Ye are such a calfe, such an asse, such a blocke, lile, a. A dialectal contraction of little. Compare lill[3].
Such a lilburne, such a hoball, such a lobcocke.
Udall, Roister Doister, iii. 3.

Liliaceæ (lil-i-ā′sē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (S. Endlicher), < L. Lilium, q. v., + -aceæ.] A family of monocotyledonous plants, characterized by the regular symmetrical and almost always hexandrous flowers, with a non-glumaceous perianth which is free from the generally three-celled ovary. There are, with one exception, six stamens, one before each division of the perianth. The fruit is a pod or berry containing from few to many seeds having a small embryo in copious albumen. It is a large family dispersed widely round the world, and containing about 215 genera of herbs, shrubs, and trees. Many genera, as Lilium, Tulipa, Hyacinthus, furnish beautiful garden-flowers; some, as Allium, yield esculent bulbs; a few, as Aloe, supply important medicines; and Phormium and a few others yield a textile fiber.

liliaceous (lil-i-ā′shius), a. [< LL. liliaceus, of or belonging to a lily, < L. lilium, a lily: see lily.] Pertaining to or characteristic of lilies, or plants of the family Liliaceæ; lily-like.

liliet, n. An obsolete spelling of lily.

lilied (lil′id), a. [< lily + -ed[2].] 1. Abounding in or embellished with lilies.

By sandy Ladon's lilied banks.
Milton, Arcades, l. 97.

2. Resembling lilies, especially in color.

lilies (lil′iz), n. pl. [Named after Liliuokalani, queen (1891-93) of the Hawaiian Islands.] A term applied to royal spades in auction bridge. See ★bridge[2] (royal auction).

liliform (lil′i-fôrm), a. [< L. lilium, lily, + forma, form.] Having the general form of a lily-flower. [Rare.]

liliformed (lil′i-fôrmd), a. [< liliform + -ed[2].] Same as liliform.

Pateræ of glazed ware with broad flattened rims of tasselled or liliformed patterns found at Canterbury.
Jour. Brit. Archæol. Ass., XII. 73.

Lilium (lil′i-um), n. [NL. (Linnæus), < L. lilium, a lily: see lily.] A genus of plants of the family Liliaceæ, belonging to the tribe Tulipeæ, distinguished from the related genera by the versatile anthers. The flowers are either erect or nodding, and have as a rule a funnel-shaped perianth of six segments, with six stamens and a three-lobed stigma. There are about 45 species, found in the northern temperate regions of the world. They all have scaly bulbs, some of which are edible, as those of L. Martagon, eaten by the Cossacks, and those of L. tigrinum (the tiger-lily) and others in China and Japan. Their chief value, however, lies in the beauty of their flowers. For the species, see lily.

lill[1]† (lil), v. i. and t. [Early mod. E. lylle; a var. of loll.] To loll.

Dreadfull Cerberus
His three deformed heads did lay along, . . .
And lilled forth his bloody flaming tong.
Spenser, F. Q., I. v. 34.

lill[2] (lil), n. [Origin obscure.] 1. One of the holes of a wind-instrument. [Scotch.]—2. A small pin. Draper's Dictionary.

lill[3], lil (lil), a. A dialectal contraction of little. Also lile. [Southern U. S.; in negro use.]

Lille lace. See lace.

Lillibullero, Lilliburlero (lil″i-bu-lē′rō, -bėr-lē′rō), n. Originally, it is said, a watchword of the Irish Roman Catholics in their massacre of the Protestants in 1641; afterward, the name of a song burlesquing the former, said to have been written by Lord Wharton, which was extremely popular in England during and after the revolution of 1688, having the refrain "Lero, lero, lilli burlero," etc.

Lilliputian (lil-i-pū′shan), a. and n. [< Lilliput (see def.) + -ian.] I. a. 1. Pertaining to Lilliput, an imaginary kingdom described in Swift's "Travels of Lemuel Gulliver," or to its people, feigned to be pygmies about six inches high. Hence—2. Of minute size.

II. n. 1. An inhabitant of the imaginary kingdom of Lilliput.—2. A person of diminutive size; a very small dwarf.

lillypilly (lil′i-pil-i), n. [Australian.] A tree of the myrtle family, Syzygium Smithii, found in Australia. It is a slender but sometimes tall tree, with terminal panicles of abundant white flowers, and a very hard and heavy wood. Also called Australian ★myrtle.

lilt (lilt), v. [< ME. lilten, lulten; origin obscure.] I. trans. 1†. To sound.

Loude alarom vpon launde lulted was thenne.
Alliterative Poems (ed. Morris), ii. 1207.

2. To sing or play in snatches, and with easy, tripping grace, as a song or a tune; utter or pour forth with sprightliness, animation, or gaiety.

Our Jenny sings saftly the "Cowden Broom knowes,"
And Rosie lilts swiftly the "Milking the ewes."
Ramsay, Gentle Shepherd, ii. 4.

The Muse shall . . .
Such enchantment lilt to thee
That thou shalt hear the life-blood flow
From farthest stars to grass-blades low.
Lowell, To the Muse.

II. intrans. 1. To sing or play a tune in a sprightly, tripping manner; utter musical sounds flowingly and cheerfully.

Lasses a' lilting before the break of day.
Jane Elliot, Flowers of the Forest.

Mak' haste an turn king David owre,
An' lilt wi' holy clangor.
Burns, The Ordination.

2. To do anything with dexterity or quickness; spring; hop. [Rare.]

Whether the bird flit here or there,
O'er table lilt, or perch on chair.
Wordsworth, The Redbreast.

lilt (lilt), n. [< lilt, v.] 1. A snatch of a cheerful, lively song; a short, smooth-flowing, tripping air or tune.

The blythest lilts that e'er my lugs heard sung.
Ramsay, Poems, II. 390.

Hence—2. Cadence; rhythmic swing or flow.

This faculty of hitting on the precise lilt of thought and measure that shall catch the universal ear and sing themselves in everybody's memory is a rare gift.
Lowell, Study Windows, p. 336.

The lilt and melody of Shelley, joined to precision of thought and outline. Stedman, Poets of America, p. 165.

lilting (lil′ting), a. [< ME. liltyng; ppr. of lilt, v.] Played or sung in an animated manner; giving lively utterance to a lilt or song.

Many a flowte and liltyng horne,
And pipes made of greene corne.
Chaucer, House of Fame, l. 1223.

★lily (lil′i), n. and a. [Formerly also lilly, lillie; < ME. lilie, < AS. lilie, lilige = OS. lilli = D. lelie = OHG. lilja, MHG. lilje (also gilge), G. lilie = Icel. lilja = Dan. lilie = Sw. lilja = F. lis = OSp. lilio, Sp. In the seven native species of the eastern United States the perianth is colored from Lily (Lilium superbum).

1. Upper part of the plant with flowers. 2. Lower part of the plant with bulbs. a, stamen; b, pistil; c, fruit.

yellow to scarlet, with purple or brown spots on the inside. Four are: the wild orange-red lily, L. Philadelphicum, with flowers erect and sepals not recurved, common in sandy soil; the Southern red lily, L. Catesbæi, with solitary erect flowers and recurved sepals; L. Canadense, with several nodding flowers and the sepals recurved, common in the north; and the American Turk's-cap or swamp-lily, L. superbum, with a pyramidal panicle, often with 20 or sometimes even 40 blossoms, found on low grounds at the north. Among the eight species of the Pacific slope are the Washington lily, L. Washingtonianum, often with as many as 20 large and fragrant white flowers, becoming purplish, in a thyrsoid raceme; the panther-lily, L. pardalinum; and Humboldt's lily, L. Humboldtii. Among European species are the Martagon lily, L. Martagon, found wild in Europe and in Siberia, and cultivated from time immemorial, the varieties differing in color; the bulb-bearing lily, L. bulbiferum, with orange-red flowers and bulblets in the axils of the upper leaves, a plant of the region of the Alps, long known to gardeners; and the white or Madonna lily, L. candidum, also called annunciation lily, found wild in the northern Mediterranean countries. Among the fine Asiatic lilies are the lance-leafed or spear-leafed lily, L. speciosum (lancifolium), from Corea and Japan, with white flowers more or less suffused or spotted with pink, and with the lower part of the sepals covered with papillæ; the giant lily, L. giganteum, the largest of the genus, from the Himalayan region; and the tiger-lily, L. tigrinum, so called from its spots, a plant introduced from China and known everywhere. There are many other less-known lilies.

Softur then watur or eny licour,
Or dewz that lith on the lilie flour,
Was Cristes bodi in blod colour.
Holy Rood (E. E. T. S.), p. 139.

Lay her in lillies and in violets.
Spenser, Epithalamion, l. 302.

2. Any one of many plants resembling the lily. —3. The end of a compass which points to the north: so called from being frequently ornamented with a lily or fleur-de-lis.

If we place a needle touched at the foot of tongs or andirons, it will obvert or turn aside its lillie or north point, and conform its cuspis or south extream with the andiron.
Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., ii. 2.

African lily, a plant of the genus Tulbaghia.—Atamasco lily, Atamosco Atamasco. See Zephyranthes, and also Amaryllis.—Belladonna lily. See Amaryllis.—Blackberry lily, Belamcanda Chinensis, of the iris family.—Calla lily. See calla, 3.—Day-lily. See Hemerocallis.—Fleur-de-lis of three lilies. See fleur-de-lis.—Florentine lily. See giglio.—Jacobæa lily, Sprekelia formosissima.—Knight's-star lily. See Hippeastrum.—Lent-lily, the daffodil.—Lilies of France, the fleurs-de-lis which constitute the distinctive armorial bearing of the ancient royal family of France, and figured on the French royal standard.

But Magua is pledged not to sully the lilies of France.
Cooper, Last of Mohicans, xvii.

Lily of the flag, in her., a fleur-de-lis, as borne on the arms of France.—Mexican lily, Hippeastrum reginæ, a plant with beautiful scarlet flowers.—Pond-lily, the spatter-dock, genus Nymphæa; also, the common species of Castalia.—Water-lily, most often Castalia. See water-lily.—Yellow lily, the gold-lily. See def. 1, above.

II. a. Resembling a white lily, especially in purity; pure; unsullied.

By Cupid's dove,
And so thou shalt! and by the lily truth
Of my own breast, thou shalt, beloved youth!
Keats, Endymion, iv.

Elaine, the lily maid of Astolat,
High in her chamber up a tower to the east Guarded the sacred shield of Lancelot.
Tennyson, Lancelot and Elaine.

lily-beetle (lil′i-bē″tl), n. A beetle, Crioceris merdigera.

lily-encrinite (lil′i-en″kri-nīt), n. Same as stone-lily. See encrinite.

lily-faced (lil′i-fāst), a. Pale-faced; affectedly modest or sensitive.

Like a squeamish dame,
Shrink and look lily-faced. J. Baillie.

lily-handed (lil′i-han″ded), a. Having white, delicate hands; hence, effeminate.

No little lily-handed Baronet he,
A great broad-shoulder'd genial Englishman.
Tennyson, Princess, Conclusion.

lily-hyacinth (lil′i-hī″a-sinth), n. A bulbous perennial plant with blue flowers, Scilla Liliohyacinthus.

lily-iron (lil′i-ī″ėrn), n. In whaling, the detachable barbed head of a harpoon. There are two barbs, and between them, a little to one side and at an angle with the axis of the head, is fixed the harpoon-shank, which carries the line. The harpoon, owing to this peculiarity of form, penetrates the whale's body in a curved course, and thus secures a firm hold.

lilyliver (lil′i-liv″ėr), n. A white-livered person; a coward.

I always knew that I was a lily-liver.
Thackeray, Roundabout Papers, xii.

lily-livered (lil′i-liv″ėrd), a. White-livered; cowardly.

Go, prick thy face, and over-red thy fear,
Thou lily-liver'd boy. Shak., Macbeth, v. 3. 17.

lily-of-the-valley (lil′i-ọv-the-val′i), n. See Convallaria.

lily-pad (lil′i-pad), n. The broad leaf of a water-lily, especially as it lies upon the water in its place of growth. [U. S.]

A deer had been down to eat the lily-pads at the foot of the lake the night before.
C. D. Warner, Backlog Studies, p. 145.

lily-star (lil′i-stär), n. Same as feather-star.

lily-white (lil′i-hwīt), a. [< ME. liliwhite, lilie-whyt; < lily + white.] White as a lily. [Poetical.]

Lord Ronald brought a lily-white doe
To give his cousin, Lady Clare.
Tennyson, Lady Clare.

limt, n. An obsolete but historically more correct spelling of limb[1].

Lima (lī′mä), n. [NL. (Bruguières, 1791), appar. so called from the shape of their shells, < L. lima, a file.] 1. A genus of bivalve mollusks, typical of the family Limidæ. The obliquely oval shell gapes anteriorly and has a straight toothless hinge, and the mantle-margin is cirrose L. hians swims easily like a scallop, with a flapping movement of the valves, spins a byssus, and sometimes builds a nest or burrow. The genus was formerly placed with the scallops in Pectinidæ.

Lima squamosa. Lima (Plagiostoma) cardiiformis.

2. [l. c.] A member of this genus.

Lima bark. See bark[2].

Limacea (lī-mā′sē-ä), n. pl. [NL. (Lamarck, 1809), < Limax (Limac-) + -ea.] A family of gastropods, typified by the genus Limax, including all the naked terrestrial gastropods. By later systematists its constituents have been distributed among the families Limacidæ, Arionidæ, Vitrinidæ, Testacellidæ, and Onchidiidæ.

limacel, limacelle (lim-a-sel′), n. [< F. limacelle, dim., < NL. Limax (Limac-), q. v.] The small internal shell of the genus Limax. It has a subquadrangular form, and has no spire, but a marginal nucleus near the posterior end.

limaceous (lī-mā′shius), a. [< L. limax (limac-), a snail, slug, + -cous.] Like a slug; of or relating to the Limacidæ.

Limaces (lī-mā′sēz), n. pl. [NL., plural of Limax.] Same as Limacea. Férussac, 1819.

limacian (lī-mā′shian), n. [< L. limax (limac-), a snail, slug, + -ian.] A limacid; a slug, or some related pulmobranchiate.

limacid (lim′a-sid), n. A gastropod of the family Limacidæ; a slug.

Limacidæ (lī-mas′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Limax (Limac-) + -idæ.] A family of land-snails or terrestrial pulmonate gastropods, typified by the genus Limax, accepted with various limitations, sometimes merged in Helicidæ; the slugs. In a strict sense now current, the Limacidæ are those land-gastropods which have a naked body, the mantle being small, narrow, anterior, and shield-like; the shell reduced to a rudiment and concealed under the mantle; the jaw ribless; and the teeth of three kinds — a central tricuspid, laterals of same height as the central and bicuspid or tricuspid, and marginals differing from the laterals and aculeate, unicuspid, or bicuspid. Wider limits and vaguer characters were assigned to the Limacidæ by older authors. The species are of nearly world wide distribution, but most numerous in temperate parts of the northern hemisphere. The slugs of gardens and damp places are familiar examples.

Limax sowerbyi, crawling and at rest.

limaciform (lī-mas′i-fôrm), a. [< L. limax (limac-), a snail, slug, + forma, form.] Resembling a slug; limaceous. Specifically applied in entomology to certain ovate herbivorous larvæ with short or obsolete legs, and having the body covered with a kind of slime, as those of certain Tenthredinidæ.

Limacina[1] (lī-ma-sī′nä), n. [NL., < L. limax (limac-), a snail, + -ina[1].] A genus of pteropods, typical of the family Limacinidæ. L. borealis is one of the animals which form brit or whale-food. Cuvier, 1817.

Limacina antarctica.

Limacina[2] (lī-ma-sī′nä), n. pl. [NL., < Limax (Limac-) + -ina[2].] 1. Same as Limacea. Wiegmann, 1832; Macgillivray, 1843. — 2. A subfamily of Helicidæ, restricted to the genus Limax: same as Limacinæ. J. E. Gray, 1840.

Limacinæ (lī-ma-sī′nē), n. pl. [NL., < Limax (Limac-) + -inæ.] 1. A subfamily of land-snails referred to the family Helicidæ, typified by the genus Limax, and variously limited. It is nearly or quite the same as Limacidæ. — 2. A family of pteropods containing the genera Limacina and Atlanta. Férussac, 1821.

limacine (lim′a-sin), a. and n. I. a. Pertaining to the Limacinæ or Limacidæ, or having their characters; limaciform; limaceous.

II. n. A slug of the subfamily Limacinæ or family Limacidæ.

Limacinea (lī-ma-sin′ē-ä), n. pl. [NL.] 1. In De Blainville's classification (1825), the third family of his Pulmobranchiata, distinguished from Auriculacea and Limnacea, and containing the genera Succinea, Bulimus, Achatina, Clausilia, Pupa, Helix, Testacella, Parmacella, Limacella, Limax, Onchidium, etc. It is thus an enormous group, equivalent to the suborder Geophila or Stylommatophora, now divided into many modern families, and no longer in use.

2. Same as Limacea. Reeve, 1841.

limacinian (lī-ma-sin′i-an), n. [< limacine + -ian.] A slug or slug-like animal; any limacine.

limacinid (lī-mas′i-nid), n. A pteropod of the family Limacinidæ.

Limacinidæ (lī-ma-sin′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Limacina + -idæ.] A family of thecosomatous pteropods, typified by the genus Limacina, with fins attached to the sides of the body and united ventrally by operculigerous lobes, and with a spiral or subspiral shell coiled toward the left. It contains many species, living near the surface of the ocean in different parts of the world. See cut under Limacina[1].

Limacodes (lī-ma-kō′dēz), n. [NL., < Gr. λεῖμαξ (> L. limax), a slug, snail (see Limax), + εἶδος, form.] A genus of moths sometimes giving name to a family Limacodidæ. In Latreille's classification it was put in his third section (Pseudobombyces) of nocturnal Lepidoptera, and characterized by "having the caterpillars like wood-lice," whence the name. Now referred to Cochlidiidæ, or synonymous with Apoda.

Limacodidæ (lī-ma-kod′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Limacodes + -idæ.] A family of moths named from the genus Limacodes. The antennæ are not pectinated, and the larvæ are onisciform. Also called Cochlidiidæ from the Hübnerian genus Cochlidion.

limacoid (lim′a-koid), a. and n. [< NL. Limax (Limac-) + -oid. Cf. Limacodes.] I. a. Pertaining to the Limacidæ or Limacoidea, or having their characters.

II. n. A slug of the family Limacidæ.

Limacoidea (lī-ma-koi′dē-ä), n. pl. [NL. (Fitzinger, 1833), < Limax (Limac-) + Gr. εἶδος, form.] Same as Limacea.

limaçon (lim′a-son), n. [F., a snail, < L. limax (limac-), a snail.] 1†. Any univalve shell. — 2. A curve, invented and named by Pascal, generated from a circle by adding a constant length to all the radii vectores drawn from a point of its circumference as an origin, taking proper account of negative radii vectores. It is a Cartesian, having cusps on the circular points; and it has a single bitangent, which is always real. It has three varieties, all of which are unicursal curves of the fourth order. One of these is the cardioid, which is a single form lying between the other two. It is of the third class. It has no node, but a cusp at the origin, and has no inflections. (See cut under cardioid.) All other limaçons are of the fourth class. Those lying outside of the cardioid have the origin as an acnode, and two real inflections; those lying within the cardioid have a crunode at the origin, and two imaginary inflections. For a crunodal limaçon, see Cartesian, n., 2.

Acnodal Limaçon.

Limadæ (lim′a-dē), n. pl. See Limidæ.

limail† (li-māl′), n. [ME., also lymail, lymaille, < OF. limaile, F. limaille (= Sp. limalla = Pg. limalha), filings, < limer, file, < L. limare, file: see limation.] Filings of any metal.

> Therein put was of silver lymaille
> An ounce, and stopped was, withouten fayle,
> The hole with wex, to kepe the lymail in.
> Chaucer, Canon's Yeoman's Tale, l. 151.

Limapontia (lī-ma-pon′shi-ä), n. [NL. (Forbes, 1832), < Limax + Gr. πόντος, sea.] A genus of slug-like nudibranchiates, typical of the family Limapontiidæ.

Limapontiidæ (lī″ma-pon-tī′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Limapontia + -idæ.] A family of nudibranchiate gastropods, typified by the genus Limapontia. The species are slug-like, with a flat head prolonged laterally into simple tentacles, dorsal anus, and no branchiæ; the radula has a single row of teeth. They are inhabitants of the coast of the North Atlantic. Also Limapontidæ.

limation (lī-mā′shon), n. [< LL. limatio(n-), a diminishing (lit. prop. a filing), < L. limare, pp. limatus, file (see lime[6]), < lima, a file: see Lima.] The act of filing or polishing. [Rare.]

lima-wood (lē′mä-wůd), n. See brazil, 2.

Limax (lī′maks), n. [NL., < L. limax, a slug, snail, kindred with L. limus, slime, mud; cf. Gr. λίμνη, a marsh.] 1. The typical genus of Limacidæ, formerly of great extent and heterogeneous composition, now restricted to the slugs which are without a caudal mucous pore, with a concealed quadrate non-spiral shell or limacel, and a smooth jaw. — 2†. [l. c.] In early systems of classification, as the Linnean, the animal or soft body of any univalve, considered apart from its shell, which latter was otherwise classified.

limb[1] (lim), n. [Early mod. E. lim, lym, lymme; < ME. lim, < AS. lim (pl. limu, leomu) = Icel. limr = Sw. Dan. lem, a limb, member of the body.] 1. A part or member of an animal body distinct from the head and trunk; an appendicular member; a leg, an arm, or a wing: often limited in meaning to the leg, at present general out of affected or prudish unwillingness to use the word leg.

> He was a moche man and a longe,
> In every lym styff and stronge.
> MS. Cantab. Ff. ii. 38, f. 74. (Halliwell.)

> Sūme han here Armes or here Lymes alle to broken, and sōme the sides. Mandeville, Travels, p. 175.

> Of courage haughty, and of limb
> Heroic built. Milton, P. L., ix. 484.

> I lastly was with Curtis, among the floating batt'ries,
> And there I left for witness an arm and a limb.
> Burns, Jolly Beggars, I am a Son of Mars.

> "A bit of the wing, Roxy, or of the — under limb?" The first laugh broke out at this.
> O. W. Holmes, Elsie Venner, vii.

2. The branch of a tree: applied only to a branch of some size, and not to a small twig. — 3. The part of a bow above or below the grip or handle. — 4. A thing or person regarded as a part of something else; a part; a member: as, a limb of the devil; a limb of the law.

> Crye we to Kynde that he come and defende vs, > Foles, fro this fendes lymes for Piers loue the Plowman.
> Piers Plowman (B), xx. 76.

> That little limb of the devil has cheated the gallows.
> Scott.

5. A mischievous or roguish person, especially a young person; an imp; a scapegrace; a scamp. [Colloq.]

> I had it from my maid Joan Hearsay; and she had it from a limb o' the school, she says, a little limb of nine year old. B. Jonson, Staple of News, iii. 2.

Exarticulate limbs. See exarticulate. = Syn. 1. See member.

limb[1] (lim), v. t. [< limb[1], n.] 1. To supply with limbs.

> As they please,
> They limb themselves, and colour, shape, or size
> Assume, as likes them best, condense or rare.
> Milton, P. L., vi. 352.

2. To dismember; tear or carve off the limbs of: as, to limb a turkey; to limb a tree.

> It [a dam] seemed to be built principally of alder poles well limbed off, and placed, roughly speaking, side by side. Harper's Mag., LXXVIII. 231.

limb[2] (lim), n. [< F. limbe = Sp. Pg. It. limbo, < L. limbus, a border, edge, fringe, belt, the zodiac (in NL. esp. the border or outer edge of the sun or moon). Cf. limbus, limbo.] 1. In astron., the border or outermost edge of the disk of the sun, moon, or a planet.

> The star once risen, though only one man in the hemisphere has yet seen its upper limb in the horizon, will mount and mount, until it becomes visible to other men, to multitudes, and climbs the zenith of all eyes.
> Emerson, Misc., p. 188.

2. The graduated edge of a circle or other astronomical or surveying instrument, etc. — 3. In zoöl., the lateral area or marginal band of the cephalic shield of trilobites on either side of the glabellum: also called border and its under surface doublure. — 4. In bot., the border or upper spreading part of a sympetalous corolla, or of a petal or sepal.

limbat (lim′bat), n. A cooling periodical wind in the island of Cyprus, blowing from the northwest from eight o'clock in the morning until noon or later.

limbate (lim′bāt), a. [< LL. limbatus, edged, < L. limbus, a border, edge: see limb[2].] 1. In bot., bordered: said especially of a flower, etc., in which one color is surrounded by an edging of another. — 2. In zoöl. and anat., having a limb or limbus; bordered; margined: said of various parts and organs.

limb-bearing (lim′bār″ing), a. Furnished with or supporting limbs: said of those segments in arthropods or articulated animals which bear true jointed appendages or their homologues, as the thoracic segments which bear the legs and the cephalic segments which bear the palpi and antennæ.

limbec, limbeck (lim′bek), n. [Also limbeke; contr. of alimbec*, alembic, q. v.] 1†. A still.

This bloud, together with the opened veins, were stilled in a vessell of lead, drawn thorow a Limbeck.
Sandys, Travailes, p. 168.

2. In her., the representation of an alembic or still used as a bearing.

limbec†, limbeck† (lim′bek), v. t. [< limbec, limbeck, n.] To strain or pass through a still.

The greater do nothing but limbeck their brains in the art of alchemy. Sandys, State of Religion.

limbed (limd), a. [< limb[1] + -ed[2].] Having limbs: used mostly in composition with adjectives: as, strong-limbed, large-limbed, short-limbed.

Timerously hasting from the sickly pale face or feeble limmed suter. Hakluyt's Voyages, p. 8.

Innumerous living creatures, perfect forms, Limb'd and full grown. Milton, P. L., vii. 456.

limber[1] (lim′bėr), a. [Also formerly or dial. limmer; appar. for limper*, < limp[1] + -er, with freq. (adj.) force.] Easily bent; flexible; pliant; lithe; yielding: as, a limber rod; a limber joint.

You put me off with limber vows. Shak., W. T., i. 2. 47.

I could skip
Out of my skin now, like a subtle snake,
I am so limber. B. Jonson, Volpone, iii. 1.

limber[1] (lim′bėr), v. t. [< limber[1], a.] To cause to become limber; render limber or pliant. [Rare.]

Her stiff hams, that have not been bent to a civility for ten years past, are now limbered into courtesies three deep at every word.
Richardson, Clarissa Harlowe, III. 356.

limber[2] (lim′bėr), n. [Also dial. limmer; prob. < Icel. limar, limbs, boughs, branches (hence in E. shafts), pl. of lim, foliage, < limr, a limb (branch): see limb[1].] 1. The shaft or thill of a wagon: usually in the plural.—2. The fore part of the carriage of a field-gun or cannon, consisting of two wheels and an axle, with a framework and a pole for the horses. On the top of the frame is an ammunition-chest which serves as a seat for two artillerymen. The limber is connected with the gun-carriage by an iron hook called the pintle, over which passes an eye or lunette in the trail of the carriage. When the gun is to be brought into action, it is unlimbered by unfastening the trail from the pintle and laying it on the ground.

3. Naut., a hole or channel for the passage of water into the interior of a vessel.

limber[2] (lim′bėr), v. t. and i. [< limber[2], n.] To attach the limber to, as a gun; fasten together the two parts of a gun-carriage, in preparation for moving away: often with up.

The enemy soon limbered up and fled west.
N. A. Rev., CXXVI. 244.

limber-board (lim′bėr-bōrd), n. Naut., a short plank placed over a limber-hole to keep out dirt, etc.

limber-box (lim′bėr-boks), n. Same as limber-chest.

limber-chain (lim′bėr-chān), n. 1. In artillery, a keep-chain which goes round the pintle and confines the trail to the limber, preventing its flying off the limber-hook. Farrow, Mil. Encyc. —2. Naut., a chain lying in the limber-holes of a ship so as to be drawn to and fro to clear the holes.

limber-chest (lim′bėr-chest), n. In artillery, the box for ammunition placed on the limber of a field-piece. Sometimes called limber-box.

Some of . . . [the Confederates], springing nimbly on his limber-chests, shot down his horses and then his men.
The Century, XXXVI. 103.

limber-hole (lim′bėr-hōl), n. Same as limber[2], 3.

limberness (lim′bėr-nes), n. The quality of being limber or easily bent; flexibleness; pliancy.

limber-strake (lim′bėr-strāk), n. The plank in the floor of a vessel nearest the keelson.

limb-girdle (lim′gėr″dl), n. In anat., the bony or gristly apparatus by which a limb is attached to the trunk; the basis of the appendicular skeleton; the shoulder-girdle or hip-girdle; the pectoral or pelvic arch.

limb-guard (lim′gärd), n. Defensive armor for the legs and arms.

limbi, n. Plural of limbus, 2.

limbic (lim′bik), a. Having the character of or pertaining to a limbus or border; bordering; marginal.—Limbic lobe, in anat. See lobe.

limb-meal† (lim′mēl), adv. [< ME. limmele, limemele, < AS. limmælum, limb by limb, < lim, limb, + mælum, dat. pl. of mæl, a portion, meal: see meal[2], -meal.] Limb by limb; limb from limb piecemeal.

O that I had her here, to tear her limb meal.
★ Shak., Cymbeline, ii. 4. 147.

limbo (lim′bō), n. [Orig. in the phrase in limbo, which is wholly L. (ML.): L. in, in; limbo, abl. of limbus, a border, edge, in ML. a supposed region on the border of hell: see limbus. The prep. in being taken as E., the L. abl. noun came to be used as an E. noun.] 1. A supposed border-land of hell; a region which has been believed by many to exist on the borders of hell, and to be the appointed abode of those who have not received the grace of Christ while living, and yet have not deserved the punishments of wilful and impenitent sinners. See the phrases.

What! heris thou nogt this vggely noyse,
Thes lurdans that in lymbo dwelle,
Thei make menyng of many joies,
And musteres grete mirthe thame emell.
York Plays, p. 378.

O, what a sympathy of woe is this,
As far from help as Limbo is from bliss!
Shak., Tit. And., iii. 1. 149.

The gate of Dante's Limbo is left ajar even for the ancient philosophers to slip out.
Lowell, Among my Books, 2d ser., p. 113.

2. Any similar region apart from this world.

A limbo large and broad, since call'd
The Paradise of Fools. Milton, P. L., iii. 495.

3. A prison or other place of confinement; any place where things of little or doubtful value are deposited or thrown aside.

He threw it therefore into a limbo of ambiguities.
Bushnell, Nature and the Supernat., v.

Quarantine is a sort of limbo, without the pale of civilized society. B. Taylor, Lands of the Saracen, p. 23.

There is a limbo of curious evidence bearing on the subject of pre-natal influences.
O. W. Holmes, Elsie Venner, Pref.

Limbo of infants (limbus infantium or infantum), in Rom. Cath. and scholastic theol., the appointed place after death of infants who die without receiving baptism.—Limbo of the fathers or of the patriarchs (limbus patrum), the place (the outermost circle of hell) where it has been believed the spirits of the righteous who died before the death of Christ were confined until his descent into hell. It has been identified with the "prison" of the spirits to whom Christ preached when "put to death in the flesh" (1 Pet. iii. 18–20).

limb-root (lim′röt), n. In anat., the part of the skeleton which bears a limb. Thus, the pectoral and pelvic arches, or shoulder- and hip girdles, are the limb-roots respectively of the fore and hind limbs: the actinosts of some fishes are limb-roots.

Limburger cheese. See cheese[1].

limburgite (lim′bėrg-īt), n. [< Limburg, a ruin near Sasbach, Kaiserstuhl, on the Rhine, + -ite[2].] The name given by Rosenbusch to a rock which is related to peridotite, and consists chiefly of olivin and augite with some magnetite and apatite in a variable but largely vitreous groundmass. It is essentially a basalt destitute of feldspathic constituents. To specimens of this rock from Bohemia the name of magma-basalt was given by ★ Bořicky.

limbus (lim′bus), n. [L., a border, edge, ML. esp. as in def. 1 of limbo: see limbo, limb[2].] 1. Same as limbo, 1.

What thanne, is lymbus lorne, allas!
Garre Satan helpe that we were wroken,
This werke is werse thanne euere it was.
York Plays, p. 384.

2. Pl. limbi (-bī). In anat., a border.—Limbus infantium or infantum. See limbo of infants, under limbo.—Limbus laminæ spiralis, the membranous spiral cushion resting on the border of the osseous spiral lamina of the cochlea. It extends from the attachment of the membrane of Reissner and terminates externally in a crest overhanging the spiral groove.—Limbus pallialis, the pallial border; the edge of the mantle or mantle-flap of a mollusk.—Limbus patrum. See limbo of the fathers, under limbo. ★ lime[1] (līm), n. [< ME. lim, lym, < AS. līm, bitumen, cement, glue, = D. lijm = MLG. līm = OHG. MHG. līm, G. leim, glue, = Icel. lim = Sw. Dan. lim, lime, glue; akin to AS. lām, E. loam, to Icel. leir, etc., clay, mud (> E. lair[3]), and prob. to L. limus, slime, mud; cf. L. linere, smear: see liniment, letter[3].] 1. Any viscous substance; especially, a viscous substance laid on twigs for catching birds; bird-lime.

You must lay lime to tangle her desires.
Shak., T. G. of V., iii. 2. 68.

2. An alkaline earth of great economic importance. It is the oxid of the metallic base calcium; but neither this metal nor its oxid occurs in nature in the uncombined condition, although existing in enormous quantity in various combinations. Lime as artificially made for use in the arts is prepared by calcining limestone or marble, or sometimes sea-shells, in properly constructed furnaces, known generally as lime-kilns, or simply kilns. By this process the carbonic acid is driven off from the lime, and the latter remains as an infusible amorphous substance, which is white when pure limestone has been employed. In this condition it is commonly known as quicklime. When exposed to the air it attracts moisture and falls into powder, with greater or less rapidity according to the humidity of the atmosphere and the quality of the lime. This process is called air-slaking. For use in preparing mortar lime is slaked by the addition of water, which is absorbed with avidity and with considerable evolution of heat. Lime may be so slaked that if packed in tight barrels immediately after the slaking it will keep for months without serious change or injury; in most cases, however, the lime is slaked with the addition of a large quantity of water, and is then immediately mixed with the amount of sand deemed suitable for making the desired quality of mortar. (See mortar.) There are few limestones which do not contain a greater or less quantity of sand and clay or of silicates of various bases mixed with the calcareous material. The lime as prepared from various qualities of rocks varies in character with the nature and amount of this foreign admixture. Limestone containing less than 5 or 6 per cent. of impurities yields a rich or, as it is often called, a "fat" lime; with more than that amount the lime is poor, and does not augment in bulk to any considerable extent when slaked with water. When the amount of silica, alumina, etc., in the limestone is increased to above 15 per cent., the lime made from it begins to acquire the property known as "hydraulicity," or of hardening, or "setting," as it is technically called, under water. (See cement, 2.) By far the most extensive use made of lime is as the chief ingredient in mortar; but there are many other purposes to which it is applied when a strong and cheap base is desired. It is of importance in tanning, in various processes of chemical manufacture, as in the preparation of ammonia and the caustic alkalis and of bleaching powder, for fertilizing or ameliorating land, for purifying gas, and for various other purposes. Sulphate of lime, or gypsum, is found in the form of alabaster and of selenite. It is roasted at a low heat and ground to make plaster of Paris: used for molding and statuary. For notices of the nature and distribution of the most important salts of lime, see, for the carbonates, calcite, aragonite, limestone, and marble; for the sulphates, anhydrite, gypsum, and plaster of Paris (under plaster); for the phosphates, apatite and phosphorite. For the presence and action of lime in natural waters, see water, and also stalagmite and stalactite.—Chlorid of lime. Same as calx chlorata (which see, under calx[1]).—Cream of lime. See cream[1].—Hydraulic lime. See hydraulic.—Lime cartridge. See cartridge.—Milk of lime. See milk.—White lime, a solution or preparation of lime used for whitewashing; a variety of whitewash. (See also gas-lime.)

lime[1] (līm), v. t.; pret. and pp. limed, ppr. liming. [< ME. limen, < AS. līmian (= D. lijmen = OHG. līmjan, MHG. līmen, G. leimen = Dan. lime = Sw. limma), smear with lime, < līm, lime: see lime[1], n.] 1. To smear with a viscous substance for the purpose of catching birds.

For who so wol his hondis lyme,
They mosten be the more unclene.
Gower. (Halliwell.)

York, and impious Beaufort, that false priest,
Have all limed bushes to betray thy wings,
And, fly thou how thou canst, they'll tangle thee.
Shak., 2 Hen. VI., ii. 4. 54.

Hence—2. To entangle; insnare; encumber.

O limed soul, that, struggling to be free,
Art more engaged! Shak., Hamlet, iii. 3. 68.

True—we had limed ourselves
With open eyes, and we must take the chance.
Tennyson, Princess, iii.

3. To apply lime to; in a special use, to manure with lime, as soil; throw lime into, as a pond or stream, to kill the fish in it.

Encouragement . . . to improve [land] by draining, marling, and liming. Sir J. Child, On Trade.

4. To sprinkle with slaked lime, as a floor; treat with lime; in leather-manuf., to steep (hides) in a solution of lime in order to remove the hair. —5†. To cement.

I will not ruinate my father's house,
Who gave his blood to lime the stones together.
Shak., 3 Hen. VI., v. 1. 84.

lime[2] (līm), n. and a. [A corruption of line[4] for orig. lind: see lind.] I. n. A tree of the genus Tilia, family Tiliaceæ; the linden.

II. a. Of or pertaining to the tree so called.—Lime hawk-moth, Smerinthus tiliæ, whose larva feeds on the lime. [Eng.] ★ lime[3] (līm), n. [< F. lime, < Pers. līmū, a lemon, a citron: see lemon.] 1. A tree, a variety of Citrus Limon. The sour lime (a variety of Citrus hystrix) has a globose fruit, smaller than the lemon, with thin rind, and yields an extremely acid juice. (See lime-juice.) It is cultivated in southern Europe, India, Florida, etc. The sweet lime of India is a variety of C. Limon.

2. The fruit of the lime-tree.

The ruddier orange and the paler lime.
Cowper, Task, iii. 573.

Indian wild lime. See Limonia.—Ogeechee lime, the sour tupelo, Nyssa Ogeche, found in parts of the southern United States. Its large acid fruit is made into a conserve called Ogeechee limes.—Wild lime, Fagara Fagara, a small tree with a hard, close-grained, reddish-brown wood, found in tropical America and extending into the southern United States.

lime[4]† (līm), n. [Also *leam, liem, lyam; < OF. liem, also lien, F. lien = Pr. liam = Pg. liame, ligame = It. legame, ligame, < L. ligamen, a band: see lien[2] (another form of the same word) and ligament.] A cord for leading a dog; a leash. Hence limer, limmer[3], limehound.

My hound then in my lyam, I by the woodman's art Forecast where I may lodge the goodly high-palm'd hart.
Drayton, Muse's Elysium, vi.

lime[5]†, n. [ME. lime, lyme, < OF. lime* (?), limit, < L. limes, limit: see limit.] Limit; end.

Ryȝt as we cleye ȝet the same,
And herrafter shulde withougte lyme.
Chron. Vilodun, p. 4. (Halliwell.) lime[6]†, v. t. [< OF. limer, F. limer = Pr. Sp. Pg. limar = It. limare, < L. limare, file, < lima, a file.] To file; polish.

It was like a lymed [var. a thynge of] glas,
But that it shoon ful more clere.
Chaucer, House of Fame, l. 1124.

limeball-light (līm'bâl-līt), n. Same as calcium light (which see, under calcium).

lime-boil (līm'boil), n. In calico-bleaching, the boiling of the goods in a keir with milk of lime. Also called lime-bowk.

lime-burner (līm'bėr″nėr), n. One who burns limestone to form lime.

lime-bush (līm'bůsh), n. A bush smeared with lime.

He's flown to another lime-bush; there he will flutter as long more, till he have ne'er a feather left.
B. Jonson, Bartholomew Fair, iii. 1.

lime-catcher (līm'kach″ėr), n. In a steam-boiler plant, an apparatus to cause precipitation of lime salts in the feed-water before it enters the boilers. It is a chamber holding trays or shelves over which the feed-water trickles in thin films while exposed to heat from the escaping exhaust steam of the engine. The water is heated to a point at which the acid carbonates of lime are decomposed, and the insoluble proto-carbonates are left in the vessel.

lime-cracker (līm'krak″ėr), n. In cement-works, a mill in which crude plaster and calcined limestone are coarsely ground. It is made of chilled iron, and its core and teeth are removable in sections, so that separate parts can be repaired when affected by wear.

lime-dog† (līm'dog), n. A limehound.

lime-feldspar (līm'feld″spär), n. See feldspar.

lime-floor (līm'flōr), n. A floor made of lime mortar beaten and smoothed to an even surface.

limehound† (līm'hound), n. [Also leamhound; so called as being led by a lime or leam; < lime[4] + hound. Cf. limmer[3] and lym[2].] A dog used in hunting the wild boar; a limmer.

But Talus, that could like a lime-hound winde her,
And all things secrete wisely could bewray,
At length found out whereas she hidden lay.
Spenser, F. Q., V. ii. 25.

lime-juice (līm'jös), n. The juice of the lime, used for much the same purposes as lemon-juice. It is especially in favor as an antiscorbutic, and forms a part of the outfit of vessels bound on long voyages, especially for arctic regions.

lime-juicer (līm'jö″sėr), n. A British sailor: so called because he is obliged by law to use lime-juice at sea as an antiscorbutic. [Amer. naut. slang.]

lime-kiln (līm'kil), n. [Formerly also limekill; < lime[1] + kiln.] A kiln or furnace in which lime is made by calcining limestone or shells.

lime-light (līm'līt), n. Same as calcium light (which see, under calcium).

lime-machine (līm'ma-shēn″), n. In gas-manuf., a machine for purifying gas by causing it to pass through lime.

Limenitis (lim-e-nī'tis), n. [NL., < Gr. Λιμενῖτις, an epithet of Artemis, lit. of harbors, < λιμήν, a harbor, haven.] A genus of nymphalid butterflies, having the head narrower than the thorax, the antennæ nearly as long as the body, and ample wings without ocelli. L. camilla and L. sibylla are brownish-black European species with white markings notable for their graceful flight. L. ursula and L. arthemis are found in the middle and eastern portions of the United States. L. sibylla is the white admiral of English collectors. L. disippus is a very common North American butterfly, also called Basilarchia archippus (not to be confounded with Danaus or Danais archippus, now called D. plexippus). Most of the American species are now placed in Basilarchia. See cut under disippus.

lime-ointment (līm'oint″ment), n. In phar., an ointment consisting of 4 parts of slaked lime, 1 part of lard, and 3 parts of olive-oil.

lime-pit (līm'pit), n. A limestone-quarry.

lime-powder (līm'pou″dėr), n. The crackled lime resulting from air-slaking.

lime-punch (līm'punch), n. A punch in which lime-juice is substituted for lemon-juice.

limer†, limere†, n. Middle English forms of limmer[3].

Limerick hook, lace, etc. See hook, lace, etc.

lime-rod (līm'rod), n. [ME. lymrod; < lime[1] + rod.] A twig smeared with bird-lime. Also lime-twig, and formerly limeyard.

The egle of blak therin, Caught with the lymrod.
Chaucer, Monk's Tale, l. 394.

limes (lī'mēz), n.; pl. limites (lim'i-tēz). [L., a cross-path, balk, boundary, limit: see limit, n.] 1. In anat., one of two distinct tracts of the lateral root of the olfactory lobe of the brain, distinguished as limes alba and limes cinerea. Wilder and Gage, Anat. Tech., p. 480.—2. In zoöl., a boundary; a line of division or separation between two parts or organs.—Limes facialis, in ornith., the facial boundary, or facial outline; the line or limit of the feathers all around the base of the bill. It forms in different groups of birds various salient and re-entrant angles, of some significance in classification. The most constant saliences are the frontal points, or antiæ. See antiæ.

lime-sink (līm'singk), n. A rounded hole or depression in the ground in limestone districts.

lime-sour (līm'sour), n. In calico-bleaching, same as gray sour (which see, under gray).

lime-spreader (līm'spred″ėr), n. In agri., a perforated box on wheels, or a special form of ★cart, for distributing lime over land.

limestone (līm'stōn), n. Rock consisting wholly or in large part of calcareous material or carbonate of lime. Where, as is often the case, there is some carbonate of magnesia mixed with the lime, the rock is called dolomitic limestone, and from this there may be a gradual transition to dolomite. Marble is the name given to the more crystalline limestones, and especially to such as are solid and handsome enough to be used for ornamental purposes or in costly buildings. Limestones are classed as silicious or argillaceous, according to the amount of sand or silica or of clay they contain. They are of many shades of color, reddish, grayish, and slate-colored tints being the most common. Many marbles, however, are either pure white or slightly clouded with tints of gray, red, or brown; but some are so dark as to appear when polished almost black. The limestone of the fossiliferous stratified groups is generally admitted to have been the result of organic agencies, just as limestone deposits are seen forming at the present time from the debris of coral growth. The crystalline varieties of limestone and marble which occur in the azoic or archæan rocks are by some believed to be a chemical precipitate or segregation, while others consider their existence proof that these rocks, in which no fossils have yet been found, are metamorphosed sedimentary beds, and that this limestone is also the result of organic life.—Baculite limestone. See baculite.—Bala limestone, in geol., a bed of limestone which is an important and very fossiliferous member of the Lower Silurian series in North Wales.—Bastard, bituminous, burnt limestone. See the adjectives.—Bird's-eye limestone, or Lowville limestone, one of the subgroups into which the Lower Silurian has been divided by the New York geologists: so called because it has crystalline points scattered through it producing a resemblance to bird's-eye maple.—Carboniferous limestone. Same as mountain limestone.—Chazy limestone, in geol., the name given by the New York Geological Survey to a member of the Lower Silurian series lying next below the Trenton division. The most abundant and interesting fossil which it contains is the Maclurea magna, which is a conspicuous object in the black marble quarried at Isle La Motte in Lake Champlain, and in other localities, and used extensively for floor-tiles in halls and public buildings, in square slabs or tiles alternating with those of white marble.—Corniferous or Onondaga limestone, an important member of the New York series of formations and widely distributed through the Appalachian region and the Ohio valley. In Canada this rock is, in part at least, a source of petroleum which is of considerable economic importance. It forms with the Schoharie and Esopus grits the upper portion of the Lower Devonian series in the New York system.—Dudley limestone, a highly fossiliferous limestone belonging to the Upper Silurian system, occurring near Dudley in England, and essentially equivalent to the Wenlock limestone. It abounds in beautiful masses of coral, shells, and trilobites. Also called Dudley rock.—Fontainebleau limestone, a variety of calcite from Fontainebleau, in rhombohedral crystals peculiar in containing a large amount (about 60 per cent.) of sand as impurity.—Galena limestone, the dolomitic rock, of Lower Silurian age, in which the lead ore of the Upper Mississippi lead region chiefly occurs. The formation has a thickness of 100–250 feet, and is in large part almost a pure dolomite.—Granular limestone. See granular.—Helderberg limestone, a name derived from the Helderberg mountains in New York, applied to rocks of Devonian age. These limestones include four groups of calcareous lime beds, distinguished from one another by their fossil remains.—Indusial limestone. See indusial.—Jura limestone, the limestone rock of the Jura mountains, which corresponds to the Oölite of British writers. It is composed of limestones of various qualities, clays, marls, and sandstones.—Keokuk limestone, one of the divisions of carboniferous limestone, of importance in the Mississippi valley. It lies between the Burlington and St. Louis limestones. In this group the geode-bed occurs. See geode.—Magnesian limestone, a carbonate of lime containing some carbonate of magnesia. When the two are present in the necessary proportion to form dolomite (54.35 of the former to 45.65 of the latter), the rock is usually called by that name. See dolomite.—Mountain limestone, the lowest of the three groups into which the entire Carboniferous series in England is divided. It is overlain by the millstone-grit, and over this are the coal-measures proper. These general divisions hold good over a large part of Europe, and to some extent in the eastern and northeastern United States. Even in China there is a limestone formation corresponding in geological position and fossil contents with the mountain limestone of England. Wherever it occurs, this formation is characterized by similar fossils. Among these the most abundant forms are—rhizopods, especially the widespread genus Fusulina; crinoids, in great variety and beauty; brachiopods, especially of the genera Productus and Spirifer; corals, among which the genus Lithostrotion is conspicuous; ganoid and selachian fishes; and also the earliest amphibians known. The trilobites, very characteristic of groups lower than the Carboniferous, have in the mountain limestone almost entirely died out. This formation is of great interest in the Mississippi valley, on account of the extent of territory which it covers and its extraordinary wealth of fossil remains. In various parts of the world, notably in Scotland and in some parts of the Appalachian coal-field, the mountain limestone contains workable beds of coal. Also called carboniferous limestone. See carboniferous.—Niagara or Lockport limestone, an important member of the Upper Silurian series, largely developed in the vicinity of Niagara Falls, and farther west. The Medina sandstone, the Clinton beds, the Rochester shale, and Niagara limestone together form the "Niagara period" or Niagaran. The Niagaran contains large numbers of corals, crinoids, brachiopods, and trilobites. It is nearly the equivalent of the Wenlock group of English geologists. Near Lockport, New York, this rock contains many geodes lined with crystals of dog-tooth spar (calcite), pearl-spar, and other minerals. The rocks of the Niagaran are overlain by the Guelph and Salina beds.—Nummulitic limestone. See Foraminifera.—Trenton limestone, a rock of Lower Silurian age, finely exhibited at Trenton Falls, New York, and hence so named by the geologists of the New York Survey. It is also an important member of the series farther west than New York, and south through the Appalachian range. It is generally a highly fossiliferous rock, rich in crinoids, brachiopods, trilobites, cephalopods, and gastropods. The Trenton, Black River, and Lowville limestones constitute the Mohawkian group. See marble.

lime-tree (līm'trē), n. Same as lime[2].—Lime-tree winter moth. See moth.

lime-twig (līm'twig), n. [< ME. lime-twig; < lime[1] + twig[1].] A twig smeared with bird-lime; hence, that which catches; a snare; a beguiling trick or device.

I doubt his lime twigs catch not;
If they do, all 's provided.
Fletcher and Shirley, Night-Walker, iv. 2.

Enter'd the very lime-twigs of his spells,
And yet came off. Milton, Comus, l. 646.

limetwig (līm'twig), v. t.; pret. and pp. limetwigged, ppr. limetwigging. [< lime-twig, n.] To beset with lime-twigs or snares; entangle or retard.

Not to have their consultations lime-twigged with quirks and sophisms of philosophical persons.
L. Addison, Western Barbary, Pref.

lime-vial (līm'vī″al), n. A vial of quicklime intended for incendiary purposes: an object supposed to be represented by a large bulbous mass on the end of an arrow in some medieval pictures.

lime-wash (līm'wosh), n. A coating given with a solution of lime; whitewash.

limewash (līm'wosh), v. t. [< lime-wash, n.] To whitewash.

Even in Cornwall and North Devon, moorstone cottages look very "dejected" unless they are lime-washed.
Contemporary Rev., LI. 237.

lime-water (līm'wâ″tėr), n. A saturated aqueous solution of lime. It is astringent and alkaline, and when added to milk it prevents the formation of dense coagula. It is used in diarrhea and vomiting, and as an external application to ulcers, etc. It is also employed in the clarification of coarse sugar.

limewort†, (līm'wėrt), n. An old name of the catch-fly, Silene Armeria, and of one or two other plants.

limeyard†, n. [ME. limzerd; < lime + yard[1].] Same as lime-rod.

I likne it to a lym-zerde to drawen men to hell,
And to worchipe of the fend to wraththen the soules.
Piers Plowman's Crede (E. E. T. S.), l. 564.

Limicola (lī-mik'ō-lä), n. [NL., < L. limus, mud (see lime[1]), + colere, inhabit.] A genus of small broad-billed sandpipers of the family Scolopacidæ, having as type Tringa platyrhyncha, Koch, 1816.

Limicolæ (lī-mik'ō-lē), n. pl. [NL., pl. of Limicola.] 1. In ornith., an order or a suborder of birds, a part of the old order Grallæ or Grallatores, including most of those wading birds the few (usually four) young of which run about at birth, as distinguished from those of the heron tribe, which are reared in the nest, or of the rail tribe, which lay numerous eggs. It is called the "plover-snipe group," and embraces the families Charadriidæ and Scolopacidæ, or plovers and snipes, and their allies, as sandpipers, curlews, godwits, avosets, stilts, turnstones, oyster-catchers, etc. It is approximately equivalent to the Longirostres and Pressirostres of Cuvier. In Sundevall's system it is restricted to the snipes, tattlers, sandpipers, stilts, and avosets, and is thus little more extensive than the family Scolopacidæ. Also called Debilirostres.

2. In Vermes, a group of chætopod worms containing those Scoleina which are maritime and characterized by having the looped canals highly developed and differentiated as seminal ducts: distinguished from ordinary earthworms or Terricolæ.

limicole (lim'i-kōl), a. Same as limicoline.

limicoline (lī-mik'ō-lin), a. and n. [As Limicola + -ine[1].] I. a. Living on or in mud; specifically, of or pertaining to the Limicolæ, in either sense of that word. It is a common epithet of the large group of birds known as shore-birds, bay-snipe, etc.

II. n. In ornith., a member of the Limicolæ.

limicolous (lī-mik'ō-lus), a. [As Limicola + -ous.] Living in mud; limicoline.

In many limicolous forms, as in earthworms.
Encyc. Brit., XXIV. 678.

Limidæ (lim'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Lima + -idæ.] A family of monomyarian acephalous bivalves or lamellibranch mollusks, typified by the genus Lima, having the mantle-margins fringed with tentacular filaments, the foot finger-like, the lips tentaculate, and the shell obliquely oval, with the umbones eared, the anterior side gaping, and the posterior rounded. They live in the sand and generally burrow, but are able to move like scallops through the water by rapidly opening and closing the valves. Many of them attach themselves by a byssus and form a sort of nest. The animal is generally of an orange or bright-red color. The species are numerous, and ★occur in most seas. Also Limadæ. See cut under Lima.

liminal (lim'i-nal), a. [< L. limen (limin-), threshold (cf. eliminate), + -al.] Pertaining to the threshold or entrance; relating to the beginning; inceptive; in psychol., of or pertaining to a limen. See supplement.

Every stimulus must reach a certain intensity before any appreciable sensation results. This point is known as the threshold or liminal intensity.
J. Sully, Outlines of Psychol., p. 114.

The liminal difficulties cannot be evaded without the most disastrous consequences to the body of the exposition. Mind, IX. 428.

liming (lī'ming), n. [Verbal n. of lime[1], v.] 1. The operation of treating with lime, or of sprinkling with slaked lime; in leather-manuf., the steeping of hides in a solution of lime to remove their hair.—2. In bleaching, a solution of lime in water.—3. The smearing of twigs ★with lime to catch birds; bird-liming.

limit (lim'it), n. [< ME. limite, lymyte, < OF. limite, F. limite = Sp. límite = Pg. It. limite, < L. limes (limit-), a cross-path or balk between fields, hence a boundary, boundary line or wall, any path or road, border, limit; cf. limen, a threshold. Cf. lime[5].] 1. A definite terminal or border line; a boundary; that which bounds or circumscribes in a material manner; as, the northern limit of a field or town; the limits of a country.

Whiche .ij. place be the lymytes or endes of the Holy Lande the longest waye.
Sir R. Guylforde, Pylgrymage, p. 42.

Here, the double-founted stream,
Jordan, true limit eastward. Milton, P. L., xii. 145.

Nor ceas'd her madness and her flight before
She touch'd the limit of the Pharian shore.
Dryden, tr. of Ovid's Metamorph., i.

The spectrum extends in both directions beyond its visible limits. Tyndall, Light and Elect., p. 66.

2. A terminal line or point in general; the extent or reach beyond which continuity ceases; a fixed term or bound as to amount, supply, continuance, inclusion, or the like: used of both material and immaterial things: as, to reach the limit of one's resources; the limit of vision or of resistance; to set limits to one's ambition.

All kinds of knowledge have their certain bounds and limits. Hooker, Eccles. Polity, i. 14.

Dispatch; the limit of your lives is out.
Shak., Rich. III., iii. 3. 8.

The Limits of my Paper will not give me leave to be particular in Instances of this kind.
Addison, Spectator, No. 297.

Not without a few falls in the wrestle with Nature do we learn the limits of our own power, and the pitiless immensity of the power that is not ours.
J. R. Seeley, Nat. Religion, p. 27.

3. That which is within or defined by limits; confine; district; region.

At length into the limits of the north
They came. Milton, P. L., v. 755.

The archdeacon hath divided it Into three limits very equally.
Shak., 1 Hen. IV., iii. 1. 73.

The voyageur here also generally holds his place in the front rank, explores and reports the quality and quantity of timber in certain limits or lots.
Harper's Mag., LXXVI. 550.

4†. A logical term. See the quotation.

In this proposition, every man is a sensible body; these two words, man and sensible body, are the terms, limits, or bounds, whereof as the said proposition is compounded, so into the same it is to be resolved, as into his uttermost parts that have any signification.
Blundeville, Arte of Logicke (1619).

5. In math., the precise boundary between two continuous regions of magnitude or quantity; especially, the point at which a variable upon which some function depends passes through infinity. It is frequently said to be the value that a variable quantity may indefinitely approach but can never reach.

A superior limit of the positive roots is any greater positive number than the greatest of these roots.
Burnside and Panton, Theory of Equations, I. 180.

6†. A limb, as a limit or extremity of the body.

Hurried
Here to this place, i' the open air, before
I have got strength of limit.
Shak., W. T., iii. 2. 107.

Thought it very strange that nature should endow so fair a face with so hard a heart, such comely limits with such perverse conditions.
Titana and Theseus, bl. lett., cited by Steevens. (Nares.)

Ecliptic limits. See ecliptic.—Equation of limits. See equation.—Limit of a planet, its greatest heliocentric latitude.—Limit of distinct vision, the smallest or greatest distance from which the image of an object can be fixed upon the retina.—Limit of elasticity. See elasticity.—Limit of the roots of an equation, a value greater than the greatest root or smaller than the smallest.—Limits of a prison, jail limits, or simply limits. See jail.—Limits of integration. See integration.—Magnetic limit. See magnetic.—Method or doctrine of limits, the doctrine that we cannot reason about infinite and infinitesimal quantities, that phrases in mathematics containing these and cognate words are not to be understood literally, but are to be interpreted as meaning that the functions spoken of behave in certain ways when their variables are indefinitely increased or diminished, and that the fundamental formulæ of the differential calculus should be based upon the conception of a limit. (See def. 5, above.) The first of these positions is not now tenable: the hypothesis of infinite and infinitesimal quantities is consistent, and can be reasoned about mathematically. But the doctrine of limits should be understood to rest upon the general principle that every proposition must be interpreted as referring to a possible experience. The problems to which this method is applied belong to three types: the summation of series, the problem of tangents, and the problem of quadratures. (See series and problem.) It is essentially the same as Newton's method of prime and ultimate ratios. Its rival is the method of infinitesimals, which is almost excluded from the textbooks at present.—Three-mile limit. See mile. = Syn. 1. Confine, termination, bourn, precinct, boundary, frontier (see boundary); restriction, restraint, check.

limit (lim'it), v. [< ME. limiten, < OF. limiter, F. limiter = Pr. Sp. Pg. limitar = It. limitare, < L. limitare, bound, limit, fix, determine, < limes (limit-), a boundary, limit: see limit, n. Cf. delimit.] I. trans. 1. To restrict within limits; bound; set bounds to.

They . . . limited the Holy One of Israel. Ps. lxxviii. 41.

In all well-instituted commonwealths, care has been taken to limit men's possessions.
Swift, Thoughts on Various Subjects.

2. To assign to a limit or confine; fix within a limit; allot.

Limit each leader to his several charge.
Shak., Rich. III., v. 3. 25.

The hopes and fears of man are not limited to this short life, and to this visible world.
Macaulay, Gladstone on Church and State.

3. To fix as a limit; assign exclusively or specifically. [Obsolete or archaic.]

Again, he limiteth a certain day. Heb. iv. 7.

And, as you do answer, I do know the scope
And warrant limited unto my tongue.
Shak., K. John, v. 2. 123.

Their time limeted them being expired, they returned to ye ship. Bradford, Plymouth Plantation, p. 82.

Limiting case of a hypothesis involving continuity, a case which is indefinitely near to cases which conform to the general conditions, and also to cases which violate these conditions. Thus, a tangent to a circle is a limiting case of a secant. See limit, n., 5.—Limiting points, with reference to the system of circles having a given radical axis, two points which have the same polars with reference to all the circles.

II.† intrans. To exercise any function, as begging, within a limited district: as, a limiting friar.

They go ydelly a limiting abrode, living upon the sweat of other mens travels. Northbrooke, Dicing (1577). (Nares.) limitable (lim'i-ta-bl), a. [< limit + -able.] Capable of being limited, circumscribed, bounded, or restricted.

limitaneous† (lim-i-tā'nē-us), a. [< L. limitaneus, situated on the borders, < limes (limit-), a boundary, limit: see limit, n.] Pertaining to limits or bounds. Bailey, 1731.

limitarian (lim-i-tā'ri-an), a. and n. [< limitary + -an.] I. a. Tending to limit or circumscribe.

II. n. One who limits; in theol., one who holds that a part of the human race only are to be saved: opposed to universalist. Imp. Dict.

limitary (lim'i-tā-ri), a. and n. [= F. limitaire, preliminary, < L. limitaris, that is on the border, < limes (limit-), a boundary, limit: see limit, n.] I. a. 1. Marking or maintaining a limit or boundary; limiting; restrictive.

Then, when I am thy captive, talk of chains, Proud limitary cherub. Milton, P. L., iv. 971.

Statements so palpably limitary of the Divine supremacy as I found on the face of Revelation.
H. James, Sub. and Shad., p. 123.

2. Subject to limitation; restricted within limits; limited.

What no inferior limitary king
Could in a length of years to ripeness bring,
Sudden his word performs.
Pitt, tr. of First Hymn of Callimachus to Jupiter.

A philosopher should not see with the eyes of the poor limitary creature calling himself a man of the world.
De Quincey, Opium Eater.

II.† n. 1. That which constitutes a limit or boundary, as a stretch of land; a border-land.

In the time of the Romans this country, because a limitary, did abound with fortifications.
Fuller, Worthies, Cumberland.

2. Same as limiter, 2. Heylin, Life of Laud, p. 210.

limitate (lim'i-tāt), a. [< L. limitatus, pp. of limitare, bound, limit: see limit, v.] In bot., bounded by a distinct line, as the hypothallus in some lichens.

limitation (lim-i-tā'shon), n. [< ME. limitacioun (in sense 6), < OF. limitacion, F. limitation = Sp. limitación = Pg. limitação = It. limitazione, < L. limitatio(n-), a bounding, < limitare, pp. limitatus, bound: see limit, v.] 1. The act of bounding or circumscribing; the fixing of a limit or restriction.

Mercy to him that shows it is the rule
And righteous limitation of its act,
By which Heav'n moves in pard'ning guilty man.
Cowper, Task, vi. 596.

The checks naturally arising to each man's actions when men become associated are those only which result from mutual limitation. H. Spencer, Man vs. State, p. 101.

2. The condition of being limited, bounded, or circumscribed; restriction.

Am I yourself
But, as it were, in sort or limitation?
Shak., J. C., ii. 1. 283.

3. An opposing limit or bound; a fixed or prescribed restriction; a restraining condition, defining circumstance, or qualifying conception: as, limitations of thought.

Titus Quintius understood that he was appointed to have command of the army, without any other limitation than during the pleasure of the senate.
Raleigh, Hist. World, V. iv. § 14.

We are under physiological and cerebral limitations; limitations of association, want, condition.
Bushnell, Nature and the Supernat., p. 51.

Every limitation of a power is a prohibition to transcend it; for, if it had not that effect, it would not be a limitation. N. A. Rev., CXXXIX. 157.

4†. That to which one is limited; that which is required as a condition.

You have stood your limitation; and the tribunes Endue you with the people's voice.
Shak., Cor., ii. 3. 145.

God, then, not only framed Nature one,
But also set it limitation
Of Forme and Time.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, i. 1.

5. In law: (a) The period of time prescribed by law after which an action cannot be brought. Since the investigation of controversies becomes more difficult with the lapse of time, and long delay to sue may imply either that satisfaction has been received or that all claim is abandoned, and as it is vexatious to revive stale claims, the law allows fixed periods, varying with the nature of the grievance, within which, if at all, a claimant must apply to the courts. The statutes fixing these periods are called statutes of limitations. From the limitation prescribed for actions to recover real property, it follows that a practically secure title to land can be acquired by mere adverse possession for a sufficient time. (b) In the law of conveyancing, the carving out of an estate less than a fee simple absolute (see fee[2]); the prescribing of an ulterior direction for the devolution of an estate in case the estate of the primary grantee shall fail. If a deed or will gives property to A limiting his estate to his life, and on his death giving the property to B, the gift to B is a limitation, or limitation over. If the property is given to A so long as she remains unmarried, adding that in case she marries the property is to go to B, the added clause is a conditional limitation, or a limitation over dependent on a condition. If a condition only is prescribed without adding a limitation over, the property will, if the condition be valid, revert to the donor or his heirs.

6†. The particular district in which a limiter or begging friar was allowed to beg for alms.

Ther walketh now the lymytour hymself, . . .
And seyth his matyns and his hooly thynges
As he gooth in his lymytacioun.
Chaucer, Wife of Bath's Tale, l. 21.

A limitour of the Grey Friars, in the course of his limitation, preached many times, and had but one sermon at all times. Latimer, Misc. Sel.

Some [pulpits] have not had foure sermons these fifteene or sixteene yeares since Friers left their limitations. B. Gilpin, Sermon bef. Edw. VI., 1552.

Collateral limitation a limitation dependent on some collateral event.—Conditional limitation. See def. 5.—Four years' limitation law, a name by which the United States Tenure of Office Act (United States Congress, March, 1867) is sometimes known. See tenure.—Limitation of the Crown Act, an English statute of 1701 (12 and 13 Wm. III., c. 2) which vested the succession to the crown in the Princess Sophia of Hanover and her heirs, being Protestants. Also called the Act of Settlement, and the Succession to the Crown Act.—Statute of limitations. See def. 5.—Words of limitation, words in a deed or will taken as indicating the nature or kind of estate the donee is vested with, by stating who shall or may take after him.

limitative (lim'i-tā-tiv), a. [= F. limitatif = Sp. Pg. limitativo; as limitate + -ive.] Limiting; fixing limits; restrictive.

Limitative notions which have a negative value, in so far as they keep open a vacant space beyond experience, but do not enable us to fill that space with any positive realities. Encyc. Brit., XVI. 84.

Limitative judgment, in logic, a name given by Kant to an affirmative infinitated proposition, such as "Every man is a non-dog," in order to make up the triad of forms —affirmative, negative, limitative — under the category of quality.

Much acumen has been expended even in recent times in vindicating the limitative form of judgments, but I can see in it only an unmeaning product of pedantic ingenuity. Nettleship, tr. of Lotze's Logic, I. ii. § 40.

limited (lim'i-ted), p. a. and n. I. p. a. 1. Confined within limits; narrow; circumscribed.

After this great Affront to the King, is Mountford sent over again into Gascony, though with a more limited Authority. Baker, Chronicles, p. 84.

2†. Allotted or appointed.

I'll make so bold to call,
For 'tis my limited service.
Shak., Macbeth, ii. 3. 56.

3. In railroading, restricted as to number of cars (weight), or to the carrying of first-class passengers: said of a train.—Limited adjunct, an adjunct that agrees with the subject in regard to some part, nature, time, place, or respect.

Mortality is the absolute adjunct of man, whilst immortality is the limited; because man is not absolutely immortal, but only as to the soul.
Burgersdicius, tr. by a Gentleman.

Limited company, fee, function. See the nouns.—Limited divorce. See divorce, 1.—Limited jurisdiction, liability, mail, monarchy, partnership, problem, ticket, train, univocation, vote, etc. See the nouns.

II. n. A limited express-train: as, the Chicago limited. [Colloq., U. S.]

Let the great steamship founder, the limited crash through a trestle. Pop. Sci. Mo., XXX. 577.

limitedly (lim'i-ted-li), adv. In a limited manner or degree; with limitation.

The constitution of such an unity doth involve the vesting some person or some number of persons with a sovereign authority, . . . to be managed in a certain manner, either absolutely, according to pleasure, or limitedly, according to certain rules prescribed to it.
Barrow, Unity of the Church.

limitedness (lim'i-ted-nes), n. The state of being limited. Johnson.

limiter (lim'i-tėr), n. [< ME. limitour, lymytour, < OF. limitour, limiteur*, < ML. limitator, a friar licensed to act within certain limits, lit. one who limits, < L. limitare, limit, bound: see limit, v.] 1. One who or that which limits or confines.

They so believing, as we hear they do, and yet abolishing a law so good and moral, the limiter of sin, what are they else but contrary to themselves?
Milton, Tetrachordon.

2†. A friar licensed to beg, collect convent-dues, preach, or perform other duties within certain limits, or in a certain district.

A Frere ther was, a wantown and a merye,
A lymytour, a ful solempne man. . . .
He was the beste beggere in his hous.
Chaucer, Gen. Prol. to C. T. (ed. Morris), l. 209.

'Twas but getting a Dispensation from the Pope's Limiter, or Gatherer of the Peter-Pence.
Selden, Table-Talk, p. 101.

limites, n. Plural of limes.

limit-gage (lim'it-gāj), n. A gage which is used for determining whether pieces do not exceed or fall below a certain specified range of dimension. Car-Builder's Dict.

limitless (lim'it-les), a. [< limit + -less.] Having no limits; unbounded; illimitable.

Now to this sea of city-commonwealth,
Limitless London, am I come obscured.
Sir J. Davies, Wittes Pilgrimage, sig. H, 4 b.

limitour†, n. A Middle English form of limiter.

limit-point (lim'it-point), n. A point on a line or other spread, such that within every interval within which it is contained there lie an infinity of points of a given manifold. The limit-point may or may not belong to this manifold.

limma (lim'ä), n. [LL., < Gr. λεῖμμα, a remnant, somewhat less than half a major tone, a monosemic pause, < λείπειν, leave.] 1. In the Pythagorean system of music, the smaller half-step or semitone, being the remnant of a perfect fourth after subtracting from it two whole steps or "tones": $\frac{4}{3} \div (\frac{9}{8})^2 = \frac{256}{243}$. A limma and an apotome together made a "tone": $\frac{2048}{2187} \times \frac{2187}{2048} = \frac{9}{8}$. Also called Pythagorean semitone or hemitonc.—2. In pros., a monosemic empty time or pause; a time equal to one mora or semeion, existing in the rhythm, but not expressed by a syllable in the words. The limma is indicated by a mark like a caret (∧, taken from the initial Λ or λ of λεῖμμα). The pause at the end of a trochaic dimeter or tetrapody catalectic (see the lines quoted under catalectic) is an example, – ◡ – ◡ – ◡ – ∧, the acatalectic line being – ◡ – ◡ – ◡ – ◡. Also written leimma. See pause.

limmer[1] (lim'ėr), a. An obsolete or dialectal form of limber[1].

They have their feet and legs limmer, wherewith they crawl. Holland.

limmer[2] (lim'ėr), n. 1. A dialectal variant of limber[2].—2†. Naut., a man-rope at the side of a ladder.

limmer[3] (lim'ėr), n. and a. [Formerly also lymmer; in def. 1 also leamer; < ME. limer, limere, lymere, < OF. liemier, F. limier, a large dog, lit. a dog held in a leash, < OF. liem, F. lien, a leash: see lime[4], lien[2]. Cf. limehound.] I. n. 1†. A limehound; in general, a hound; in a later use, a mongrel hound.

A gret route
Of huntes and eke of foresteres,
With many relayes and lymeres.
Chaucer, Death of Blanche, l. 362.

A dogge engendred betwene an hounde and a mastyve, called a lymmer or mungrell.
Elyot, in v. Hybris. (Halliwell.)

Hence—2. A low, base, or worthless person; a scoundrel; as applied to a woman, in a milder sense, a jade. [Now Scotch and North. Eng.]

To satisfie in parte the wrong which had bene offred him by those lymmers and robbers. Holinshed, Hist. Ireland.

The nourice was a fause limmer
As e'er hung on a tree.
Lamkin (Child's Ballads, III. 95).

Thieves, limmers, and broken men of the Highlands.
Scott.

II.† a. Base; low.

Then the limmer Scottes . . . burnt my guddes, and made deadly feede on me, and my barnes.
Bullein's Dialogue (1573), p. 3. (Halliwell.)

Hence with 'em, limmer lown,
Thy vermin and thyself.
B. Jonson, Sad Shepherd, ii. 1.

limmock (lim'ok), a. [< limmer[1], limber[1], with substituted term. -ock.] Very limber. [Prov. Eng.]

limn (lim), v. [< ME. limnen, contr. of luminen, an aphetic form of enluminen, < OF. enluminer, < L. illuminare, inluminare, illuminate, burnish, limn: see illumine, illuminate.] I. trans. To represent by painting or drawing; depict; delineate; hence, to describe vividly or minutely. [Archaic or poetical.]

It were impossible
To limn his passions in such lively colours
As his own proper sufferance could express.
Ford, Lover's Melancholy, iii. 3.

II.† intrans. To practise drawing or painting, especially in water-colors.

Yesterday begun my wife to learn to limn of one Browne, . . . and by her beginning, upon some eyes, I think she will do very fine things, and I shall take great delight in it.
Pepys, Diary, II. 234.

Limnacea (lim-nā'sē-ä), n. pl. [NL. (Brongniart, 1817), for Limnæacea*, < Limnæa + -acea.] In De Blainville's classification (1825), the first of three families of his Pulmobranchiata, containing pulmonate gastropods of the genera Limnæa, Physa, and Planorbis in a broad sense; the pond-snails, now divided into two families, Limnæidæ and Physidæ.

limnacean (lim-nā'sē-an), a. and n. [< Limnacea + -an.] I. a. Of or relating to the Limnacea.

II. n. A gastropod of the group Limnacea; any pond-snail.

limnaceous (lim-nā'shius), a. Same as limnacean.

Limnadia (lim-nā'di-ä), n. [NL., < Gr. λίμνη, a pool, lake, marsh.] A genus of phyllopod crustaceans, with a thin flexible bivalve carapace of oval form, and from 18 to 26 segments which bear limbs. L. agassizi is found in pools in New England.

Limnadiacea (lim-nā-di-ā'sē-ä), n. pl. [NL., < Limnadia + -acea.] Same as Limnadiidæ.

Limnadiidæ (lim-nā-dī'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Limnadia + -idæ.] A family of phyllopod or branchiopod crustaceans, typified by the genus Limnadia. The test is soft and bivalved, there are numerous pairs of pleiopods or swimming-feet, the antennæ are large, the antennulæ are small, and the large telson has a pair of appendages. In the male one or two pairs of feet are chelate. The leading genera are Limnadia, Limnetis, and Estheria. See Estheriidæ.

Limnæa (lim-nē'ä), n. [NL., < Gr. λιμναῖος, of or from a marsh, < λίμνη, a pool, lake, marsh.] A genus of Limnæidæ, typical of the subfamily Limnæinæ. In these pond-snails the shell is a slender dextrad spiral with a large body-whorl and aperture, of a light, thin, horny texture. There are many species. L. stagnalis is a common one. They live in ponds, and are almost exclusively vegetarian. The genus is cosmopolitan, and reaches its highest development in North America. Also erroneously Limnea, Lymnæa, Lymnea, Limneus.

Pond-snail (Limnæa stagnalis).

Limnæana (lim-nē-an'ä), n. pl. [NL. (Lamarck, 1812), < Limnæa + -ana.] A family of trachelipod mollusks, typified by the genus Limnæa, containing all the limnophilous gastropods, now differentiated into the families Limnæidæ and Physidæ.

Limnæidæ (lim-nē'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Limnæa + -idæ.] A family of basommatophorous pulmonate gastropods, with diversiform tentacles, eyes at the inner or posterior bases of the tentacles, simple upper jaw as well as lateral ones, wide serriform marginal teeth of the radula, and generally a spiral shell; the pond-snails. They inhabit fresh waters, especially of temperate and northerly countries, and are of cosmopolitan distribution. More than 600 species are described, most of which belong to the genera Lymnæa, Planorbis, and Ancylus. They are divided by the shape of the shell into Limnæinæ, Planorbinæ, and Ancylinæ.

Limnæinæ (lim-nē-ī'nē), n. pl. [NL., < Limnæa + -inæ.] The typical subfamily of Limnæidæ, including those pond-snails whose shell is a long spiral.

limnæine (lim'nē-in), a. [< Limnæinæ.] Of or relating to the Limnæinæ.

Limnanthaceæ (lim-nan-thā'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Lindley, 1836), < Limnanthes + -aceæ.] A small family of dicotyledonous archichlamydeous plants of the order Sapindales, containing only the two genera Limnanthes and Flœrkea. It is characterized by regular flowers with valvate sepals, small glands alternating with the petals, and beakless carpels. They are smooth herbs with alternate leaves without stipules.

Limnanthemum (lim-nan'thē-mum), n. [NL. (Gmelin, 1769), < Gr. λίμνη, a pool, lake, marsh, + ἄνθεμον.] A genus of plants belonging to the family Menyanthaceæ, distinguished by the indehiscent fruit and cordate leaves. There are about 20 species, distributed throughout the temperate and tropical regions of the world, three being found in North America. They are aquatic perennials, with floating leaves on very long petioles, and yellow flowers. One beautiful species, L. nymphæoides, is a native of Europe and Asia, and goes by the names of fringed bog-bean or buck-bean, fringed water-lily, water-fringe, and marsh-flower. (See bog-bean.) L. lacunosum of the eastern United States is the common floating-heart.

Limnanthes (lim-nan'thēz), n. [NL. (R. Brown, 1833), < Gr. λίμνη, a pool, lake, marsh, + ἄνθος, a flower.] A genus of plants belonging to the family Limnanthaceæ, and distinguished from Flœrkea, the other genus of the family, by having five petals instead of three.

Limnea, n. See Limnæa.

limner (lim'nėr), n. [< ME. limnore, lymenour, luminour, short for enluminour, < OF. enluminеur, < ML. illuminator, illuminator, limner: see illuminator and limn.] One who limns; an artist or delineator; more especially, one who paints portraits or miniatures. [Archaic or poetical.]

Johannes Dancastre, lymenour.
English Gilds (E. E. T. S.), p. 9.

That family had lately got their pictures drawn by a limner, who travelled the country, and took likenesses for fifteen shillings a head. Goldsmith, Vicar, xvi.

Limnetis (lim-nē'tis), n. [NL., ⟨ Gr. λιμνῆτις, fem. of λιμνήτης, living in marshes, ⟨ λίμνη, a pool, lake, marsh.] One of the three leading genera of Limnadiidæ (or Estheriidæ), having a bivalve carapace, numerous body-segments, and the foliaceous appendages of typical phyllopods. L. brachyura is an example. The males of these water-fleas may be even more numerous than the females, contrary to the rule among related forms. See Limnadiidæ, and cut under Estheriidæ.

limning (lim'ning), n. [Verbal n. of limn, v.] 1. The act of delineating, as by means of pencil or brush.—2. That which is limned; a delineation, literally or figuratively. [Rare.]

There is nothing in either of the former two [panels with the portraits of the king and queen] which could not have been copied by a Fleming from a limning made in Scotland years before. Athenæum, No. 3199, p. 221.

limnite[1] (lim'nīt), n. [⟨ Limn(æa) + -ite[2].] A fossil of the genus Limnæa. Also lymnite.

limnite[2] (lim'nīt), n. [⟨ Gr. λιμνή, bog.] Yellow ocher or brown iron ore, containing more water than limonite. It consists of oxid of iron 74.8 and water 25.2.

Limnobates (lim-nob'ạ-tēz), n. [NL. (Burmeister, 1835), ⟨ Gr. λίμνη, a pool, lake, marsh, + βάτης, one that treads, ⟨ βαίνειν, walk, step.] The typical genus of Limnobatidæ, containing such species as L. lineata of the United States.

Limnobatidæ (lim-nō-bat'i-dē), n. pl. [NL. (given by Fieber, 1861), ⟨ Limnobates + -idæ.] A family of aquatic Heteroptera, represented by the genus Limnobates alone, whose species are commonly found in ponds in Europe and North America. These water-bugs have the head horizontal, as long as the thorax, with the antennæ inserted at the end of the widened front, the first joint stoutest and shortest, the third longest.

Limnochares (lim-nok'ạ-rēz), n. [NL., ⟨ Gr. λιμνοχαρής, delighting in marshes (epithet of a frog), ⟨ λίμνη, a pool, lake, marsh, + χαίρειν, rejoice, delight (⟩ χάρις, delight).] 1. A genus of water-mites or aquatic acarids of the family Hydrachnidæ, or giving name to the Limnocharidæ. Latreille, 1796.—2. A genus of heteropterous insects: same as Hydrometra.

Limnocharidæ (lim-nō-kar'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., ⟨ Limnochares + -idæ.] A family of tracheate Acarina, with the skeleton composed of sclerites embedded in a soft skin, palpi raptorial, stigmata near the rostrum, legs of six or more joints, fitted for crawling organs, and habits of life wholly or partly aquatic.

Limnocochlides† (lim-nō-kok'li-dēz), n. pl. [NL. (Latreille, 1825), ⟨ Gr. λίμνη, a pool, lake, marsh, + κοχλίς (κοχλιδ-), a small snail: see Cochlides.] A family of pulmoniferous gastropods, combining the Limnacea and Auriculacea.

Limnocyon (lim-nos'i-on), n. [NL., ⟨ Gr. λίμνη, a pool, lake, marsh, + κύων, a dog.] A genus of fossil carnivorous mammals from the Eocene of America, belonging or related to the Hyænodontidæ. O. C. Marsh, 1872.

Limnohyidæ (lim-nō-hī'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., ⟨ Limnohyus + -idæ.] A family of extinct Eocene hoofed quadrupeds of suilline character, founded by Marsh for the reception of the genus Limnohyus.

Limnohyus (lim-nō-hī'us), n. [NL., ⟨ G. λίμνη, a pool, lake, marsh, + ὗς, a pig, hog (= L. sus = E. sow[2]).] The typical genus of Limnohyidæ. O. C. Marsh, 1872.

Limnophagæ (lim-nof'ạ-jē), n. pl. [NL., fem. pl. of limnophagus: see limnophagous.] See Cyprinodontidæ limnophagæ, under Cyprinodontidæ.

limnophagous (lim-nof'ạ-gus), a. [⟨ NL. limnophagus, ⟨ Gr. λίμνη, a pool, lake, marsh (confused with L. limus, mud), + φαγεῖν, eat.] Mud-eating; specifically, of or pertaining to the Cyprinodontidæ limnophagæ.

Limnophila (lim-nof'i-lạ), n. pl. [NL. (Hartmann, 1821), neut. pl. of limnophilus: see limnophilous.] A division of pulmoniferous gastropods, containing the fresh-water basommatophorous forms: same as Hygrophila[2].

Limnophilidæ (lim-nō-fil'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., ⟨ Limnophilus + -idæ.] A family of trichopterous neuropterous insects, or caddis-flies, typified by the genus Limnophilus, having the maxillary palps of the male three-jointed, scarcely pubescent, and like those of the female. The habits of the larvæ vary; some live in rapid streams, others in standing water, and others in moss at the roots of trees. Their cases are always free. The group is nearly confined to the temperate and boreal regions of the northern hemisphere.

limnophilous (lim-nof'i-lus), a. [⟨ NL. limnophilus, ⟨ Gr. λίμνη, a pool, lake, marsh, + φίλος, loving.] Fond of ponds or pools, or living in them: said of various animals, especially mollusks and insects.

Limnophilus (lim-nof'i-lus), n. [NL.: see limnophilous.] 1. The typical genus of Limnophilidæ, having the anterior wings mostly narrow, with straight costa and truncate apical margin. It is abundantly represented in Europe, North America, and Asia by species which extend far north and mostly inhabit still water. Given in this form by Burmeister, 1839, after Limnephilus of Leach, 1817.

2. A genus of reptiles. Fitzinger, 1843.

Limnoria (lim-nō'ri-ạ), n. [NL. (Leach, 1815), ⟨ Gr. Λιμνώρεια, in myth. a daughter of Nereus and Doris, ⟨ λίμνη, a pool, lake, marsh, sea.] The typical genus of Limnoriidæ. L. lignorum or terebrans is the common gribble, a minute isopod highly injurious to submerged woodwork.

Limnoriidæ (lim-nō-rī'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., ⟨ Limnoria + -idæ.] A family of isopods represented by the genus Limnoria; the gribbles. By means of their trenchant mandibles they eat their way into submerged wood, and are numerous enough in many waters to do great damage to wharves and shipping on both coasts of America and on European coasts.

Limnospiza (lim-nō-spī'zạ), n. [⟨ Gr. λίμνη, a pool, lake, marsh, + σπίζα, a finch.] A genus of fringilline birds: same as Embernagra.

Limodoreæ (lī-mō-dō'rē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Bentham and Hooker, 1833), ⟨ Limodorum + -eæ.] A subtribe of orchidaceous plants of the tribe Neottieæ, based on the Limodorum of Richard (not of Linnæus). Since the latter is a synonym, the name is no longer applicable.

Limodorum (lī-mō-dō'rum), n. [NL. (Linnæus, 1753), ⟨ L. limodoron, ⟨ Gr. λιμόδορον, λειμόδωρον, a wild plant, not identified.] A genus of terrestrial orchids. They are hardy tuberous-rooted herbs with purplish flowers in terminal spikes or racemes. Five species are known, all natives of North America and ranging from Newfoundland to Minnesota and southward to Missouri, Alabama, and Florida. Two species, L. tuberosum and L. multiflorum, are sometimes cultivated.

Limoges enamel. See enamel.

limont, n. An obsolete form of lemon.

Limonia (lī-mō'ni-ạ), n. [NL. (Linnæus), ⟨ F. limon, ⟨ Pers. līmūn, the lemon, citron: see lemon.] A genus of spiny shrubs from tropical Asia, belonging to the family Rutaceæ, tribe Aurantieæ. They are distinguished by having flowers with a 4- or 5-lobed calyx and from 8 to 10 stamens. The leaves are compound, with from 3 to 8 leaflets. The Javanese employ the extremely acid pulp of the fruits of Limonia Limonia (L. acidissima of Linnæus, 1762) as a substitute for soap, and on the coast of Malabar they are used medicinally. This species is sometimes called the musk-deer plant. L. alata is a small tree of India and Ceylon, and L. Schweinfurthii is a native of central Africa.

limonin (lim'ō-nin), n. [⟨ NL. limonum (F. limon), lemon, + -in[2].] A bitter crystallizable matter ($C_{42}H_{50}O_{13}$) found in the seeds of oranges, lemons, etc.

limonite (lī'mō-nīt), n. [= F. limonite; as Gr. λειμών, a marshy meadow, a meadow, + -ite[2].] An important iron ore which is found earthy, concretionary, or mammillary and fibrous. Its brownish-yellow streak distinguishes it from hematite. It forms the bog-iron of existing marshes. Its color varies from dark brown to ocher-yellow. It consists of sesquioxid of iron 85.6 and water 14.4. Also called brown hematite and brown iron ore.

limonitic (lī-mō-nit'ik), a. [⟨ limonite + -ic.] Consisting of limonite, or resembling it in appearance.

Limosa (lī-mō'sạ), n. [NL., ⟨ L. limosa, fem. of limosus, muddy: see limous.] A genus of wading birds of the family Scolopacidæ, having the bill a little recurved; the godwits. They are among the largest of the family, and resemble curlews, but the bill is not decurved. L. ægocephala is the common black-tailed godwit; L. hæmastica is the Hudsonian godwit; L. fedoa is the great marbled godwit. There are other species. See godwit.

Bar-tailed Godwit (Limosa lapponica).

limose (lī'mōs), a. [⟨ L. limosus, muddy: see limous.] Same as limous.

Limosella (lī-mō-sel'ạ), n. [NL. (Linnæus, 1753), so called from their place of growth, ⟨ L. limus, mud.] A genus of small creeping or floating herbs of the family Scrophulariaceæ and tribe Gratioleæ, characterized by having the leaves in clusters, the calyx 5-toothed, and the 4 stamens with the anthers confluently 1-celled. There are about 6 species, found throughout the warm and temperate regions of the earth. L. aquatica is known as mudwort or mudweed. Another species is L. tenuifolia, found in America in tidal mud from New Jersey northward on the Atlantic coast.

Limosina (lī-mō-sī'nạ), n. [NL. (Macquart, 1835), ⟨ L. limosus, muddy (see limose, limous), + -ina[1].] A genus of Muscidæ. Also called Coprina.

Limosinæ (lī-mō-sī'nē), n. pl. [NL., ⟨ Limosa + -inæ.] A subfamily of birds of the family Scolopacidæ; the godwits. G. R. Gray.

limosis (lī-mō'sis), n. [NL., ⟨ Gr. λιμός, hunger, + -osis.] In med., a depraved or morbidly ravenous appetite caused by disease.

Limosugæ (lī-mō-sū'jē), n. pl. [NL., ⟨ L. limus, mud, + sugere, suck.] In Merrem's classification of birds, a group of his Rusticolæ, including such birds as curlews, snipes, sandpipers, and plovers, and thus nearly coextensive with the Limicolæ of authors.

limoust (lī'mus), a. [⟨ ME. limous, ⟨ OF. limeux = Sp. Pg. It. limoso, ⟨ L. limosus, muddy, slimy, ⟨ limus, mud, slime: see lime[1].] Muddy; slimy; thick.

If water ther be lymous or enfecte
Admyx ion of salt wol it correcte.
Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 176.

That country . . . became a gained ground by the mud and limous matter brought down by the river Nilus.
Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., vi. 1.

limp[1] (limp), a. [Not found in ME.; appar. ⟨ AS. lemp*, in comp. lemphealt, lemphalt, earliest form laempihalt, glossing ML. lurdus (see lourd), appar. 'awkward,' but lit. 'lame,' ⟨ lemp* + healt, halt, lame; cf. Icel. lempinn, or lempiligr, pliable, gentle. The adj. is prob. connected with the verb limp[2], q. v. Cf. limber[1].] 1. Lacking stiffness or firmness; weak in fiber or texture; flexible; limber; flaccid: applied to things or persons.

The chub eats waterish, and the flesh of him is not firm, limp and tasteless. I. Walton, Complete Angler.

Limp linen betokens a desponding spirit.
T. Winthrop, Cecil Dreeme, iv.

Her verses on the bombardment of Copenhagen were . . . as limp and incoherent as Shelley's own of the same date. E. Dowden, Shelley, I. 103.

2. Lacking stability or firmness of character; inefficient; incapable.

A kind Providence furnishes the limpest personality with a little gum or starch in the form of tradition.
George Eliot, Middlemarch, I. 25.

Limp case. See case[2].

limp[1]†, v. i. [⟨ limp[1], a.] To be inadequate or unsatisfactory. Stanihurst.

limp[2] (limp), v. i. [Not found in ME. or AS.; = LG. lumpen = MHG. limphen, limp; cf. G. dial. lampen, hang down loosely, ⟩ lampecht, flaccid, limp; cf. mod. Icel. limpa, limpness, weakness; W. lleipr, flabby, llibin, limber, llipa, limp; perhaps ult. connected (as a nasalized form) with lap[2], Skt. √lamb, hang down. It can hardly be connected with LL. lepas (lepad-), < Gr. λεπάς (λεπαδ-), a limpet: see Lepas. Cf. limpin.] 1. A marine docoglossate gastropod with an open conical shell imperforate at the apex. The species mostly belong to the families Patellidæ and Acmæidæ; the best-known is Patella vulgata, the common limpet of northern Europe. This inhabits rocky coasts, and selects a site on intertidal rocks, which it uses as a resting-place and wears down into a cavity, making short excursions in search of food, which consists chiefly of algæ. Limpets are noted for sticking closely to rocks by means of their adhesive foot, which acts as a sucker, bringing considerable atmospheric pressure to bear upon their shells, which latter, moreover, fit tightly in consequence of the evenly rounded aperture. Large numbers are collected for fish-bait, and they are also used as food by the poor. See bonnet-limpet, keyhole-limpet, slipper-limpet.

He stuck like a limpet to a rock.
Scott, St. Ronan's Well, xxxi.

And on thy ribs the limpet sticks,
And in thy heart the scrawl shall play.
Tennyson, The Sailor Boy.

linchet (lin'chet), n. [Also lynchet; < linch[1] + -et.] A ridge or terrace seen on the slopes of the Chalk, Oölitic, and Liassic escarpments in various parts of England, especially in Bedfordshire, Hertfordshire, Wiltshire, and Somerset. The origin of the linchets has never been made entirely clear. It is probable that most of them are artificial constructions, and that they were made for convenience in cultivating the hill-slopes on which they occur. Also called linch. Used chiefly in the plural. [Local, Eng.]

Many terraces are still cultivated, but every farmer I have met with has assured me that there is now, and has been from time immemorial, a general desire to plough down the lynchets (as they are locally called), and that formerly their number was much greater than at present.
Mackintosh, Scenery of England and Wales, p. 89.

linch-hoop (linch'höp), n. [< linch-(pin) + hoop[1].] A ring on the spindle of a carriage-axle, through which the linch-pin passes.

linch-pin (linch'pin), n. [Also (simulating link[1]) dial. linkpin (early mod. E. also linpin, linpinne, lynpyn), with loss of the appar. pl. suffix -s; prop., as formerly, linspin, lit. 'axle-pin,' < linse (obs.), axle, + pin[1]: see linse and pin[1].] A pin inserted in the spindle of the axle of a vehicle to prevent the wheel from slipping off. Also axle-pin.

> But if the rogue have gone a cup too far,
> Left out his linchpin, or forgot his tar,
> It [a carriage] suffers interruption.
> Cowper, Progress of Error, l. 441.

Linckia (ling'ki-ä), n. [NL., named after the German naturalist J. H. Linck (1674–1734).] The typical genus of Linckiidæ. Nardo, 1834.

Linckiidæ (ling-kī'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Linckia + -idæ.] A family of starfishes, of the order Asteroidea, whose skeleton is composed of rounded or elliptical ossicles, either contiguous or united by rods. There are no spines, the body being smooth or only granular. L. guildingi inhabits Florida and the West Indies; L. unifascialis ranges from California to Peru. Also Linckiadæ.

Lincoln green. See green[1].

Lincoln's finch. See finch[1].

Lincolnshire cheese. See cheese[1].

lincture (lingk'tūr), n. [< ML. linctura*, < L. lingere, pp. linctus, lick; cf. Gr. λείχειν, lick: see lick[1].] A medicine to be taken by licking or sucking; a substance of the consistence of honey, used for coughs, etc.

> Confections, treacle, mithridate, eclegmes, or linctures, etc. Burton, Anat. of Mel., p. 371.

linctus (lingk'tus), n. [NL. linctus, a licking, < L. lingere, pp. linctus, lick: see lincture.] Same as lincture.

lind[1] (lind; formerly and prob. still dial. also līnd), n. [< ME. lind, linde, lynde, < AS. lind, also linde = D. linde = MLG. linde = OHG. linta, MHG. G. linde = Icel. Sw. Dan. lind, lind, linden (in AS. also a shield, as made of lind); prob. connected with lind[2], lithe. G. dial. lind, bast, Icel. lindi, girdle (orig. of bast), are derived from the name of the tree. Cf. linden. Hence by corruption line[4], lime[2].] Same as linden, 1. [Obsolete or local.]

> Be ay of chiere as light as leef on lynde.
> Chaucer, Clerk's Tale, L'Envoy, l. 34.

> Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 21.

lind-coal†, n. [ME. lyndecole.] Charcoal made of the wood of the linden-tree: as, "half an unce of lyndecole," MS. Soc. Antiq. 101, f. 76. ★(Halliwell.) linden (lin'den), a. and n. [Formerly also lynden; < ME. linden, < AS. linden (= G. linden), of the lind, < lind, lind, + -en: see lind[1] and -en[2]. As a noun the word is modern, being, like aspen, orig. only adj.] I.† a. Of the linden.

II. n. 1. A tree of the genus Tilia; the lime-tree. The common European linden is T. Europæa. An oil, used by perfumers, is distilled from its flowers. The American linden is T. Americana, and is also called basswood, bee-tree, etc.

> The linden broke her ranks and rent
> The woodbine wreaths that bind her,
> And down the middle, buzz! she went
> With all her bees behind her.
> Tennyson, Amphion.

2. A shield made of linden-wood; any shield: a modern use, translating the Anglo-Saxon lind, used poetically for a shield. See shield.

> The shields placed in the graves were the ordinary lindens, of which no part commonly remains but the metal-boss handle. Hewitt, Ancient Armor, I. 78.

Silver-leafed linden, Tilia argentea, of Hungary.

linden-tree (lin'den-trē), n. Same as lind[1], linden.

Lindera (lin'dėr-ä), n. [NL., named after John Linder, a Swedish botanist of the early part of the 18th century.] A name given by Thunberg in 1783 to Benzoin, a genus of lauraceous trees or shrubs having diœcious flowers surrounded by involucres, and often nine stamens having two-celled anthers. There are about 7 species, found in North America and in eastern Asia as far as Japan. Benzoin Benzoin of North America, called spice-bush, wild allspice, and benjamin-bush, has a pleasant aromatic scent and taste, especially its bark and berries.

lindo (lin'dō), n. [NL., < Sp. Pg. It. lindo, fine, beautiful, pretty.] One of the brilliantly colored thick-billed tanagers of South America; a bullfinch tanager of the genus Euphonia.

lind-tree†, n. [ME. linde-tre, lyn-tre; < lind[1] + tree.] Same as lind[1], linden-tree. Turner, Herbal.

line[1] (līn), n. [< ME. line, lin, lyn, < AS. līn, flax, linen, = OS. OFries. līn = D. lijn = MLG. līn = OHG. MHG. līn, G. lein = Icel. līn = Sw. Dan. lin, flax, = Goth. lein, linen (not recorded in sense of 'flax'); cf. OF. F. lin = Sp. It. lino = Pg. linho, < L. līnum = Gr. λίνον = OBulg. linŭ = Lith. linai = Ir. līn, lion = W. llin = Bret. lin, flax (in L., LGr., etc., also linen, a linen garment, a thread, line, cord, rope, etc.); not found in Skt., etc. It is probable but not certain that the Teut., Slav., etc., forms are derived from the L. or Gr. Hence (from AS. līn) linen, lint[1], linseed, linnet[1], etc., and ult. (from L. linum) E. line[2], line[3], etc.] 1. Flax. [In the general sense obsolete or provincial.]

> He dronk never cidre ne wyn, > Ne never wered clooth of lyn.
> Cursor Mundi. (Halliwell.)

Specifically, in technical use—(a) Flax of the longer and fine staple, separated from the shorter by the hackle and prepared for spinning. (b) A hat-makers' pad or brush, now usually of padded velvet, for smoothing the nap of hats.

2†. Cloth of flax; linen.

> Throughout all parts of Fraunce they weaue line and make sailes thereof. Holland, tr. of Pliny, xix. 1.
>
> Nor anie weaver, which his worke doth boast,
> In dieper, in damaske, or in lyne.
> Spenser, Muiopotmos, l. 364.
>
> Little he was, and ever wore a breastplate made of linne.
> Chapman, Iliad, ii. 459.

★3†. Linen apparel; apparel generally.

line[2] (līn), n. [(a) < ME. line, lyne, a cord, a net, a snare, < AS. līne = D. lijn = OHG. līna, MHG. līne, G. leine = Icel. līna = Dan. line = Sw. lina, a cord, rope; mixed with (b) ME. line, lyne, ligne, < OF. ligne, F. ligne = Pr. ligna = Sp. línea = Pg. linha = It. linea = D. MHG. G. Sw. Dan. linie, a line (mark), < L. līnea, also līnia, a linen thread, a string, line, feature, outline, line of descent, etc., orig. fem. of līneus (= Gr. λίνεος, λινοῦς), of flax, linen, < līnum, flax, linen: see line[1]. It is uncertain whether the words of the first group (a) are Teut. derivatives of the Teut. form line[1], or are borrowed or adapted from L. līnum, flax, linen, a linen thread, cord, rope, or, less prob., like the words of the second group (b), from the deriv. līnea. The two groups are entirely confused in E.: see line[1].] 1. A thread, string, cord, or small rope of any kind, especially one designed for some particular use, as a fishing-line, measuring-line, clothes-line, a bow*line*, a hauling-line, etc.

> Sowe hem [inula] by a lyne other a threed.
>
> Who hath laid the measures thereof, if thou knowest? or who hath stretched the line upon it? Job xxxviii. 5.
> The lines were out upon the poles—they were painted green and were square—and on the lines hung half the family linen. W. Besant, Fifty Years Ago, p. 86.

Specifically—(a) A cord used as a guide or marker in stonework or carpentry; a chalk-line or marking-line. (b) pl. A lot or portion marked off by or as by a measuring-line; hence, fortune; condition.

> The lines are fallen unto me in pleasant places.
> Ps. xvi. 6.
>
> The old seaman paused a moment. "It is hard lines for me," he said, "to leave your honour in tribulation."
> Scott, Redgauntlet, ch. iii.

(c) pl. The reins or thongs by which one guides a horse in driving. [U. S.]

2. Anything which resembles a thread or string in tenuity and extension.

> Yon gray lines
> That fret the clouds are messengers of day.
> Shak., J. C., ii. 1. 103.

Specifically—(a) A thread-like mark, as one made with a pen, pencil, or graving-tool; a mark having length with little appreciable breadth; a stroke; a score. (b) In musical notation: (1) One of the horizontal strokes or marks that constitute the staff. The usual staff consists of five such lines, that for Gregorian music of four, while larger numbers of lines have also been used. The lines are numbered from below upward. The lines and the spaces between them are collectively called degrees. The pitches to which the several degrees are assigned depend upon the clef and the signature placed at the head of the staff. When it is necessary temporarily to increase the compass of the staff above or below, added or leger lines are used, which are numbered up or down from the staff proper. See notation, staff, and leger[2]. (2) A short dash or stroke used in figured bass to indicate that a tone of a previous chord is to be continued without regard to its harmonic connection into a second chord. See figured bass, under bass[3]. (3) A wavy horizontal mark, preceded by the letters 8va, added above or below a passage to indicate that it is to be played an octave above or below the pitch at which it is written. The end of such a transposition is indicated by the word loco, 'in place,' or simply by the termination of the line. (4) A wavy vertical mark to the left of the notes of a chord, to indicate that the chord is to be played arpeggio. (c) A seam or furrow on the face or hands. Such seams in the hands are the basis of palmistry. See phrases below.

> And do whate'er thou wilt, swift-footed Time, . . .
> O, carve not with thy hours my love's fair brow,
> Nor draw no lines there with thine antique pen.
> Shak., Sonnets, xix.

3. In math.: (a) The limit of a surface; a length without breadth. These definitions, cited as well known by Aristotle, may be more precisely expressed thus: a part or the whole of the intersection of two surfaces; a continuum of points extended in only one dimension at each point. (b) In higher geom., a right line, ray, or axis; a curve of the first order. This use of the word is inaccurate but common, and can give rise to no inconvenience, since a line in sense (a) is usually called a curve in higher geometry, except a broken line, which is not considered.

4. Outline; contour; lineament; configuration: as, a ship of fine lines.

> The lines of my body are as well drawn as his.
> Shak., Cymbeline, iv. 1. 10.

5. A limit; division; boundary.

> The Hellenes always drew a sharp line between themselves and the barbarians, a term by which they designated all non-Hellenic people.
> W. E. Hearn, Aryan Household, p. 262.

6. A row; a continued series or rank: as, a line of trees or of buildings.

> We past long lines of northern capes.
> Tennyson, The Voyage.

(a) A straight row of letters and words between two margins: as, a page of thirty lines.

> And yet I would I had o'erlooked the letter. . . .
> Lo, here in one line is his name twice writ.
> Shak., T. G. of V., i. 2. 123.

(b) In poetry, a succession of feet (colon or period), consisting of words written or printed in one row; a verse. A line or verse is no definite prosodic group of feet, but may consist of a single colon or of two cola, the ordinary width of a page or column generally limiting its length. Short verses or cola are sometimes printed as single lines, or combined in pairs to constitute one line. The name line is sometimes extended to verses slightly exceeding the printed line in length, but marked by indention and want of initial capital as one verse. In ancient prosody a line (versus, στίχος) was conventionally determined to be a dicolic meter or period, or a monocolic period of eighteen or more moræ in magnitude. A shorter period was called a colon or a comma. Abbreviated l.

> Waller was smooth; but Dryden taught to join
> The varying verse, the full resounding line.
> Pope, Imit. of Horace, II. i. 268.

Hence—(c) pl. Any piece of writing, as a letter, or an actor's part in the dialogue of a play; specifically, a short or occasional poem, or poetry in general.

> Com'st thou with deep premeditated lines,
> With written pamphlets studiously devised?
> Shak., 1 Hen. VI., iii. 1. 2.

(d) A short letter—one as it were consisting of only a line of writing; a note: as, I received a line from my friend. (e) pl. Same as marriage lines. [Colloq.]

> "How should a child like you know that the marriage was irregular?" "Because I had no lines!" cries Caroline. . . . "And our maid we had then said to me, 'Miss Carry, where's your lines? And it's no good without.' And I knew it wasn't." Thackeray, Philip, xii.

(f) A row or rank of soldiers drawn up with an extended front: distinguished from column. (g) A disposition of ships at regular intervals, either at anchor or under way. See line of battle. (h) pl. A punishment in English schools, consisting in requiring the student to commit a certain number of lines of Latin or Greek verse to memory.

7. A continuous or connected series, as of progeny or kin, descending from a common progenitor: as, a line of kings; the male line.

> He
> From John of Gaunt doth bring his pedigree, > Being but fourth of that heroic line.
> Shak., 1 Hen. VI., ii. 5. 78.

8. A series of public conveyances, as coaches, steamers, packets, and the like, passing to and fro between places with regularity: as, a line of ships to New Zealand; the Cunard line.—9. A railroad, or a continuous part of a railroad: as, a main line, branch line, through line.—10. A telegraph-wire between stations, forming with them the circuit.—11. In com.: (a) An order given to an agent or commercial traveler for goods. (b) The goods received upon such order. (c) The stock on hand of any particular class of goods.—12. In her., the division or demarcation between a bearing and the field, or between one bearing and another when one is charged upon the other. The ordinaries and subordinaries are the bearings whose lines are most commonly varied. See dancetté, dovetailed, embattled, engrailed, indented, invected, nebulé, ragulé, and undé or wavy.

13. In fort.: (a) A trench or rampart. (b) pl. A series of field-works, either continuous or with intervals. Wilhelm, Mil. Dict.—14. Milit., in the British army, the regular infantry, as distinguished from cavalry, artillery, militia, etc. (in some cases including the ordinary regiments of cavalry); in the United States army, the infantry, cavalry, artillery, and engineer troops of the regular army. The combatant officers in the navy are called officers of the line, as distinguished from the non-combatants, or officers of the staff. Thus, the line officers are admirals, commodores, captains, commanders, lieutenant-commanders, lieutenants, lieutenants (junior grade), ensigns, and midshipmen. Mates, boatswains, and gunners are also line officers, but not in the line of promotion.

It is now generally conceded that the law contemplates that the fighting portion of the army, as cavalry, artillery, infantry, and engineers, . . . constitutes the line of the army. Wilhelm, Mil. Dict.

15. The course in which anything proceeds or which any one takes; direction given or assumed: as, a line of policy or of argument; to mark out a line of travel or of conduct; to pursue a certain line of business or of art.

If I chance to make an excursion into the matters of the Commonwealth, it is not out of curiosity, or busy-bodinesse to be medling in other men's lines.
Fuller, Church Hist., II. ix. 23.

I am now sending back to Belle Plain all my wagons for a fresh supply of provisions and ammunition, and propose to fight it out on this line if it takes all summer.
U. S. Grant, To Gen. Halleck, May 11, 1864.

16. A unit of length, the twelfth of an inch, or sometimes the tenth of an inch. As a subdivision of an English inch it was never common and is now obsolete. The Paris line, a unit formerly much used throughout Europe, is the twelfth part of a French inch (système ancien), equal to 0.0888 of an English inch, or 2.256 millimeters. But from 1812 to 1844 the line of the système usuel was 2.231 millimeters.

17. The equinoctial line; the equator.

Twenty of the dog-days now reign in's nose; all that stand about him are under the line.
Shak., Hen. VIII., v. 4. 44.

Abdominal line. See abdominal.—Absorption-lines. See absorption.—Aclinic, adiabatic, agonic, Alcmanian, atmospheric, basi-alveolar, basic, etc., line. See the adjectives.—Asymptotic line, a curve upon a surface the envelop of normal sections, having infinite radii of curvature. Not to be confounded with asymptotical lines.—Basiobregmatic line, the line joining the basion and bregma.—Becket-line, a short piece of rope used to form a becket or bight on a longer or larger line, such, for example, as is used in rigging a trawl.—Breeding in the line. See breeding.—Broken, bulkhead, cardiac line. See the qualifying words.—Casting-line, a line, from 7 to 9 feet long, made of several gut-lengths, attached to the rod-line in angling, and having the drops fastened to it.—Check-line, a line attached to a fishing-line fastened to an outrigger, by which the fishing-line is drawn in to the boat without disturbing the outrigger.—Circular, concluding, contingent, etc., line. See the adjectives.—Curved line, a line no part of which is straight.—Curved line of the ilium, inferior, middle, and superior, the lines on the dorsum ilii, marking off the origins of the glutæi muscles. Also called linea glutæa.—Curved lines of the occipital bone, the curved lines on the outer surface of the occipital bone: a superior, median, and inferior are distinguished. Also called lineæ nuchæ.—Cutting-down line. See cutting.—Cyclifying, dimidiate, etc., line. See the adjectives.—Datum-line. See datum.—Directed right line, dislocated line, dotted line. See direct, dislocate, dot[1].—Doble's line. See membrane.—Double line, in entom., a line formed of two generaliy unequal lines which are close together and parallel.—Equinoctial line, the celestial equator; also, the terrestrial equator: in the latter sense commonly called the line.—Equipotential, focal, full line. See the adjectives.—Facial line of Camper. See craniometry.—Fiducial line. (a) The straight edge of the alidade of a plane-table. (b) The initial line of a graduated circle or vernier. (c) Any line which is intended to be taken as a standard straight line.—Fraunhofer's lines. See spectrum.—Frontal minimum line, the shortest horizontal line drawn between the temporal crests of the frontal bone.—Generating line. See generate.—Geodesic, gingival, etc., line. See the adjectives.—Geodetic line, a curve upon a surface any arc of which between points not too remote is the shortest path on that surface between those points. The osculating plane of a geodetic line at any point is there normal to the surface.—Geometrical line†, an algebraic curve.—Gunter's line. (a) A logarithmic line on Gunter's scale, used in performing the multiplication and division of numbers mechanically by means of dividers. Also called line of lines and line of numbers. (b) A sliding scale corresponding to logarithms, for performing these operations by inspection without dividers. Also called Gunter's sliding rule.—Hard lines. See def. 1 (b).—Helispherical line. Same as loxodromic line.—Horizontal line. See horizontal.—Hour-lines, in dialing, the common sections of the hour circles of the sphere with the plane of the dial.—Iliopectineal line, in anat. See iliopectineal.—Imaginary, isochimal, etc., line. See the adjectives.—Index of a line. See index.—Initial line. See polar coördinates in a plane, under coördinate.—Isoclinal, isodynamic, isogonic lines. See the adjectives.—Isophasal line, a line drawn in the plane of the complex variable through all values which correspond to values of the function having one value of the argument.—Isotimal line, a line drawn in the plane of the complex variable through all values which correspond to values of the function having one modulus.—Lateral line, in ichth., a longitudinal line along each side of many fishes, marked by the structure or color of the skin, or by both. It consists of a row of tubes or pores, mostly on scales, extending from the head to or toward the tail. The pores are the ducts of muciferous glands whose product is excreted on the sides of the fish. The modifications of the lateral line are innumerable, and often afford classificatory characters. Thus, the line is more or less nearly parallel with the outline of the back in most acanthopterygian fishes, and with the outline of the belly in cyprinoids and many other malacopterygian fishes. The line is well shown in the cuts under caplin, haddock, and hake (which see).—Leger line. See leger[2].—Lesser line. See lesser.—Line abreast. See abreast.—Line and level†, a plumb-line; hence, rule; method.

This decencie is therfore the line & leuell for al good makers to do their busines by.

We steal by line and level. Shak., Tempest, iv. 1. 239.

Line at infinity, the aggregate of all points in any plane at an infinite distance from any given origin. It is called the line at infinity because represented by a line in a perspective projection; for in such a projection every straight line is projected into a straight line, and no other curve or locus is so projected, generally speaking.—Line coördinates. See line-coördinates.—Line drawing. See drawing.—Line geometry. See geometry.—Line of apsides. (a) In anc. astron., the line through the perigee and apogee of a planet's orbit. (b) In mod. astron., the line through the perihelion and aphelion; the major axis of the orbit.—Line of ascent. See ascent.—Line of battle, the line formed by the ships of a fleet or by an army when or as when in readiness for action.—Line of bearing, a line formed by the ships of a fleet in which each ship bears by compass in a prescribed direction from the next ahead or astern or on either side.—Line of beauty, in art, a line of undulating curvature which, it has been maintained, must enter as a potent factor in all graceful combinations of line and form. Different artists have given it different forms, but it is most commonly considered as a curve of contrary flexure resembling a very slender elongated letter S.—Line of center, in mach.: (a) A straight line joining the centers of two wheels in gear. E. H. Knight. (b) The dead line; that line in which a crank and the connecting-rod stand when their axes form a straight line.—Line of coincidence, collimation, counter-approach. See coincidence, etc.—Line of consanguinity, a family relationship between two persons: it is either descending (the relationship of a person to his descendant), ascending (the relationship of a person to his ancestor), or transversal (the relationship of a person to a descendant of one of his progenitors).—Line of curvature, a line traced upon any surface such that the normals at any two successive points meet one another. Through each point of every surface there are two lines of curvature which are perpendicular to each other.—Line of Daubenton. See craniometry.—Line of defense. See defense.—Line of dip, in geol., a line in the plane of a stratum, or part of a stratum, perpendicular to its intersection with a horizontal plane; the line of greatest inclination of a stratum to the horizon. See dip.—Line of direction. (a) See direction. (b) A line laid down in surveying; the bearing.—Line of distance. See distance.—Line of equilibrium, a curve every point on which is a point of equilibrium.—Line of fire, flotation, flow. See fire, etc.—Line of force. (a) A straight line through the point of application of a force and in the direction of its action. (b) A curve whose tangent everywhere coincides with the direction at the point of tangency of a force distributed through space. Maxwell, following a hint from Faraday, supposes these lines so drawn that the number per unit of area normal to them in the neighborhood of a point shall measure the intensity of the force at that point.—Line of health, or line of the liver (hepatic line), in palmistry, a line beginning at the wrist, near the line of life, and running upward to the base of the fourth finger.—Line of life, in palmistry, a line starting near the wrist, skirting the base of the thumb, and terminating between the thumb and the line of the head.—Line of lines, line of numbers. Same as Gunter's line (a).—Line of motion. (a) A curve imagined to be so drawn in a fluid that the direction at any point is that of the motion of the fluid at the same point; a line of flow. Lamb. (b) The path of a particle of a moving fluid. Basset.—Line of nodes. See node.—Line of Saturn, or line of fate, in palmistry, a line beginning near the wrist, and running up the middle of the hand toward the base of the second finger.—Line of spherical curvature, a line every point of which is an umbilic on the surface.—Line or curve of swiftest descent. Same as brachistochrone.—Line of the head, in palmistry, a line beginning between the thumb and forefinger, and extending across the central part of the palm of the hand, parallel to the line of the heart.—Line of the heart, in palmistry, a line passing across the hand, skirting the mounts of Mercury, Apollo, Saturn, and Jupiter.—Line of the sun or line of fortune, in palmistry, a line running upward to the base of the third finger.—Lines of level. See level[1].—Lines of operation (milit.), all lines of communication by which an army may reach an enemy's base of operations. A simple line of operations is one by which the divisions of an army are kept together, or within supporting distance of each other. The roads forming this line are nearly parallel, quite close together, and have no impassable obstructions between them. A double line of operations is one in which a divided army follows two sensibly parallel roads so far apart that the two sections of the army cannot be assembled upon the same day on the same field of battle. Double lines of operation may be either converging or diverging, according as they approach each other or draw wider apart as they advance. An accidental line of operations is adopted when an army is compelled to abandon the line of operations proposed in the original plan and take up another. A temporary line of operations (also called manœuver line) is one which deviates from the line of movement adopted in the general plan of the campaign. When the movement is completed the general line is resumed. An interior line of operations is one which lies between the double lines of an enemy, and enables the army following it to fall upon and defeat the parts of the enemy's army in succession. In such a case the double lines are said to be exterior lines.—Logistic, loxodromic, magistral, etc., line. See the adjectives.—Marriage lines, a marriage certificate. [Colloq., Eng.]—Mason and Dixon's line, the boundary between Pennsylvania on the north and Maryland on the south (lat. 39° 43′ N.), partly surveyed by Charles Mason and Jeremiah Dixon between 1763 and 1767, and afterward completed by others: celebrated before the extinction of slavery as a line of demarcation between the free and the slave States.—Mechanical line†, a transcendental curve.—Medial, median, meridian, etc., line. See the adjectives.—Multiple lines. See multiple.—Naso-alveolar line, nasobasilar line. See craniometry.—Natural line of sight. See sight.—Nélaton's line, in surg., a line drawn from the anterior superior spine of the ilium to the most prominent part of the tuberosity of the ischium. In the course of this line lie the center of the acetabulum and the summit of the trochanter major of the femur.—Neumann lines. See meteorite.—Nodal, objective, occult, etc., lines. See the adjectives.—Oblique line of the lower jaw, an oblique line beginning below the mental foramen and passing upward and backward to the anterior border of the coronoid process.—Officer of the line. See def. 14.—Organs of the lateral lines, in ichth. See mucous canals, under mucous.—Parasternal line, the line drawn on the surface of the chest perpendicularly downward from the junction of the middle and inner thirds of the clavicle.—Polar line, the intersection of consecutive normal planes to a skew curve. This is the name given by Monge (droit polaire), but Mannheim's axis of curvature is preferable.—Popliteal line, a line passing downward and inward on the upper part of the posterior surface of the tibia; it gives origin to the soleus muscle.—Quadrate line, in anat., the linea quadrati (which see, under linea).—Redan line, a series of redans connected by straight curtains. Mahan, Milit. Engineering.—Right line. See right.—Ship of the line. See ship.—Shotted line, a fishing-line to which split shot are attached as sinkers. Shotted casting-lines are also used in special cases for fly-fishing.—Spiric line, a bicircular quartic having an axis of symmetry. Such a curve is a plane section of an anchor-ring, or torus, and indeed of four different ones, though all may be imaginary.—Stream-line, in hydrodynamics: (a) A line of motion in a fluid whose motion is steady. Stokes. (b) The actual path of a particle or molecule in a fluid mass.—Supracondylar lines of the femur, the two lines into which the linea aspera divides below.—Telegraph-line, telephone-line. See telegraphy, telephony.—Temporal inferior line, the lower of the two curving ridges which pass back from the external angular process of the frontal bone over the frontal and parietal bones. Also called lower temporal ridge.—Temporal lines, the two curving ridges which pass back from the external angular process of the frontal bone over the frontal and parietal bones. The upper, the superior temporal line or upper temporal ridge, is the line of attachment of the temporal fascia, while the lower marks the upper boundary of the attachment of the temporal muscle.—The line. Same as equinoctial line.—To draw the line. See draw.—To drop a line. See drop.—To give line. See give[1], v. t.—To give one line, to allow one apparent freedom or opportunity of action, with a view to securing an ultimate advantage: in allusion to the angler's playing of a hooked fish.

Wherefore should the Ministers give them so much line for shifts and delays? Milton, Reformation in Eng., i.

It's policy to give 'em line. Dickens, Hard Times, ii. 8.

To keep a line, in archery, to shoot in the vertical plane of the gold of the target.—To make even lines. See even[1].—To part a line, to break it, as when a whale runs so fast as to break the whale-line. Also to part a warp.—To sound a line, to go down when harpooned and carry the line with it: said of a whale.—To sound all line, to go down so far as to take out all the line from the boat: said of a whale.—To stop a line, to confine or fasten a rope, usually by means of a smaller one. Thus, to stop the line to the harpoon-staff is to fasten the line to the handle by passing one or more turns of ropeyarn around both line and pole, and confining the ends by knotting them together.—To wet one's line, to put one's fishing-line to use; to fish.—Trapezoid line, the line of attachment of the trapezoid ligament on the under side of the outer part of the clavicle.—Visual line. Same as visual axis (which see, under axis[1]).—Vortex-line, a curve imagined to be so drawn in a fluid that its direction is everywhere that of the instantaneous axis of molecular rotation at that point.—Wallace's line [so named after Alfred R. Wallace, who defined it], in zoögeog., a line assumed to separate the Indomalayan from the Austromalayan zoölogical region or faunal area. It passes between Borneo and Celebes, through the strait of Macassar, southward between Bali and Lombok, northeastward between Mindanao and Gilolo. This line divides the shallow waters of the Indomalayan region from the much deeper Austromalayan seas; and the character of the fauna is quite different on the two sides of it.—White line, in printing, a blank line; a blank space equal in depth to the space occupied by a line of reading in any given size of type.

line[2] (līn), v.; pret. and pp. lined, ppr. lining. [< F. ligner = Sp. linear = It. lineare (cf. D. lijnen, liniëren = G. liniren = Dan. liniere = Sw. liniera), line, < L. lineare, reduce to a straight line, ML. draw lines upon, < linea, a line: see line[2], n. In defs. 6, 7, the senses touch those of line[3], v.] I. trans. 1. To draw lines upon; mark with lines or thread-like strokes: said of some decorative processes, and also of the effects of age, fatigue, etc., on the human countenance.

Some wood engravers are but too apt to pride themselves on the delicacy of their lining, without considering whether it be well adapted to express their subject.
Chatto, Wood Engraving, p. 584.

The simple operation of lining the edge of a plate is executed by female hands. Art Journal, N. S., IX. 267.

2. To delineate; draw; paint. [Rare.]

All the pictures fairest lined
Are but black to Rosalind.
Shak., As you Like it, iii. 2. 97.

3. To give out, line by line; read one or two of the lines or strophes of (a metrical hymn) in public worship before singing. The custom of lining out the hymns originated at a time when printed books were scarce, and when congregational singing could be secured in no other way; it is now nearly unknown. The reading was done by the clerk, by a deacon, or by the officiating clergyman himself. In New England it was sometimes called deaconing. Usually with out.

In large coloured churches [in the South] it is still the practice to line out the hymns, because few of the congregation can read. Fortnightly Rev., N. S., XLIII. 861.

4. To measure, as land, with a line; fix the boundaries of. [Scotch.] —5. To bring into line or aline; hence, to arrange; marshal; employ in service.

No actor of American birth and training can be lined to this class of work. Philadelphia Times, March 21, 1886.

6. To place something in a line along; arrange something along and within for security or defense: as, to line works with soldiers.

Line and new repair our towns of war
With men of courage. Shak., Hen. V., ii. 4. 7.

Not feeble years, nor childhood stay'd, but all Alike impatient throng'd to line the wall.
Hoole, tr. of Ariosto's Orlando Furioso, xxxv.

The spears that line
Baronial halls the opprobrious insult feel.
Wordsworth, Eccles. Sonnets, i. 37.

7. See the quotation.

Cunning mules [when hobbled] . . . soon learn to lift both forefeet at a time and gallop off; hence they are lined, that is, the forefoot is tied to the hindfoot on the same side, so that the step is very much shortened and their gait reduced to a kind of pace.
S. De Vere, Americanisms, p. 131.

Lining out stuff, the operation of drawing lines on boarding or planking, to guide the cutting of it into thinner pieces.—To line bees, to track wild bees to their nests by following them in the line of their flight.—To line men (milit.), to dress or arrange a body of men so that they shall collectively form an even line or lines.

II. intrans. To fish with a line. [Rare, U. S.]

The squeteague is taken both by lining and seining.
★ J. V. C. Smith, Fishes of Massachusetts.

line[3] (līn), v. t.; pret. and pp. lined, ppr. lining. [< ME. linen, cover on the inside, double; prob. orig. double with linen, < line[1], linen: see line[1], n.] 1. To cover the inside of (some object, as a garment, a utensil, etc.) with some material other than that of which the object lined is made.

Coach with purple lin'd, and mitres on its side.
Cowper, Tirocinium, l. 369.

Hence, by extension—2. To fill the inside of; wad; stuff: as, to line a purse or a pocket with money.

What
If I do line one of their hands?
Shak., Cymbeline, ii. 3. 72.

By this rich purse, and by the twenty ducats
Which line it, I will answer for thy honesty.
Ford, Fancies, iii. 1.

No bridegroom's hand be mine to hold
That is not lined with yellow gold.
Whittier, Maid of Attitash.

3†. To cover; pad.

Their smoothed tongues are lyned all with guyle.
Gascoigne, Hearbes, Councill to Master Barthol. Withipoll.

Son of sixteen,
Pluck the lined crutch from thy old limping sire.
Shak., T. of A., iv. 1. 14.

4. To impregnate: said of animals.

He would with the utmost Diligence look for a Dog that upon all Accounts was of a good Breed, to line her, that he might not have a Litter of Mongrels.
N. Bailey, tr. of Colloquies of Erasmus, II. 160.

5†. To aid. [Rare.]

Whether he was combined
With those of Norway, or did line the rebel With hidden help and vantage.
Shak., Macbeth, i. 3. 112.

To line one's jacket. See jacket.

line[4]† (līn), n. An obsolete form of lind[1], lime[2].

linea (lin'ē-ä), n.; pl. lineæ (-ē). [L.: see ★line[2], n.] In zoöl. and anat., a line; a linear mark or trace, whether of impression or expression.—Linea alba, the white line, the median longitudinal line of connective tissue running from the pubis to the sternum.—Linea aspera, the rough line, a prominent longitudinal ridge on the back of the femur. It divides above into three lines running to the great trochanter, lesser trochanter, and spiral line, and below into two lines running to the inner and outer condyles.—Linea costoarticularis, a line marking the junction of the ribs with their cartilages, drawn from the sternoclavicular articulation to the tip of the eleventh rib.—Linea fusca, a median line of darker pigmentation extending upward from the pubis to the umbilicus or beyond, developed in pregnant women. Also called pigmented abdominal line.—Linea glutæa, posterior, anterior, and inferior respectively, the superior, middle, and inferior curved lines of the dorsum ilii.—Linea iliopectinæa, the iliopectineal line (which see, under iliopectineal).—Linea innominata, the brim of the true pelvis, formed by the promontory of the sacrum and the rounded angle between the upper and anterior surfaces of the lateral divisions of the first sacral vertebra, the iliopectineal line, and the upper border of the os pubis.—Linea lateralis, in ichth., the lateral line (which see, under line[2]).—Linea mylohyoidea, the mylohyoid ridge on the inner surface of the lower jawbone.—Linea nuchæ inferior, the line, curved, of occipital bone, inferior.—Linea nuchæ mediana, the external occipital protuberance, running in the middle line from the external occipital crest to the foramen magnum.—Linea nuchæ superior or suprema, the line, curved, of occipital bone, superior.—Linea parasternalis, a line drawn on the surface of the chest from the junction of the inner and middle thirds of the clavicle perpendicularly downward.—Linea quadrati, the line of insertion of the quadratus femoris muscle.—Linea semilunaris, the curved tendinous line on the outer border of the rectus muscle, extending from the cartilage of the eighth rib to the pubis. Also called linea Spigelii.—Linea splendens, the shining line, a median lengthwise band along the anterior surface of the pia mater of the spinal cord.—Lineæ transversæ. (a) Of the abdomen, the tendinous intersections in the course of the rectus muscle of the abdomen. (b) Of the fourth ventricle, the striæ acusticæ (which see, under stria).

Lineæ (lin'ē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (A. P. de Candolle, 1813), < Linum + -eæ.] A family of dicotyledonous choripetalous plants, the flax family, type genus Linum, of the order Geraniales. It has regular flowers, with imbricate sepals, and an entire ovary which is from three- to five-celled, usually with two ovules in each cell, having a fleshy albumen. The family embraces about 235 species, divided among 15 genera, which have been grouped under 4 tribes. They are herbs, rarely trees, usually with alternate leaves, and are widely dispersed throughout the world. The proper form of the name is Linaceæ (Dumortier, 1822).

lineage (lin'ē-āj), n. [Prop., as orig., linage (mod. pron. lī'nāj); the spelling lineage simulates line[2], lineal, etc., and the pron. has been altered to suit lineal, etc.; < ME. linage, lynage, lignage, < AF. OF. linage, F. lignage (cf. Pg. linhagem), lineage, < ligne, < L. linea, a line: see line[2], n.] Line of descent from an ancestor; hence, family; race; stock.

Of his lynage am I, and his ofspryng,
By verray ligne, as of the stok roial.
Chaucer, Knight's Tale, l. 693.

He was of the house and lineage of David. Luke ii. 4.

Believe me, he is well bred,
And cannot be but of a noble lineage.
Beau. and Fl., Wit without Money, i. 2.

Hither he brought a joyous dame,
Unknown her lineage or her name.
Scott, Rokeby, vi. 12.

=Syn. Genealogy, etc. (see pedigree), birth, extraction, ancestry, family, descent.

lineal (lin'ē-al), a. [= F. linéal = Sp. Pg. lineal = It. lineale, pertaining to a line, < L. linealis, < linea, a line: see line[2], n.] 1. Of or pertaining to a line or length; extending in a line; involving the single dimension of length: as, lineal measure; a lineal foot. [In the physical sense lineal and linear are often used interchangeably, but a differentiation is commonly made. Compare linear.]

Lineal walks immediately enveloped the slight scene.
Walpole, Anecdotes, IV. vii.

An inch is the smallest lineal measure to which a name is given. O. Gregory, Mathematics, p. 120.

2. Proceeding in a direct or unbroken line; hereditary; unbroken in course: distinguished from collateral: as, lineal descent; lineal succession.

The house of York,
From whence you spring by lineal descent.
Shak., 1 Hen. VI., iii. 1. 166.

3. Pertaining or relating to direct descent; hereditary in quality or character; having an ancestral basis or right.

The lineal glory of your royal house.
Shak., Rich. III., iii. 7. 121.

Millions shall spring from our loins, and trace back with lineal love their blood to ours.
R. Choate, Addresses, etc., p. 104.

4†. Allied by direct descent.

For only you are lineal to the throne. Dryden.

Lineal measure, warranty, etc. See the nouns.

lineality (lin-ē-al'i-ti), n. [< lineal + -ity.] The state of being lineal, or in the form of a line. Wright. [Rare.]

lineally (lin'ē-al-i), adv. In a lineal manner; in a direct line: as, one who is lineally descended from the Conqueror.

From whose race of old
She heard that she was lineally extract.
Spenser, F. Q., III. ix. 38.

lineament (lin'ē-a-ment), n. [< F. linéament = Sp. lineamiento = Pg. lineamento = It. lineamento, feature, < L. lineamentum, a line, feature, < lineare, reduce to a straight line, ML. draw lines upon: see line[2].] A feature or detail of a body or figure considered as to its outlines or contour; linear formation of a part, as in the human face; hence, a particular physical feature or characteristic; sometimes, a distinguishing characteristic or quality in general: used chiefly in the plural.

The lineaments of the body do disclose the disposition and inclination of the mind in general.
Bacon, Advancement of Learning, ii. 184.

Examine every married lineament,
And see how one another lends content.
Shak., R. and J., i. 3. 83.

line-and-line (līn'and-līn'), a. With edge exactly to edge: a term characterizing the adjustment of a slide-valve without lead: as, a line-and-line setting. See lead[1], n., 8.

The valve is supposed to be set without any lead, or line-and-line, as it is called, at full stroke. That is, the steam edges of the valve correspond with the steam edges of the part at the beginning of the stroke.
Forney, Locomotive, p. 237.

★linear (lin'ē-är), a. [= F. linéaire = Sp. Pg. linear = It. lineare, < L. linearis, belonging to a line, < linea, a line: see line[2], n. Cf. lineal.] 1. Of or pertaining to a line or lines; composed or consisting of lines: as, linear drawing; linear perspective.—2. Relating to length only; specifically, in math. and physics, involving measurement in one dimension only, or a sum of such measurements; involving only straight lines; unidimensional; of the first degree: as, linear numbers; linear measure. A plane is said to be a linear locus, because of the first order; expansion, if considered in one dimension only, the others being neglected, is termed linear expansion.

The linear expansion of metals heated between the freezing and boiling points of water varies from one to three parts in 1,000.
W. B. Carpenter, Energy in Nature, p. 49.

3. In bot., zoöl., and anat., like a line or thread; slender; very narrow and elongate: as, a linear leaf.—4. In pros., consisting in or pertaining to a succession of single verses all of the same rhythm and length; stichic: as, linear composition; "Paradise Lost" is linear in composition.—Linear algebra, a system of algebra in which every expression equals a linear expression in certain units.—Linear class of functions, a number of functions produced from one another by addition, by subtraction, and by multiplication by constants.—Linear coefficient of expansion. See coefficient.—Linear complex, congruence, content. See the nouns.—Linear demonstration†, a proof drawn from the consideration of a geometrical diagram, without the use of algebra or trigonometry.—Linear differential equation, an equation in which the differential coefficients and dependent variables are not multiplied into themselves or into one another: thus, is a linear partial differential equation.—Linear drawing. See drawing.—Linear dyadic. See dyadic.—Linear ensemble. See ensemble, 3.—Linear equation, in math., an equation of the first degree between two variables: so called because every such equation may be considered as representing a right line.—Linear function, a function resulting from the performance of the operations of addition, subtraction, and multiplication by constants upon the variables.—Linear geometry, group, integral, etc. See the nouns.—Linear heraldry, heraldry of the more elaborate sort, in which a number of ordinaries and their bearings are combined to produce varied escutcheons.—Linear numbers, in math., such numbers as have relation to length only, as a number which represents one side of a plane figure. If the plane figure is a square, the linear side is called a root.—Linear perspective, that branch of perspective which regards only the positions, magnitudes, and forms of the objects delineated: distinguished from aërial perspective, which considers also the variations of the light, shade, and color of objects, according to their different distances and the quantity of light which falls on them.—Linear problem, a problem that may be solved geometrically by the intersection of two right lines, or algebraically by an equation of the first degree.—Linear space, a unicursal space the points of which may be uniquely represented by value-systems of the coördinates, without the exception of any point-equations or loci-values.—Linear transformation, a transformation from one set of variables to another connected with them by linear equations.—Linear units, units of length.

linear-acute (lin'ē-är-a-kūt'), a. [< L. linearis, linear (see linear), + acutus, sharp: see acute.] In bot., narrow and very gradually tapering to a point, as a leaf; acuminate.

linear-ensate (lin'ē-är-en'sāt), a. [< L. linearis, linear (see linear), + ensis, a sword.] In bot., having the form of a long narrow sword.

linearity (lin-ē-ar'i-ti), n. [< linear + -ity.] The state or condition of being linear.

The linearity of the differential equation depends upon this physical fact, etc. Airy, Optics, § 12.

linear-lanceolate (lin'ē-är-lan'sē-ō-lāt), a. [< L. linearis, linear (see linear), + LL. lanceolatus, armed with a little lance or point: see lanceolate.] In bot., lanceolate and very slender; narrow and parallel-sided in the middle, and tapering to a slender base and an acute tip.

linearly (lin'ē-är-li), adv. In a linear manner; with lines.

linear-oblong (lin'ē-är-ob'lông), a. Oblong and very narrow.

lineate† (lin'ē-āt), v. t. [< L. lineatus, pp. of lineare, reduce to a straight line, ML. draw lines upon, < linea, a line: see line[2], v.] To draw; delineate. Davies.

Life to the life the Chessboord lineates.
Sylvester, Memorials of Mortalitie, st. 8.

lineate (lin′ē-āt), a. [< L. lineatus, pp.: see the verb.] Marked with lines, especially with longitudinal and more or less parallel lines: as, a lineate leaf. In describing sculpture, a surface is said to be lineate when it has fine elevated or depressed longitudinal lines more or less parallel and separated by regular intervals. Also lined.

lineated (lin′ē-ā-ted), a. Same as lineate.

lineation (lin-ē-ā′shọn), n. [< L. lineatio(n-), a drawing of a line, < lineare, pp. lineatus, reduce to a line: see lineate, v.] 1. A marking by lines; disposition or arrangement of lines.

The lineation of the nacreous surface may perhaps be thus accounted for. W. B. Carpenter, Micros., § 565.

2. In zoöl., one or more line-like marks on a surface; the appearance or form of a lineated surface: as, the lineation of the thorax of a fly.

There are in the horny ground two white lineations, with two of a pale red. Woodward.

3†. Mensuration. Halliwell (spelled liniation).

line-conch (līn′kongk), n. A large gastropod, Fasciolaria distans, marked by several black lines revolving on the whorls of the shell. [Florida.]

line-coördinate (līn′kō-ôr″di-nāt), n. One of a set of quantities, commonly three in a plane, or six in space, defining the position of a line. The ordinary line-coördinates are u, v, w, in the equation where x, y, z are the trilinear coördinates of a point in a plane. When these are taken as constant, while u, v, w are variable, the equation restricts a line to passing through that point, and any set of values of u, v, w define a line. The above equation determines the incidence of the point on the line, whether u, v, w or x, y, z, or both, be variable. The precise geometrical significance of the line-coördinates depends upon that of the point-coördinates. The six line-coördinates in space are generally termed ray-coördinates.

lined[1] (līnd), p. a. Same as lineate.

lined[2] (līnd), p. a. 1. Having a lining.—2. Impregnated. See line[3], v., 4.—3. Supplied with money. [Rare.]

I am given out to be better lined than it can appear to me report is a true speaker; I would I were really that I am delivered to be! Marry, what I have (be it what it will) I will assure upon my daughter at the day of my death. Fletcher (and another), Two Noble Kinsmen, ii. 1.

Lined gold. See gold.

line-density (līn′den″si-ti), n. The limiting ratio of the electricity on an element of the line to the length of that element when the element is diminished without limit. Clerk Maxwell, Elect. and Mag.

line-engraving (līn′en-grā″ving), n. 1. The process of engraving in lines: commonly synonymous with steel or copperplate engraving. See engraving.—2. An engraved plate or a print representing its subject chiefly or wholly by lines.

Drawings, both in crayon and black lead, line engravings, and etchings were within the compass of most people's purses. J. Ashton, Social Life in Reign of Queen Anne, II. 48.

line-equation (līn′ē-kwā″shọn), n. An equation between the coördinates of lines, these being usually tangents of a plane curve.

line-fish (līn′fish), n. A fish, such as the cod, haddock, and halibut, which is taken with the line: opposed to net-fish.

line-fisherman (līn′fish″er-mạn), n. One who fishes with hook and line; a hook-and-line man.

line-fishing (līn′fish″ing), n. The act or art of fishing with hook and line; angling: distinguished from net-fishing.

Lineidæ (li-nē′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Lineus + -idæ.] A family of rhynchocœlous turbellarians, typified by the genus Lineus; the sea-longworms, or marine nemerteans. They have an extremely long slender form, unarmed proboscis, elongated cephalic ganglion, and long slits on each side of the head.

lineiform (lin′ē-i-fôrm), a. [< L. linea, line, + forma, form.] Linear in form; linear.

line-integral (līn′in″tē-grạl), n. In math., the integral along any curve of a vector quantity distributed through space resolved along that curve. Thus, if the vector is a force, the line-integral is the work gained in passing over the curve.

linelet (līn′let), n. [< line[2] + -let.] A minute or very short line.

The peculiar arrangement of the leading lines (usually two) and train of linelets . . . is fully shown in the diagram. Nature, XXXIX. 370.

lineman (līn′mạn), n.; pl. linemen (-men). 1. A person who carries the line in surveying, etc.—2. One employed in duties relating to the line of a railroad, telegraph, or telephone; one who attends to keeping the parts of the line, as the rails, posts, wires, etc., in proper condition.—3. A line-fisherman.

linen (lin′en), a. and n. [Early mod. E. also linnen; < ME. linen, lynen, also linnen, < AS. līnen (= OS. līnīn = OFries. linnen = D. linen = MLG. līnen = OHG. MHG. līnen, G. leinen, linnen = Dan. linned = Sw. linne), of flax, linen, < līn, flax, + -en: see line[1] and -en[2]. The noun is now generally regarded as the orig. form, its connection with the obs. line[1] being no longer generally recognized. Cf. woolen, woollen, a. and n., < wool.] I. a. 1. Made of the fibers of flax: as, linen thread; linen cloth.

And David was girded with a linen ephod. 2 Sam. vi. 14.

2. Resembling linen cloth; white; pale.

Those linen cheeks of thine
Are counsellors to fear. Shak., Macbeth, v. 3. 16.

Fair linen cloth, in the Anglican Ch., the cloth used at the celebration of the eucharist to cover the consecrated elements after communion; the post-communion veil.—Fair white linen cloth, in the Anglican Ch., the outer altar-cloth, spread over the other altar-cloths at the time of celebration. It usually covers little more than the top of the altar, and hangs down about two feet at each end.—Linen damask. See damask, 1 (d).—Linen diaper, linen cloth woven in the same way as damask, but having a small set pattern of diagonal squares or the like: used for towels, children's clothing, etc.—Linen embroidery, a kind of fancy work made by drawing the threads from a piece of linen, except from the space comprised within the lines of a pattern, so that the pattern remains in solid surface relieved upon the openwork ground from which threads have been withdrawn.—Linen pattern. Same as linen-scroll.

II. n. 1. A fabric of linen yarn or thread; cloth woven from the fibers of flax; in the plural, linen cloth in general; manufactures of flax-fiber: as, Irish linens. The principal fabrics included in the term linens are lawn, cambric, batiste, damask, diaper, and glass-cloth, besides the heavy qualities known as toweling, shirting, sheeting, etc.

2. Collectively, articles of linen fabric, or by extension (in modern use) of linen and cotton, or of cotton alone for household use, as tablecloths, napkins, etc. (table-linen), sheets and pillow-cases (bed-linen), towels, etc., or for underwear (body-linen), etc.

In any case, let Thisby have clean linen.
Shak., M. N. D., iv. 2. 40.

Let's go to that house, for the linen looks white and smells of lavender, and I long to lie in a pair of sheets that smell so. I. Walton, Complete Angler, p. 77.

3. Linen thread.—4. Cloth made of hemp. [Rare.]—5†. pl. Sails. [Rare.]

Down with the main mast, lay her at hull, Farle up her linnens, and let her ride it out.
Fletcher, Sea Voyage, i. 1.

Carbonized linen. See carbonize.—Cream-twilled linen, a wide linen cloth used as a foundation for embroidery.—Danubian linen, a name given to ornamental damask for table use, having borders, etc., in red. These linens are of Austrian manufacture, and were introduced about 1873.—Diamond linen. See diamond.—Fossil linen, a variety of hornblende with soft and flexible parallel fibers.

linen-draper (lin′en-drā″pėr), n. A person who deals in linen goods and related articles.

I am a linendraper bold,
As all the world doth know.
Cowper, John Gilpin.

linener† (lin′en-ėr), n. [< linen + -er[1].] Same as linen-draper.

Have council of tailors, lineners, lace-women, embroiderers. B. Jonson, Epicœne, ii. 3.

linenman† (lin′en-mạn), n. Same as linen-draper.

linen-muslin (lin′en-muz′lin), n. Same as leno.

linen-panel (lin′en-pan″el), n. A panel decorated with a linen pattern.

linen-prover (lin′en-prö″vėr), n. A small microscope used in commerce for counting the threads in linen fabrics, and thus determining their fineness.

Linen-scroll.

linen-scroll (lin′en-skrōl), n. In arch., a form of curved ornament employed to fill panels: so called from its resemblance to the convolutions of a folded napkin. It belongs peculiarly to the latter part of the fifteenth and the beginning of the sixteenth century. The figure shows the scroll from a panel in Layer Marney Hall, in the county of Essex, England.

lineograph (lin′ē-ō-grâf), n. [< L. linea, a line, + Gr. γράφειν, write.] An instrument for drawing lines of defined character.

lineola (li-nē′ō-lạ), n.; pl. lineolæ (-lē). [LL., a little line, dim. of L. linea, a line: see line[2].] In anat. and zoöl., a small or fine line or linea; a lineolet.

lineolate (lin′ē-ō-lāt), a. [< NL. lineolatus, < LL. lineola, a little line: see lineola.] In zoöl. and bot., marked with fine or obscure lines; diminutively lineate.

lineolated (lin′ē-ō-lā-ted), a. Same as lineolate.

lineolet (lin′ē-ō-let), n. [< lineola + -et.] In entom., a short or minute line.

lineolinear (lin″ē-ō-lin′ē-ạr), a. [< L. linea, a line, + linearis, of a line: see linear.] In math., linear with respect to each of two different variables or sets of variables.

lineopolar (lin″ē-ō-pō′lạr), a. [< L. linea, a line, + NL. polaris, polar: see polar.] In math., produced by taking the $(n-1)$th polar of a locus with respect to a function of the nth order: so called because such a polar of a point is a line. Thus, the lineopolar envelop of a line with respect to a cubic is a conic which is the envelop of the lines that are the second polars of the points of the first line.

line-pin (līn′pin), n. In bricklaying, a pin of wire pointed at one end, and usually having an eye or loop on the other end, used as a support for the line or cord by which the bricklayer ★alines his work.

liner[1] (lī′nėr), n. [< line[2] + -er[1].] 1. A person employed in drawing or painting lines, as in decorative art.—2. A ship of the line; a line-of-battle ship.

Fancy the sensations of a man fighting his frigate desperately against overwhelming odds, when he sees the outside of a huge liner, with English colours at the main, looming dimly through the smoke!
Lawrence, Sword and Gown, xvii.

3. A vessel regularly plying to and from certain ports; especially, a vessel belonging to one of the regular steamship lines: as, a Liverpool and New York liner.—4. In base-ball, a ball knocked or thrown with much force nearly parallel to the ground: as, he struck a liner to second base.—5. A ball, marble, or the like that strikes or remains on some certain line of ★demarcation used in a game.

liner[2] (lī′nėr), n. [< line[3], v., + -er[1].] 1. One who or that which lines. Specifically—2. A vessel of smooth material fit for holding liquids, etc., fitting within an ornamental exterior and made movable for facility of emptying, cleansing, etc. Thus, in ornamental table-ware, a basket of metalwork or a jardinière of fine porcelain has a liner to contain fruit or earth for the plants.

3. In mach., a thin plate of metal, paper, leatheroid, etc., placed under some movable and adjustable part—a gib for example—to set up the part toward its bearing after it has been worn away as much as the thickness of the plate.

The École Industrielle des Vosges exhibits a pattern of an 8-foot flywheel that is well made, and a connecting rod end, the double set of keys and gibs dispensing with the use of liners, while enabling the wear to be taken up without altering the length of the rod.
Sci. Amer., N. S., LXI. 83.

The barrels are bored up within three inches of the muzzle with a fine-boring bit, using a spill and liners as already described. W. W. Greener, The Gun, p. 237.

4. In marble-working, a long slab of marble to which the backs of small marble tiles, etc., are secured by plaster while being polished.

Linerges (li-nėr′jēz), n. [NL., < Gr. λινεργής, wrought of flax, < λίνον, flax, + ἔργειν*, work: see line[1] and work.] A genus of discoid jellyfishes, typical of the family Linergidæ, or the thimblefishes. The bell has the shape of a thimble.

Thimblefish (Linerges mercurius).

Linergidæ (li-nėr′ji-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Linerges + -idæ.] A family of Discomedusæ with simple quadrangular manubrium without mouth-arms, simple quadrate mouth, 8 marginal bodies, 8 tentacles, 16 marginal flaps, broad radial pouches, branched sack-shaped flap-canals, and without ring-canal. See Linerges.

line-riding (līn′rī″ding), n. The act of making on horseback the circuit of the boundary of a cattle-drift, in order to keep the cattle within bounds, and recover those that may have "drifted" or strayed. [Western U. S.]

Line-riding is very cold work, and dangerous, too, when the men have to be out in a blinding snowstorm.
T. Roosevelt, The Century, XXXV. 668.

line-rocket (līn′rok″et), n. In pyrotechnics, a rocket, usually of small size, with a running connection by which it can be movably attached to a line or wire, along which when fired it is ★caused to run.

linesman (līnz′mạn), n.; pl. linesmen (-men). Milit., a private in the line; an infantryman.

If not perhaps as tall as our ordinary linesmen, he [the Persian soldier] is as heavy and as strongly built.
Westminster Rev., CXXVIII. 458.

line-squall (līn'skwâl), n. In meteor., a squall occurring along the axis of a V-shaped barometric depression, generally secondary to a large cyclonic area, consisting of a violent straight blow of cold air, usually from the northwest, accompanied by rain or snow and a sudden rise of the barometer: so called by Abercromby. The Iowa squall or derecho is a line-squall.

line-storm (līn'stôrm), n. A storm popularly supposed to occur at the time the sun crosses the equator; hence, any heavy storm that occurs within a week or ten days of the equinoxes; an equinoctial storm. [Local, New Eng.]

Along their foam-white curves of shore
They heard the line-storm rave and roar.
Whittier, The Palatine.

Lineus (lin'ē-us), n. [NL., < L. linea, line: see *line*².] The typical genus of Lineidæ. L. marinus or L. longissimus is one of the narrowest of organisms for its length, growing to be 12 or 15 feet long and only half an inch or so broad.

line-wire (līn'wīr), n. In teleg., the wire which extends between and connects the stations of a telegraph-line, and transmits the electric current or impulse from station to station.

ling¹ (ling), n. [< ME. lenge, leenge, < AS. lenge* (not recorded) = MD. lenghe, linghe, D. leng = G. länge, leng (also lang, langfisch) = Icel. langa = Norw. langa, longa = Dan. lange = Sw. långa, a ling: so named from its length, < AS. lang, etc., long: see *long*¹. Cf. linger, from the same source.] 1. A European gadoid fish, Molva molva or M. vulgaris (called by Cuvier Lota molva). It has an elongate form, a short anterior and long posterior dorsal fin, long anal fin, separate convex caudal fin, normal ventral fins, and several large teeth in the lower jaws and vomer, besides a band of small teeth in the jaws and vomer. The ling inhabits the seas of northern Europe, and attains a length of 4 feet. Great numbers of them are caught for food, and either used fresh or salted and dried for future consumption.

Ling (Molva vulgaris).

2. An American gadoid fish, Lota maculosa, better known as the burbot, and also called lawyer and lake-lawyer.—3. A chiroid fish, Ophiodon elongatus, better known as cultus-cod.—4. Same as bay-cod.—5. Same as conger-eel, 3.

ling² (ling), n. [< ME. lyng, < Icel. lyng = Dan. lyng = Sw. ljung, heath.] Common heather, Calluna vulgaris.

ling³ (ling), n. [Chin.] The water-chestnut of China, Trapa bicornis, largely used in China for food.

-ling¹. [< ME. -ling, -lyng, < AS. -ling (= OS. OFries. -ling = OHG. -ling, MHG. -linc, G. -ling = Icel. -lingr = Goth. -liggs), a suffix (orig. a compound suffix, < -l + *-ing*³) denoting origin, or having a dim. force, as in deórling, darling, eorthling, earthling, hỹrling, a hireling, geongling, a youth, gædeling, a companion, etc.] A termination having usually a diminutive or depreciative force, occurring in designations of persons, as darling, earthling, *gadling*¹, *gadling*², groundling, hireling, lordling, stripling, underling, worldling, etc., or of young animals, etc., as duckling, gosling, kidling, kitling, starling, firstling, nestling, yearling, etc.

-ling². [< ME. -ling (also -linges), < AS. -ling, -linga, -lunga, an adverbial termination as in bæcling, backling, grundlinga, grundlunga, from the bottom, equiv. to -unga, -inga, as in callunga, entirely, færinga, suddenly, etc., orig. a case of -ung, -ing, suffix of verbal nouns: see *-ing*¹. Cf. -long.] An adverbial suffix, forming adverbs from nouns, as in backling, darkling, groveling, headling, sideling, halfling, etc. It also appears with an added adverbial genitive suffix, -lings, as in backlings. In dialectal use it is often -lin, -lins. In some words it appears in the variant form -long, as in headlong, sidelong. It is not now used in the formation of new words.

linga (ling'gä), n. Same as lingam.

lingua (ling'gwä), n.; pl. linguæ (-gwē). [L.: see lingual, tongue.] 1. The tongue; a tongue. Specifically, in entom.: (a) The central lobe of the ligula when this has two lateral lobes or paraglossæ, as in Hymenoptera and many Coleoptera. Kirby applied the term to the whole ligula. Also called glossa. (b) The tubular proboscis of Lepidoptera, formed of the united and elongated maxillæ. This tongue-like organ is sometimes several inches long, and in repose is coiled spirally beneath the head. Also called antlia. (c) The hypopharynx, or a tongue-like prolongation of its apex. Huxley. [Rare.]

2. A language.—Frenum linguæ. See frenum.—Ichthyosis linguæ, psoriasis linguæ, tylosis linguæ. Same as leucoplacia.—Liguliform lingua. See liguliform.—Lingua Franca. [NL., It., etc., lit. the Frank language.] (a) A mixed language or jargon used by Frenchmen, Spaniards, Italians, etc., in intercourse with Arabs, Moors, Turks, and Greeks. It is Italian mixed with Arabic, Turkish, Greek, etc. Hence—(b) Any hybrid tongue used similarly in other parts of the world; an international dialect.

What concern have we with the shades of dialect in Homer or Theocritus, provided they speak the spiritual lingua franca that abolishes all alienage of race, and makes whatever shore of time we land on hospitable and homelike?
Lowell, Among my Books, 1st ser., p. 177.

Lingua geral [Pg., lit. general language], in Brazil, the language of the Guarani Indians: so called because used by Indians throughout Brazil in intercourse with other tribes, and also in dealings with the whites.—Lingua rustica [L., lit. rustic language], the form of ancient Latin as spoken by the common people: so called in contradistinction to classic Latin. It retained numerous archaisms throughout the classical period, and it, rather than the literary form of Latin, has been regarded by many as the source of the vernacular part of the modern Romanic languages.—Os linguæ. See linguale.

linguacious† (ling-gwā'shus), a. [< LL. linguax (linguac-), loquacious, < L. lingua, tongue: see lingual, a.] Talkative; loquacious. Bailey, 1727.

linguadental (ling-gwä-den'tal), a. and n. [Prop. linguidental*; < L. lingua, tongue (see lingual, a.), + dens (dent-), a tooth: see dental.] Same as dentilingual.

lingual (ling'gwal), a. and n. [= F. Sp. Pg. lingual = It. linguale, < NL. lingualis, of the tongue, < L. lingua, OL. dingua = E. tongue: see tongue.]

I. a. 1. In anat. and zoöl.: (a) Of or pertaining to the tongue; glossal. (b) Of or pertaining to a lingua or any tongue-like part. See phrases.—2. Pronounced by or chiefly by the tongue: variously applied to sounds made with the tip or forward part of the tongue, as t, d, etc. (also called dental), or especially to the peculiar Sanskrit ṭ, ḍ, etc. (also called cacuminal, cerebral), forming a distinct class from the Sanskrit dentals, and pronounced with the tip of the tongue drawn back.—3. Relating or pertaining to utterance, or of the use of the tongue in speaking: as, lingual corruptions of words or language.

Here indeed becomes notable one great difference between our two kinds of civil war: between the modern lingual or Parliamentary-logical kind, and the ancient or manual kind in the steel battlefield.
Carlyle, French Rev., II. i. 2. (Davies.)

Lingual appendages, the paraglossæ, or membranous outer lobes of the ligula.—Lingual artery, a branch of the external carotid, supplying the tongue and associate parts. It is in man the usual second branch of the carotid, arising between the superior thyroid and the facial; its termination is the ranine artery.—Lingual ganglion, lobule, etc. See the nouns.—Lingual nerve, the gustatory nerve, a portion of the third or inferior maxillary division of the trigeminus or fifth cranial nerve, supplying the tongue.—Lingual ribbon, in gastropodous mollusks, an expansive surface which bears the teeth; the radula or odontophore.—Lingual teeth, the rasping points or processes of the radula or lingual ribbon of a mollusk.—Lingual vein, the vein corresponding to the lingual artery.

II. n. A letter pronounced in the manner ★described in I., 2.

linguale (ling-gwā′lē), n.; pl. lingualia (-li-ă). [NL. (sc. os, bone), neut. of lingualis: see lingual.] The bone of the tongue, more fully called os linguæ or os linguale; the hyoid bone, or os hyoides. See hyoid, n.

lingualis (ling-gwā′lis), n.; pl. linguales (-lēz). [NL. (sc. musculus, muscle): see lingual.] The proper muscle of the tongue; the muscular substance of the tongue which is not definitively attached to surrounding bony parts.

lingually (ling′gwal-i), adv. In a lingual manner; as relates to language.

Linguatula (ling-gwat′ū-lă), n. [NL., dim., < L. linguatus, tongued, < lingua, tongue: see lingual.] A genus of worm-like entoparasitic Arachnida, remarkable among air-breathing arthropods in having the appendages reduced to two pairs of minute hooks. The genus, containing some 20 species, is otherwise known as Pentastoma or Pentastomum, and with some writers constitutes an order, Pentastomidea or Pentastomida, of the class Arachnida. L. tænioides is 3 or 4 inches long.

Linguatulidæ (ling-gwa-tū′li-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Linguatula + -idæ.] The only family of tonguelets or fivemouths, typified by the genus Linguatula, and constituting the order Linguatulina of the class Arachnida.

Linguatulina (ling-gwat-ū-lī′nă), n. pl. [NL., < Linguatula + -ina.] A group, ordinal or other, of entoparasitic vermiform arachnidans, represented by the family Linguatulidæ, related to the mites or acarids, bear-animalcules or Arctisca, and Pycnogonida; the tonguelets, tongue-worms, or fivemouths. In their mode of parasitism they singularly resemble cestoid worms, being found in the sexless or larval state in the lungs and liver of herbivorous animals, whence they are imported by carnivores, including man, in whose digestive and other passages they develop. The tonguelets are worm-shaped, ringed, and flattened; in the young state, when they resemble acarids, they have four legs, but when matured they have no external organs excepting two pairs of small hooks on the head, and a mouth. These hooks can be retracted into sheaths, the four openings of which, with the mouth, make five holes in the head, whence the alternative name of the creatures, fivemouths or Pentastomum. Another name is Acanthotheca, from the sheathing of the hooks. See cut under Pentastomida.

lingue (ling′gwā), n. [Chilian.] A Chilian tree, Persea Lingue, attaining a height of 90 feet. Its wood is valuable for use in furniture-making, and its bark for tanning.

linguedt, a. [< L. lingua, tongue, + E. *-ed*2.] Tongued.

> Honey-lingued Polyhymnia.
> Middleton, World Tost at Tennis.

linguet (ling′gwet), n. Same as languet (b).

linguiform (ling′gwi-fôrm), a. [< L. lingua, tongue (see lingual, a.), + forma, form.] Shaped like a tongue; lingulate: specifically, in entomology, said of processes or parts that are flat, somewhat linear, and rounded at the ★tip.

linguist (ling′gwist), n. [= F. linguiste = Sp. lingüista = Pg. It. linguista, < L. lingua, the tongue: see lingual, a.] 1. A person skilled in the use of languages; one who can speak several languages.

> Sec. Out. Have you the tongues?
> Val. My youthful travel therein made me happy. . . .
> First Out. By your own report
> A linguist. Shak., T. G. of V., iv. 1. 57.

2. A student of language; a philologist.—3†. A master of language or talk; a ready converser or talker.

> Artamockes, the linguist, a bird that imitateth and useth the sounds and tones of almost all the birds in the countrie. Harriott, Virginia (1588).
>
> I'll dispute with him;
> He's a rare linguist. Webster.

linguister (ling′gwis-tėr), n. [< linguist + *-er*1.] A dabbler in linguistics; a student of philology; a linguist. [Rare.]

> Though he [Chaucer] did not and could not create our language (for he who writes to be read does not write for linguisters), yet it is true that he first made it easy, and to ★that extent modern. Lowell, Study Windows, p. 265.

linguistic (ling-gwis′tik), a. [= Sp. lingüistico; < linguist + -ic.] Of or pertaining to language, or to the study of languages: as, linguistic knowledge.

linguistically (ling-gwis′ti-kal-i), adv. In a linguistic manner or relation; as regards language or linguistics.

linguistics (ling-gwis′tiks), n. [Pl. of linguistic: see -ics.] The science of languages, or of the origin and history of words; the general and comparative study of human languages and of their elements. Also called comparative philology.

> In linguistics . . . language itself, as one of the great characteristics of humanity, is the end, and the means are the study of general and comparative grammar.
> G. P. Marsh, Lects. on Eng. Lang., ii.

linguistry (ling′gwis-tri), n. [< linguist + -ry.] Linguistics. [Rare.]

lingula (ling′gū-lă), n.; pl. lingulæ (-lē). [NL. use of L. lingula, ligula, dim. of lingua, tongue: see lingual. Cf. ligule, *lingle*2.] 1. A little tongue or tongue-like part or process; a ligula. Specifically—(a) In embryol., a cartilaginous strap or bridge on each side of the end of the notochord, connecting the trabeculæ cranii with the parachordal cartilage or basilar plate of the skull of the early embryo. (b) In anat., the posterior division of the anterior medullary velum or valve of Vieussens, marked by three or four transverse gray laminæ, often regarded as the first lobe of the vermis superior of the cerebellum.

2. In zoöl.: (a) [cap.] The typical genus of Lingulidæ. The species are numerous; they are mostly fossil, and go back to the early Silurian, but several are still living. They are found in the sand of the seashores of most parts of the world, living buried in the ★sand about low-water mark. One is common on the coast of North Carolina. Its shell is bivalve, about an inch long, flattened, each valve shaped like the bottom of a smoothing-iron, and the two valves working loosely upon each other sidewise, not opening and shutting like those of bivalve mollusks. From the pointed end protrudes a stalk or peduncle from an inch to several inches long, of stiff gristly consistency, and this organ may be incased in a tube formed of sand, like the case of a tube-worm. The broad end of the shell is fringed with little processes. The shell is thin and of a horny texture. The appearance of a lingula is thus somewhat like that of a stalked barnacle or acorn-shell (Lepas), though the animal has no special affinity with a cirriped. The living American lingulas are now placed in a restricted genus Glottidia, the one above described, best known as L. pyramidata, being now called G. audebarti. See cut under Lingulidæ. (b) Pl. lingulas (-lăz). Any species of the genus Lingula or family Lingulidæ; a lingulid or tongue-shell. —Frenula lingulæ. See *frenula*1.—Lingula sphenoidalis, a small tongue-like process of the sphenoid bone on the outer side of the groove for the carotid artery.

lingular (ling′gū-lăr), a. [< lingula + *-ar*3.] Of or pertaining to a lingula, especially that of the cerebellum.

> In the child at birth the lingular folia are rounded and distinct. Buck's Handbook of Med. Sciences, VIII. 126.

lingulate (ling′gū-lāt), a. [< L. lingulatus, tongue-shaped, < lingula, dim. of lingua, tongue: see lingula, lingual.] Formed like a tongue; strap-shaped; ligulate.

Lingulidæ (ling-gū′li-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Lingula + -idæ.] A family of lyopomatous brachiopods, with an elongate peduncle passing out between the valves or through a narrow channel in the hinge-margin, the brachial appendages fleshy and forming separate coils directed upward, the valves oblong or subcircular, and the shell horny. About 15 genera are referred to the family, all but two of which (Lingula and Glottidia) are extinct. See Lingula, 2 (a).

Lingula anatina.

A, ventral valve, with mantle-fringe; B, ventral valve, with mantle turned back; C, dorsal valve, with part of mantle cut away. a a, anterior, and a', posterior adductor muscles; b, brachial vessels; c, capsule of pedicle; i, intestine; l, liver; m, mantle-margin; n, visceral sheath; e, esophagus; p, posterior, p', central adjustors; r, anterior retractors or occlusors; r', posterior adjustors; s (central) stomach; s', marginal setæ; v, vent.

linguliferous (ling′gū-lif′e-rus), a. [< NL. lingula + L. ferre = E. *bear*1.] Containing or abounding in remains of lingulas.

linguloid (ling′gū-loid), a. [< Lingula + -oid.] Resembling or belonging to the genus Lingula: as, linguloid shells.

lingwortt (ling′wėrt), n. The white hellebore, Veratrum album.

lingy1 (ling′i), a. [< ling + *-y*1.] Abounding in ling; heathy.

> His cell was upon a lingy moor.
> T. Ward, England's Reformation, p. 396. (Davies.)

lingy2 (lin′ji), a. [With altered vowel as in linger, < *long*1 + *-y*1. In second sense cf. leng, linge; in third sense cf. linger.] 1. Tall; limber; flexible.—2. Active; strong; able to bear fatigue.—3. Idle; loitering. [Prov. Eng. in all uses.] (Halliwell.)

linhay (lin′i), n. [Also linny, linney: origin obscure.] An open shed attached to a farmyard. [Eng.]

> I went to the upper linhay, and took our new light ponysled. R. D. Blackmore, Lorna Doone, xliv.

liniationt, n. See lineation.

linigerous (li-nij′e-rus), a. [< L. liniger, linen-wearing (< linum, flax, linen: see *line*1), + gerere, bear.] Bearing flax; producing linen.

liniment (lin′i-ment), n. [< F. liniment = Sp. linimento, linimiento = Pg. It. linimento, < LL. linimentum, a soft ointment, < linere, rarely linire, smear. Cf. *letter*3, perhaps from the same source.] In med., a liquid preparation for external application, especially one of an oily consistency.

> This Fuller's-earth, Cimolia, is of a cooling nature, and, being used in the forme of a liniment, it staieth immoderate sweats. Holland, tr. of Pliny, xxxv. 17.

linimentum (lin-i-men′tum), n.; pl. linimenta (-tă). [LL.: see liniment.] In phar., a liniment: ★the officinal name.

linin (lī′nin), n. [< L. linum, flax (see *line*1, n.), + *-in*2.] The crystallizable bitter principle of Linum catharticum, or purging-flax.

lining1 (lī′ning), n. [Verbal n. of *line*2, v.] The act of measuring, as land, with a line; a fixing of boundaries; specifically, permission granted by a dean of gild to erect or alter a building according to specified conditions. [Scotch.]

lining2 (lī′ning), n. [Verbal n. of *line*3, v.] 1. The covering of the inner surface of anything, as of a garment, a box, a wall, or the like. The word is applicable especially when the inner face is formed of different material from that forming the body or exterior.

> Was I deceived, or did a sable cloud
> Turn forth her silver lining on the night?
> Milton, Comus, l. 222.

Specifically—(a) In milit. engin., a wooden sheeting to support the top and sides of the galleries and the sides of the shafts of a mine. (b) In carp., the inside boarding, or the felt fabric, paper, or other material, put on the inside of walls, floors, partitions, etc. (c) In metal-working, the fire-brick or other refractory material placed within a blast-furnace or converter to resist high temperatures. (d) The puddling or tenacious clay put on the back of a dam or the embankment of a canal to prevent the infiltration of water. (e) A piece of canvas sewed on any part of a sail to preserve it against injury by chafing. Tribune Book of Sports, p. 282.

2. In a figurative use, contents.

> The lining of his coffers shall make coats
> To deck our soldiers. Shak., Rich. II., i. 4. 61.
>
> My money is spent;
> Can I be content
> With pockets depriv'd of their lining?
> The Lady's Decoy; or, Man-Midwife's Defence (1738), p. 4 (N. and Q., 7th ser., VI. 205).

3. The jacket of a steam-boiler or -cylinder: an inverted use.—4. In marble-working, the process of cementing back to back with plaster of Paris two pieces of marble, so that they can be ground on two or on all four faces, as if they were one piece.—Basic lining. See basic.

lining-brush (lī′ning-brush), n. A brush for marking lines; specifically, in theaters, a brush for painting wrinkles on the face.

lining-felt (lī′ning-felt), n. See *felt*1.

lining-nail (lī′ning-nāl), n. A small nail with a hemispherical head, used in upholstery-work.

lining-paper (lī′ning-pā′pėr), n. Any paper used as a lining. Specifically—(a) In bookbinding, the plain or ornamented paper pasted on the inside of the cover, which aids in connecting the book proper with its binding. (b) In building, paper (generally made waterproof) fastened to the studding of frame buildings before nailing on the weather-boarding. It is more commonly called sheathing. Such paper is also used under slates and shingles in roofing.

lining-strip (lī′ning-strip), n. One of a series of wooden or metal strips fixed on the inside of freight- or baggage-cars to protect the car from injury by the freight. Car-Builder's Dict.

liniscus (lī-nis′kus), n.; pl. linisci (-ī). [NL., < Gr. λινίσκος, dim. of λίνον, a line, cord: see *line*1.] In ornith., one of the little lines or traces which form reticulations on the tarsal ★envelop. [Rare.]

link1 (lingk), n. [< ME. link, lenk, < Icel. hlenkr*, later hlekkr = Sw. länk = Norw. lænk, a link, = Dan. lænke, a chain; cf. MHG. gelanc, gelenke, a bending, G. gelenk, a joint (knuckle, wrist, or other joint of the body), also a link, ring; AS. hlencan, pl., armor; from a noun represented by E. *lank*2 = OHG. hlanca, lanca, lancha, MHG. lanke, the hip, loins, the bend of the body (> MHG. G. lenken, bend, turn): see *lank*2.] 1. One of the rings or separate pieces of which a chain is composed. In ornamental chain-making, any member of the chain, of whatever form, as a plaque, a bead, etc., is called a link.

Nor airless dungeon, nor strong links of iron,
Can be retentive to the strength of spirit.
Shak., J. C., i. 3. 94.

Untwining his gold chain from his neck, Balafré . . . said, . . . "Then look that none of the links find their way to the wine-house." Scott, Quentin Durward, v.

2. Anything doubled and closed together like a ring or division of a chain.

Now, sir, a new link to the bucket must needs be had.
Shak., 2 Hen. IV., v. 1. 23.

Then down cam Queen Marie
Wi' gold links in her hair.
Mary Hamilton (Child's Ballads, III. 329).

3. Anything which serves to connect one thing or one part of a thing with another; any constituent part of a connected series.

As nature has framed the several species of beings as it were in a chain, so man seems to be placed as the middle link between angels and brutes. Spectator, No. 408.

4. A division, forming the hundredth part, of the chain used in surveying and for other measurement. In Gunter's chain of 66 feet the link is 7.92 inches. The chain of 100 feet, with link of a foot, is used in the United States exclusively in engineering work, and often in surveying.

5. One of the divisions of a sausage made in a continuous chain. [Colloq.]

Then followed seven camels loaded with links and chitterlings, hog's puddings and sausages.
Urquhart, tr. of Rabelais, ii. 2. (Davies.)

6. Any rigid movable piece connected with other pieces, generally themselves movable, by means of interlinked open ends or pivots about which it can turn.—7. In a steam-engine, the link-motion.—Link cent. See cent.—Missing link. (a) Something lacking for the completion of a series or sequence of any kind; a desiderated connecting-link. The term has been used especially with reference to animal forms not found in the supposed succession of development from primordial germs by natural variation and "the survival of the fittest." (b) In zoöl., specifically, an unknown hypothetical form of animal life in any evolutionary chain or series, assumed to have existed at some time and thus to have been the connecting-link between some known forms; especially, an anthropomorphic animal supposed to have been derived from some simian and to have been the immediate ancestral stock of the human race; hence, humorously, an ape or monkey taken as itself the connecting-link for which Darwinians seek. See Alalus.

The lowest races of men will soon become extinct, like the Tasmanians, and the highest Apes cannot long survive. Hence the intermediate forms of the past, if any there were, become of still greater importance. For such missing links, we must look to the caves and later Tertiary of Africa. O. C. Marsh, Proc. of Amer. Ass. for Adv. of Sci., [1877, p. 256.

★link[1] (lingk), v. [< link[1], n.] I. trans. To unite or connect by or as if by a link or links; unite by something intervening; unite in any way; couple; join.

They're so link'd in friendship
That young Prince Edward marries Warwick's daughter.
Shak., 3 Hen. VI., iv. 1. 116.

In notes with many a winding bout
Of linked sweetness long drawn out.
Milton, L'Allegro, l. 140.

Link towns to towns with avenues of oak.
Pope, Imit. of Horace, II. ii. 260.

Linked ring. See ring.

II. intrans. To be or become connected; be joined in marriage; ally one's self; form a union.

Now, Warwick, tell me, even upon thy conscience,
Is Edward your true king? for I were loath
To link with him that were not lawful chosen.
Shak., 3 Hen. VI., iii. 3. 115.

The flickering fairy-circle wheel'd and broke Flying, and link'd again. Tennyson, Guinevere.

link[2] (lingk), n. [ME. link, lynk, AS. hlinc, whence also linch[1], q. v.] 1. A winding of a river; the ground lying along such a winding: as, the links of the Forth. [Scotch.]—2. pl. A stretch of flat or slightly undulating ground on the sea-shore, often in part sandy and covered with bent-grass, furze, etc., and sometimes with a good sward, on part of it at least. [Scotch.]—3. pl. The ground on which golf is played.—Links goose. See goose.

link[3] (lingk), n. [A corruption of lint[2], orig. lunt, a torch: see lunt.] A torch made of tow or hards, etc., and pitch, carried for lighting the streets, formerly common in Great Britain, and still used in London in fogs.

Those that, seeking to light a Lynke, quenched a Lamp.
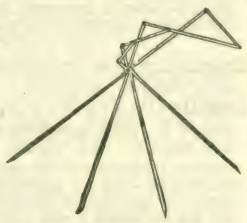
Lyly, Euphues and his England, p. 240.



This place is so haunted with batts that their perpetual fluttering endanger'd the putting out our linkes.
Evelyn, Diary, Feb. 7, 1645.

link[3] (lingk), v. i. [< link[3], n.] To burn or give light. [Prov. Eng.]

link[4] (lingk), v. i. [Origin obscure; cf. linch[2].] To go smartly; trip along; do anything smartly and quickly. [North. Eng. and Scotch.]

They reel'd, they set, they cross'd, they cleekit,
Till ilka carline swat and reekit,
And coost her duddies to the wark,
And linket at it in her sark. Burns, Tam o' Shanter.

★linkage (ling'kāj), n. [< link[1] + -age.] 1. A system of connected links; a combination of pieces pivoted together so as to turn about one another in parallel planes of rotation. Sometimes the meaning is extended to embrace cases where the motions are not in parallel planes; and such a linkage is termed a solid, as opposed to a plane, linkage.

Kemp's Linkage for trisecting an angle.

In Chapter xi. we arrive at the study "beam linkages"—that is, "flat static structures containing beam links."
The Engineer, LXVIII. 207.

2. The state of being linked together.

Brühl showed that in case of "double-linkage" each such carbon-atom has a refraction equivalent to about 6.1.
Jour. Franklin Inst., CXXIII. 74.

Complete linkage, a linkage whose parts are so jointed that they can move only in one way relatively to one another.—Primary, secondary, etc., linkage, a linkage which has one, two, etc., degrees of freedom more than a complete linkage.

link-belting (lingk'bel″ting), n. A belt for the transmission of power, composed of a series of detachable links.

link-block (lingk'blok), n. In steam-engines, the block, sometimes attached to a valve-stem, actuated by the link-motion.

linkboy (lingk'boi), n. A boy or man who carries a link or torch to light passengers in the streets of a city. Improved street-lighting has made the employment of linkboys generally unnecessary; but they are still required in London during the dense fogs frequently occurring there.

Then shalt thou walk, unharm'd, the dangerous night,
Nor need th' officious link-boy's smoky light.
Gay, Trivia, iii. 114.

linkister†, n. A corrupt form of linguister.

There was one Redman suspected to have betrayed their pinnace, for he, being linkister (because he could speak the language), and being put out of that employment for his evil carriage, did bear ill will to the master.
Winthrop, Hist. New England, II. 290.

link-lever (lingk'lev″ėr), n. In a steam-engine, a lever by which the link of a link-motion valve-gear is controlled by the attending engineer; in particular, the reversing-lever of a locomotive engine.

linkman (lingk'man), n.; pl. linkmen (-men). A man employed to carry a link or torch to ★light passengers. See linkboy.

link-motion (lingk'mō″shọn), n. 1. A system of pieces pivoted together, and turning about pivots attached to a fixed base, all the rotations being in the same plane or parallel planes, so that all the points describe definite curves; a complete linkwork. Link-motions have been deeply studied by mathematicians, especially since 1864, the date of the discovery of the Peaucellier cell. The problems involved are exceedingly difficult, as well as practically of no little importance. Any algebraic curve whatever may be drawn by a suitable link-motion. See Peaucellier cell, under cell.

Link-motion.

Specifically—2. In steam-engines, a system of gearing for controlling the valves for the purpose of starting or reversing the engine, and for controlling the cut-off. See valve-gear. The link-motion combines in itself a variable cut-off by which the expansion of the steam can be diminished or increased as the resistance to the engine increases or diminishes, and reversing mechanism whereby the engine may be caused to reverse the motion of its crank-shaft as desired in locomotives, marine engines, and some kinds of stationary engines.

Starting ahead or astern is effected by link-motion.
Luce, Seamanship, p. 225.

linkpin (lingk'pin), n. A dialectal variant of linch-pin.

link-rooming (lingk'rö″ming), n. Naut., the operation of filling up the spiral depressions of a rope by means of chains wound into these depressions. The chains thus inserted make the surface of the rope more uniform, and protect the softer ★parts from abrasion.

linkwork (lingk'wėrk), n. A linkage pivoted to a fixed base.—Complete linkwork, a linkwork whose parts can move but in one way relative to the base; a link-motion.

linn, n. See lin[2].

Linnæa (li-nē'ạ), n. [NL. (Gronovius, 1742), named after Linnæus. See Linnean.] A genus of caprifoliaceous plants belonging to the tribe Linnæeæ. It is characterized by lanceolate calyx-lobes, drooping three-celled many-seeded fruit, and long two-flowered peduncle. The only species is L. borealis. See twin-flower.

linnæite (li-nē'īt), n. [< Linnæus (see Linnean) + -ite[2].] A native sulphid of cobalt, of a tin-white color, crystallizing in octahedral crystals, also occurring massive. Siegenite is a nickeliferous variety.

Linnean, Linnæan (li-nē'ạn), a. [< Linnæus (see def.) + -an.] Pertaining to Carolus Linnæus or Carl Linné (called Carl von Linné when ennobled in 1761), a celebrated Swedish naturalist (1707–78).—Linnean system, in bot., the system of classification introduced by Linnæus. This was the artificial, as contrasted with the later-developed natural system of Jussieu. Its fundamental division is into 24 classes, the last of which consists of plants without stamens and pistils, the Cryptogamia, the other 23 being the Phanerogamia. The latter classes are based on the stamens, their number, insertion, connection with each other, etc. The orders are founded mostly on the number of styles or stigmas, some of them on characters relating to the fruits, others again on the number of stamens in classes which are not defined by the stamens, and some on other considerations. The Cryptogamia were divided into Filices (ferns), Musci (mosses), Algæ (including, besides the seaweeds, the Hepaticæ, Lichenes, etc.), and Fungi (the mushrooms, etc.). This gave a definite and convenient scheme, of no scientific value in classification, but exceedingly useful in its day as a key to the nomenclature of botany. Compare Jussieuan.

linnen†, a. and n. An obsolete spelling of linen.

linnet (lin'et), n. [< ME. linet, lynet, < AS. linete, a linnet; mixed in ME. with OF. linot, F. linot, m., linotte, f., a linnet; so called from their feeding on flaxseed, < L. linum, flax: see line[1], n. Cf. the related lintwhite[1]. Cf. G. hänfling, a linnet, < hanf, hemp.] 1. A small songbird, Linaria or Linota cannabina, of the family Fringillidæ, inhabiting parts of Europe, Asia, and Africa. It is about 5¾ inches long, and 9¾ in extent of wings. The plumage is streaked with various gray, brown, and flaxen shades; the male in summer has the poll and breast rosy or red. The linnet is called gray, brown, and red or rose, according to sex and season; it has also many local or dialectal names. The yellow-billed linnet, mountain-linnet, or twite is another species of the same genus, L. flavirostris or L. montium. There are yet other species, and sundry related birds also are called linnets, as the redpolls of the genus Ægiothus. The bird called pine-linnet or pine-finch in the United States is a siskin, Chrysomitris pinus.

Linnet (Linota cannabina).

2. An ore which contains phosphate intermixed with carbonate of lead in variable proportions: so called on account of the linnet-like color due to the presence of the phosphate. [Prov. Eng. (Derbyshire).]—Chevy, French, red, red-headed, and rose linnet, the redpoll.—Seven-colored linnet, the goldfinch, Carduelis elegans.

linnet-finch (lin'et-finch), n. Same as linnet, 1.

linnet-hole (lin'et-hōl), n. [< linnet*, a corruption of F. lunette, + hole[1].] One of the circular or semicircular holes in the upper part of the sides of a glass-melting furnace, through which flame and smoke pass into the arch.

linot, n. [< F. linon, lawn; see linon.] A silk gossamer stuff. Davies.

He absolutely insisted upon presenting me with a complete suit of gauze lino.
Mme. D'Arblay, Diary (1780), i. 310. (Davies.)

Linociera (lī-nō-sī'ę-rạ), n. [NL., named after G. Linocier, a French physician.] A name given by Swartz in 1791 to Mayepea, a genus of oleaceous trees or shrubs of the tribe Oleineæ. It is characterized by long linear petals, free or sometimes united in pairs, a hard drupaceous fruit, and flowers usually growing in lateral cymes. The leaves are opposite and entire. There are about 50 species, found throughout all the tropical regions of the globe. About 18 species occur in the West Indies. Mayepea ligustrina, of Jamaica and other West Indian islands, is called Jamaica rosewood.

linoleic (li-nō′lē-ik), a. [< L. linum, flax, + oleum, oil. Cf. linoleum.] Related to, existing in, or containing the oil of linseed.—Linoleic acid, an acid found in linseed-oil and other drying-oils, forming with glycerol the glycerid linolein.

linolein (li-nō′lē-in), n. [< linole(ic) + -in[2].] The glycerid of linoleic acid; the constituent of linseed-oil and other drying-oils on which their drying property depends.

linoleum (li-nō′lē-um), n. [A trade-name, intended to mean 'linseed-oil cloth'; < L. linum, flax, + oleum, oil: see line[1] and oil.] A kind of floor-cloth made of linseed-oil which has been oxidized to a dense rubber-like consistency. This is accomplished in various ways, usually by allowing the oil to flow very slowly over a large concrete floor across which warm air is blown. This material is ground up with cork-cuttings, passed through iron rollers, and attached to a coarse canvas. The back of the canvas receives a coat of paint.

linon (lin′on), n. [F., lawn, fine linen, < lin, < L. linum, flax, linen: see line[1].] Lawn. [Trade use.]

Linota (li-nō′tä), n. [NL., < F. linot, a linnet: ★see linnet.] Same as Linaria, 2 (b).

linotype (lin′ō-tīp), n. A machine in which stereotyped lines (of words) are produced, for use in printing. See type-setting.

linous (lī′nus), a. [< line[2] + -ous.] Relating to or in a line. Sir J. Herschel. [Rare.]

lin-pin (lin′pin), n. Same as linch-pin. [Prov. Eng.]

linquet (ling′kwet), n. 1. A tongue; a lanquet. —2. The piece of a sword-hilt which turns down over the mouthpiece of a scabbard.

linsang (lin′sang), n. [Jav.] 1. A kind of civet-cat found in Java, etc., banded with black and white, and having 38 teeth, Prionodon (Linsang) gracilis. A related African species, Prionodon (Poiana) richardsoni, is known as the Guinea linsang.—2. [cap.] [NL.] A genus of Viverridæ, now commonly called Prionodon.

linset†, n. [ME., < AS. lynis (pl. lynisás), glossing L. (ML.) axedo, corruptly axredo, an axle, = D. luns, lens = MLG. lunse, lusse, LG. lunse = OHG. lunisa, MHG. luns, lunse, G. lünse, OHG. also lun, luna, MHG. lun, lune, OHG. also luning, MHG. lüninc, MHG. also lüner, linch-pin (root uncertain; some uncertainty exists as to the forms).] An axle. William de Shoreham, Poems (ed. Wright), p. 109.

linseed (lin′sēd), n. [Formerly also lintseed; < ME. linseede, linsede, lynesede, < AS. linsǣd, flax-seed, < līn, flax, + sǣd, seed: see line[1] and seed.] The seed of lint or flax; flaxseed.

linseed-cake (lin′sēd-kāk′), n. The solid mass or cake which remains when oil is expressed from flaxseed. It is much used as food for cattle and sheep. Also called oil-cake.

linseed-meal (lin′sēd-mēl′), n. The meal of linseed or flaxseed, used for poultices and as a cattle-food.

linseed-mill (lin′sēd-mil), n. A form of mill for grinding flaxseed.

linseed-oil (lin′sēd-oil′), n. A drying-oil produced by pressure from linseed, varying in color from light amber to dark yellow. Cold-drawn or cold-pressed linseed-oil is obtained from the crushed seeds without heat. Raw or ordinary linseed-oil is produced by steaming the crushed seeds before expressing the oil. The yield is from 20 to 25 per cent. of oil. Boiled linseed-oil is obtained by boiling the raw oil with litharge, sugar of lead, or some similar substance, the result being a dark oil drying more rapidly than the raw oil. Linseed-oil is used as a vehicle for colors by painters, for printing-inks, varnishes, linoleum, etc.

linselt, n. [< OF. linsel, lincel, linsiel, m., linen cloth; cf. lincele, lyncele, f., also linçaol, linçoel, linçol, linsuel, etc., a linen cloth or sheet, F. linceul, a winding-sheet, < L. linteolum, dim. of linteum, linen (see lingerie), < L. linum, flax, linen: see line[1]. Cf. linsey-woolsey.] A cloth of wool and linen mixed together; a garment of such cloth. Richardson.

Casting a thyn course lynsel ore his shoulders,
That torne in pieces trayld upon the ground.
Cornelia (1594).

linsey (lin′zi), n. [Prob. < line, flax, + saye, a kind of serge.] 1. Cloth made of linen and wool; linsey-woolsey.

O haud awa thae linen sheets,
And bring to me the linsey clouts
I hae been best used in.
Earl Richard (Child's Ballads, III. 400).

In 1704 was advertised "Three Suites of Hanging: one of Forrest Tapistry, one of clouded Camlet, and one of blue Printed Linsey."
J. Ashton, Social Life in Reign of Queen Anne, I. 64.

2. In coal-mining: (a) A peculiar kind of clayey rock; bind. (b) A streaky sandstone. [Eng.]

linsey-woolsey (lin′si-wůl′si), n. and a. [Early mod. E. lynsey-wolsey, linsiewoolsie, lynsewulse, lynsye-woolsye; < late ME. lynsy wolsye; < linsel + wool; the term. -sey being a reduction of -sel in the first element, repeated in the second, and perhaps due in part to imitation of jersey and kersey.] I. n. 1. A coarse and stout material of which the warp is linen and the woof woolen.

To weave all in one loom,
A webb of lynse [lylse in Dyce's ed.] wulse.
Skelton, Why Come you not to Court? l. 128.

These are the arts we think most fit to go together: . . . Lynsey weavers; Tike weavers; Silk weavers; Lynsey wolsey weavers. Letter to Sec'y Cecil (1567).

His wares consist of hose—linsey-wolsey, for making petticoats, . . . and all sorts of small wares.
Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, I. 420.

2. A similar material into which cotton enters either with or without linen. The attempt has been made to reserve the word linsey for a mixture of linen and wool and woolsey for a mixture of cotton and wool. The compound term would then signify a stuff made of all three materials in certain proportions.

3. Inferior fabrics of doubtful or uncertain materials: a term of depreciation.—4. Anything unsuitably mixed; a farrago of nonsense; jargon; gibberish.

What linsey-woolsey hast thou to speak to us again?
Shak., All's Well, iv. 1. 13.

II. a. 1. Made of linen and wool mixed.—2. Of different and unsuitable parts; neither one thing nor another; ill-assorted.

And Balaams wages doe moue many still to make such linsey-woolsey marriages. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 38.

A lawless linsey-woolsey brother,
Half of one order, half another.
S. Butler, Hudibras, I. iii. 1227.

No flimsy linsey-woolsey scenes I wrote,
With patches here and there like Joseph's coat.
Churchill, The Apology.

linstock, lintstock (lin′-, lint′stok), n. [Early mod. E. also linestock, linestoke; for luntstock, < D. lontstok, < lont, a match for firing cannon, + stock, stick: see lunt and stock.] A pointed staff with a crotch or fork at one end to hold a lighted match, used in firing cannon.

A linestoke fell into a barrell of powder, and set it on fire together with the vessell. Stowe, Queen Elizabeth, an. 1563.

And the nimble gunner
With linstock now the devilish cannon touches,
And down goes all before them.
Shak., Hen. V., iii. (cho.).

★lint[1] (lint), n. [Also dial. linnet; appar. < ME. lin, flax (see line[1], n.). Cf. Dan. linned, linen cloth.] 1. Flax. [Obsolete or local.]

I haue sene flax or lynt growyng wilde in Sommerset shyre. Turner, Herbal.

The frugal wifie, garrulous, will tell
How 't [cheese] was a towmond auld, sin' lint was i' the bell. Burns, Cottar's Saturday Night.

2. A flocculent material procured by raveling or scraping linen, and used for dressing wounds and sores; charpie.—3. Raw cotton that has been ginned and is ready for baling.—4. Fluff; flue.

He's brushing a hat almost a quarter of an hour, and as long a driving the lint from his black cloaths with his wet thumb. Sir R. Howard, The Committee, ii.

5. A net.—6. The netting of a pound or seine. E. H. Knight.—7. A kerchief or net for the head.

There's never lint gang on my head,
Nor kame gang in my hair.
Lord Livingston (Child's Ballads, III. 348).

lint[2]†, n. An obsolete variant of lunt.

lint-doctor (lint′dok′tor), n. In calico-printing, a knife-edged scraper arranged on the delivering side of a calico-printing machine, in such relation with the printed web that it scrapes off and retains loose lint, fluff, or fragments of threads which might otherwise adhere to and disfigure the fabric.

lintel[1] (lin′tel), n. [< ME. lintel, lyntell, < OF. lintel, F. linteau = Sp. lintel, dintel, < ML. lintellus, head-piece of a door or window, for limitellus*, dim. of L. limes (limit-), a boundary, border (cf. limen, a threshold): see limit. Cf. lintern.] In arch., a horizontal piece of timber or stone resting on the jambs of a door or window, or spanning any other open space in a wall or in a columnar construction, and serving to support superincumbent weight.

Whan he com to the halle dore he wrote letteres on the lyntell of the dore in Grewe. Merlin (E. E. T. S.), iii. 436.

At the bottom of the steps is a roundheaded doorway, not, it is true, surmounted by a true arch, but by a curved lintel of one stone.
J. Fergusson, Hist. Indian Arch., p. 282.

The immense batten doors with gratings over the lintels. G. W. Cable, Old Creole Days, p. 247.

lintel[2]†, n. See lingel[1].

★linter[1] (lin′tėr), n. [< lint[1] + -er[1].] A machine for stripping off the short-staple cotton-fiber which adheres to cotton-seed after ginning, preparatory to extraction of oil from the seed. The cotton thus removed is used in the manufacture of cotton batting and for other purposes. Also linter-machine.

linter[2] (lin′tėr), n. A corrupt dialectal form of lean-to.

linternt, n. [A var. of lintel, appar. by confusion with OF. linter, lintier, a threshold, as if < ML. limitarium*, < L. limes (limit-), bound, limit, but with sense of L. limen (limin-), threshold: see lintel.] Same as lintel.

And with the blood thereof [a lamb] coloured the post and lintern of the doors. Raleigh, Hist. World, II. iii. 4.

I read these two verses written in golden letters upon the Linterne of the doore, at the entering into the Inne.
Coryat, Crudities, I. 15.

lintie (lin′ti), n. [Dim. of linnet[1], or a reduction of the equiv. lintwhite.] The linnet. [Scotch.]

But I dinna see the broom Wi' its tassels on the lea,
Nor hear the lintie's sang
O' my ain countrie. R. Gilfillan.

lintseed†, n. An obsolete form of linseed.

lintstock, n. See linstock.

lintwhite (lint′hwīt), n. [< ME. (Sc.) lyntquhite, corrupted from AS. linetwige, līnetuigle, a linnet, so called from frequenting flax-fields, < līn, flax (see line[1], and cf. linnet), + -tuige, -tuigle (seen also in thisteltuige, a linnet), of uncertain origin.] 1. A linnet. Also lintywhite. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.]

Of Larkes, of lynkwhyttez, that lufflyche songene.
Morte Arthure (E. E. T. S.), l. 2674.

In vain to me, in glen or shaw,
The mavis an' the lintwhite sing.
Burns, Again Rejoicing Nature Sees.

Her song the lintwhite swelleth.
Tennyson, Claribel.

2. A skylark or wood-warbler. [Prov. Eng.]

lint-white (lint′hwīt), a. [< lint[1] + white.] As white as lint or flax; flaxen.

Lassie wi' the lintwhite locks, . . .
Wilt thou be my dearie, O?
Burns, Lassie wi' the Lintwhite Locks.

linty-white, n. Same as lintwhite.

Linum (lī′num), n. [NL. (Tournefort, 1700), < L. linum = Gr. λίνον = W. llin, flax: see line[1].] A genus of dicotyledonous choripetalous plants, of the family Linaceæ, tribe Eulineæ. They are herbs, often slightly woody, characterized by regular five-parted flowers, with often showy but fugacious petals, usually yellow or blue in color, and by entire sepals and leaves. There are about 90 species, growing in both hemispheres, many of which are ornamental. L. usitatissimum is the flax of commerce, and the seeds of the same are the source of linseed-oil. L. perenne, of the old world, called perennial flax, is a very handsome blue-flowered species. L. Lewisii, abundant on the western plains of America, was long regarded as identical with L. perenne.

liny (lī′ni), a. [< line[2] + -y[1].] Full of lines; resembling a line; marked with lines.

Then there rose to view a fane
Of liney marble. Keats, Sleep and Poetry.

Shaping their eyes long and liny, partly because of the light. T. Hardy, Far from the Madding Crowd, viii.

Linyphia (li-nif′i-ä), n. [NL., < MGr. λινύφος, λινόϋφος, λινοϋφής, weaving linen, < Gr. λίνον, flax, linen, + ὑφαίνειν, weave: see weave.] 1. A Latreillean genus of spiders of the family Theridiidæ. L. marmorata is noted for its large domed web, under which it lies in wait for its prey to be entangled in a maze of threads that reach two or three feet upward in the bush. L. communis constructs a double web, with one sheet over the other, and hides between the two.

2. [l. c.] A spider of this genus.

Liocephalus (lī-ō-sef′a-lus), n. [NL. (J. E. Gray, 1827, as Leiocephalus), < Gr. λεῖος, smooth (= L. levis), + κεφαλή, head.] A genus of American iguanoid lizards, having no anal or femoral pores, and the back and tail crested. There are many species, natives of tropical America and the West Indies, known as roquets, as L. carinatus, the keeled roquet.

Liodera (lī-od′e-rä), n. [NL. (Fitzinger, 1843), also Liodeira; < Gr. λεῖος, smooth, + δέρος (for δέρμα), skin.] A genus of South American iguanoid lizards, containing such as L. chilensis, L. gravenhorsti, and L. gracilis. Also spelled Leiodera.

liodere (lī′ō-dēr), n. A lizard of the genus Liodera. Also spelled leiodere.

Liodermatidæ (lī″ō-dėr-mat′i-dē), n. pl. [NL. (Owen, 1841), < Liodermatus, the typical genus (< Gr. λεῖος, smooth, + δέρμα (δερματ-), the skin), + -idæ.] A family of holothurians, commonly called Molpadiidæ. Also Liodermati.

Liodon (lī′ō-don), n. [NL., < Gr. λεῖος, smooth, + ὀδούς (ὀδοντ-) = E. tooth.] A genus of Cretaceous mosasaurian or pythonomorphic reptiles, with smooth compressed teeth fitted for cutting, and lenticular in sectional outline. The original species was described by Owen in 1841, from the Chalk of Norfolk. Large forms abounded in America during the same period. L. proriger of the Kansas beds was 75 feet long. L. dyspelor was still larger. Also spelled Leiodon.

Lioglossa (lī-ō-glos'ä), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. λειόγλωσσος, smooth-tongued, < λεῖος, smooth, + γλῶσσα, the tongue.] A primary division of octopod cephalopods, characterized by the non-development of a radula. The only known forms belong to the family Cirroteuthidæ. Also spelled Leioglossa.

lioglossate (lī-ō-glos'āt), a. [As Lioglossa + -ate[1].] Smooth-tongued; having no radula, as a member of the group Lioglossa. Also spelled leioglossate.

Liolepis (lī-ol'e-pis), n. [NL., < Gr. λεῖος, smooth, + λεπίς, a scale, rind, husk: see lepis.] A genus of acrodont agamoid lizards, having the skin of the sides expansible into wing-like organs supported on long spurious ribs, the scales small and ecarinate, the tympanum naked, and femoral pores present. L. sulcatus is a flying-dragon of the Malay peninsula and China, about 20 inches long. Also spelled Leiolepis.

liomyoma (lī″ō-mī-ō′mä), n.; pl. liomyomata (-ma-tä). [NL., < Gr. λεῖος, smooth, + NL. myoma.] A myoma composed of smooth (that is, non-striated) muscle-fiber. Also spelled leiomyoma.

lion (lī′ǫn), n. [Early mod. E. also lyon; < ME. lion, lioun, lyoun, liun, also leon, leoun, leun, < AF. liun, OF. lion, leon, F. lion = Pr. leo = Sp. león = Pg. leão = It. leone, lione = AS. leó (gen. dat. león, dat. also leóne, leónan) = OS. leo = OFries. lawa, NFries. lieuwe = D. leeuw = MLG. lauwe, LG. louwe, lauwe = OHG. lewe, louwo, MHG. lewe, louwe, löuwe, G. löwe = Icel. leō, leōn, ljōn = Sw. lejon = Dan. löve (cf. Heb. lābī', OEgypt. labu, Coptic laboj, a lion.] 1. A quadruped of the genus Felis, F. leo, the largest of all carnivorous animals, distinguished by its tawny or yellow color, a full flowing mane in the male, a tufted tail, and the disappearance of the feline markings in both sexes before they arrive at maturity. The largest are from 8 to 9 feet in length. The lion is a native of Africa and the warm regions of Asia. He preys chiefly on live animals, avoiding carrion unless impelled by extreme hunger. He approaches his prey with stealthy movements, crouching for the spring, which is accompanied with a terrific roar. The whole frame is most powerful and impressive, giving with the large head and ample mane that majestic appearance to the animal from which he derives his title of "king of beasts." Of the African lion there are several varieties, as the Barbary, Gambian, Senegal, and Cape lions. The Asiatic varieties are generally distinguished as the Bengal, the Persian or Arabian, and the maneless lion of Gujerat.

> The lion did tear in pieces enough for his whelps, and strangled for his lionesses, and filled his holes with prey, and his dens with ravin. Nahum ii. 12.

2. Figuratively, a lion-like person; a man possessing the courage, fierceness, etc., of a lion.

> There were about two hundred men on horseback, armed with firelocks; all of them lions, if you believed their word or appearance. Bruce, Source of the Nile, I. 170.

3. [cap.] In astron., a constellation and sign of the zodiac. See Leo, 1.

> Now next at this opposicioun,
> Which in the signe shal be of the Leoun.
> Chaucer, Franklin's Tale, l. 330.

4. In her., a representation of a lion used as a bearing. There are various attitudes in which it is represented, forming as many different bearings, viz.: passant, passant gardant or leopardé, passant regardant, rampant, rampant gardant, rampant regardant, salient, combatant (when two lions are rampant and face to face, also called counter-rampant), statant, statant gardant, sejant, couchant, and coward. (See these words.) Further modifications of these bearings may exist, but are rare. Anciently the blazon was "a lion" only when the creature was rampant; when passant gardant, as on the shield of England, it was called lion leopardé, and also leopard. The lion is always langued and armed gules unless the field is gules, when it is langued and armed azure.

> No Mon hedde scheld of schrifte;
> The deuel stod lyk a lyon raumpaunt.
> Holy Rood (E. E. T. S.), p. 145.

5. (a) A gold coin current in Scotland from the time of Robert III. to the reign of James VI.: so called from the lion on the obverse of the coin.

Obverse. Lion. Reverse.

Under Mary it was worth 44 shillings Scotch; under James VI. (when it was called the lion noble), 74 shillings Scotch. Half-lions were also coined. (b) A copper coin: same as hardhead, 2.—6. An object of interest and curiosity; especially, a celebrated or conspicuous person who is much sought by society or by the public in general: as, to visit the lions of the place; such a one is the lion of the day. The use is an extension of lion in its literal sense, with reference to the lions formerly kept at the Tower in London. See the first quotation.

> The lions of the Tower are the origin of that application of the term lion to any conspicuous spectacle or personage which has long since become universal.
> Lecky, Eng. in 18th Cent., iv.
>
> Such society was far more enjoyable than that of Edinburgh, for here was not a lion, but a man. J. Wilson.
>
> After dinner the palanquins went forward with my servant, and the captain and I took a ride to see the lions of the neighborhood. Macaulay, in Trevelyan, I. 324.

A lion in the way. (a) A danger or obstacle to be faced and overcome.

> Lancelot shouted, "Stay me not!
> I have been the sluggard, and I ride apace,
> For now there is a lion in the way."
> Tennyson, Holy Grail.

(b) An imaginary danger, trumped up by cowardice or sloth.

> The slothful man saith, There is a lion in the way; a lion is in the streets. Prov. xxvi. 13.
>
> They fear'd not the bug-bear danger nor the Lyon in the way that the sluggish and timorous Politician thinks he sees. Milton, Reformation in Eng., ii.

American lion, mountain lion. Same as cougar.—Blanch lion. See blanch[1].—British lion, the lion as the national emblem of Great Britain.

> The British Lion . . . cannot always have a worthy enemy to combat, or a battle royal to deliver.
> Thackeray, Virginians, lxiv.

Lion dollar. See dollar.—Lion of Cotswold or Cotswold lion, a sheep. [Prov. Eng.]

> Lo then the mystery from whence the name > Of Cotsold lyons first to England came.
> Harrington, Epigr., B. iii. Ep. 18. (Nares.)

Lion of St. Mark, a symbolical lion represented as winged, and holding an open book, on which is written pax tibi, Marce, Evangelista meus, or a part of this. It is the characteristic device of Venice. The full heraldic description requires a sword with the point uppermost above the book on the dexter side and a glory surrounding the whole. The lion also is sejant: but in artistic representations this is continually departed from.—Lion's provider. (a) A popular name for the jackal. (b) Any humble friend or follower who acts as a sycophant or foil to another.—Lion's share, the largest share; an unduly large share; usually, any excessive appropriation made by one of two or more persons from something in which all have an equal right or interest, but sometimes without any invidious sense: as, the lion's share of attention. The phrase alludes to Æsop's fable of the lion, who, hunting in partnership with the fox and wolf claimed one third of the prey as his agreed portion, one third by right of sovereignty, and the other third on general principles.—Lion tricorporate, in her., a bearing representing three rampant bodies of lions springing or proceeding from the three corners of the escutcheon and having a common head affronté.—Order of the Lion, the name of several orders in Germany, etc.; especially, an order founded in 1815 by William I., first king of the Netherlands, and continued by the later kings. It is an order for civil merit. The badge is a star of eight points, having in the central medallion a rampant lion and crown, and a golden W between each two arms.—To put one's head into the lion's mouth, to put one's self in a position of great danger, as in the power of an enemy.

Connection with *lap*1 (L. lambere, etc.) is improbable; the phonetic conditions do not agree, and it is not the lips, but the tongue, that 'laps.'] 1. One of the two edges or borders of the mouth; one of the two fleshy or muscular parts composing the opening of the mouth in man and many other animals, and covering the teeth.

All they that see me laugh me to scorn; they shoot out the lip, they shake the head. Ps. xxii. 7.

He that loves a rosy cheek,
Or a coral lip admires.
Carew, Disdain Returned.

2. pl. Figuratively, the organs of speech as represented by the lips; speech or utterance as passing between the lips and aided by them.

A wicked doer giveth heed to false lips. Prov. xvii. 4.

His lips are very mild and meek.
Tennyson, Two Voices.

So gently blending courtesy and art
That wisdom's lips seemed borrowing friendship's heart.
O. W. Holmes, A Portrait.

3. Impudent or abusive talk. [Slang.]

I told him that I didn't want none of his lip.
F. R. Stockton, Rudder Grange, p. 99.

4. Anything resembling a lip in position or relation; the edge or border of anything; a margin: as, the lip of a vessel; the lips of a wound.

Now wet the lip of the phial.
Charlotte Brontë, Jane Eyre, xx.

Shak., Cor., ii. 1. 127.

★To present the cup to one's lips. See cup.

lip (lip), v.; pret. and pp. lipped, ppr. lipping. [< lip, n.] I. trans. 1. To touch with the lip or lips, as in kissing; reach with the lip or border. [Chiefly poetical.]

A hand that kings
Have lipp'd, and trembled kissing.
Shak., A. and C., ii. 5. 30.

When
A stone is thrown into some sleeping tarn,
The circle widens till it lip the marge.
Tennyson, Pelleas and Ettarre.

No good sheep-dog ever so much as lips a sheep to turn it.
R. D. Blackmore, Lorna Doone, xlii.

2. To utter with the lips; speak. [Rare.]

I heard my name
Most fondly lipp'd. Keats, Endymion, i.

3. To notch, as the edge of a sword or knife. [Now only Scotch.]

In these daies the maner is lightly to barbe and pluck off with a sarding hook the beards or strings of the root, that being thus nipped and lipped (as it were) they might nourish the body of the plant. Holland, tr. of Pliny, xix. 6.

II. intrans. In music, to apply one's lips to the mouthpiece of a metal wind-instrument so as to produce tones; also, to use one's lips in some particular manner: as, to lip well or badly.

lipæmia (lī-pē′mi-ą), n. [NL., < Gr. λείπειν, λιπεῖν, leave, be lacking, + αἷμα, blood.] In pathol., the presence of an excessive quantity of fat in the blood.

Lipangus, n. See Lipaugus.

Lipari (lip′ą-ri), n. Wine produced in the Lipari Islands, north of Sicily, both red and white, and of many grades of excellence. It is in demand in Naples at prices high for Italian wine, but is rarely exported.

What can make our fingers so fine?
Drink, drink wine, Lippari-wine.
The Slighted Maid, p. 83. (Nares.)

Liparia (lī-pā′ri-ą), n. [NL. (Linnæus, 1771), so called from the shining leaves; < Gr. λιπαρός, oily, shining, sleek, < λίπος, fat, lard.] A genus of South African leguminous plants of the tribe Genisteæ, and type of the subtribe Liparieæ. They are shrubs with simple, entire, coriaceous, shining leaves, without stipules, and having bright-yellow flowers in terminal heads, surrounded by large bracts forming an involucre. One of the lower lobes of the calyx is large and petaloid, and the stamens are diadelphous.

Liparidæ (lī-par′i-dē), n. pl. Same as Liparididæ.

Liparididæ (lip-ą-rid′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Liparis (-id-) + -idæ.] 1. A family of acanthopterygian fishes, represented by the genus Liparis, embracing cottoids with oblong or elongated antrorsiform body, the head unarmed and enveloped by the skin, a long dorsal fin with anterior spines scarcely differentiated, a long anal fin, and ventrals united to form a circular sucker. The numerous species, of several genera besides Liparis, inhabit cold and temperate seas, chiefly of the northern hemisphere, and attain a moderate or only small size. They are popularly known, in common with many other fishes, as suckers, and are also called snail-fishes and sea-snails.

2. A family of bombycid moths, typified by the genus Liparis (named in the form Liparidæ by Boisduval in 1834), having the proboscis short or obsolete, and the female rarely wingless. The larvæ are free, usually live in trees, have hairs arising in bundles from tubercles, and are mostly dark-colored; they pupate in a loose cocoon usually interspersed with hairs. The family is wide-spread. There are about 60 genera, species of which are variously known as gipsies, vaporers, etc.

Liparidina (lip″ą-ri-dī′nä), n. pl. [NL., < Liparis (-id-) + -ina.] In Günther's ichthyological system, the second group of his family Discoboli: same as Liparidinæ and Liparididæ, 1.

Liparidinæ (lip″ą-ri-dī′nē), n. pl. [NL., < Liparis (-id-) + -inæ.] A subfamily of Cyclopteridæ, equivalent to the family Liparididæ. Also Liparinæ.

Liparieæ (lip-ą-rī′ē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Bentham, 1845), < Liparia + -eæ.] A subtribe of plants of the tribe Genisteæ and family Fabaceæ. It includes South African genera characterized by the absence of stipules and by the free vexillary stamen which is rarely joined to the others above the opening of the tube of the corolla. The subtribe includes the type Liparia and five other genera.

Liparinæ (lip-ạ-rī′nē), n. pl. Same as Liparidinæ.

Liparis (lip′ạ-ris), n. [NL., < Gr. λιπαρός, oily, shining, sleek: see Liparia.] 1. In ichth., a genus of fishes, so called by Artedi in 1738 from the soft smooth skin, typical of the family Liparididæ, having the ventral disk well developed. The type of the genus is Cyclopterus liparis of Linnæus.—2. In entom., a genus of arctiid moths, founded by Ochsenheimer in 1810. It is a comprehensive group, much broken up of late years, all the British species having been placed in other genera. The gipsy-moth is L. (Porthetria) dispar. L. monacha is one whose larva is injurious to trees, especially conifers.

3. A genus of orchidaceous herbs, some terrestrial and some epiphytes, belonging to the tribe Epidendreæ. It is characterized by small flowers growing in racemes, the anthers having four pollinia, and a column which is rather long and sometimes winged above. There are about 80 species, found in all warm and temperate regions. L. Læselii in England is sometimes called fen-orchis.

liparite (lip′ạ-rīt), n. [So called from the Lipari Islands in the Mediterranean.] A name applied by Roth to the rock called rhyolite by Von Richthofen. See rhyolite.

liparocele (lip′ạ-rō-sēl), n. [< Gr. λιπαρός, oily, fatty (see Liparia), + κήλη, a tumor.] Same as lipoma.

Lipauginæ (lip-â-jī′nē), n. pl. [NL., < Lipaugus + -inæ.] A subfamily of Cotingidæ, including a number of South American cotingine birds of plain coloration, like the species of Lipaugus. P. L. Sclater, 1862.

Lipaugus (li-pâ′gus), n. [NL. (Boie, misprinted Lipangus and so used by some ornithologists): so called as being a very plain-colored genus among a number of brilliant relatives, < Gr. λιπαυγής, having lost its light or splendor, < λείπειν, λιπεῖν, leave, + αὐγή, brilliance, splendor.] The typical genus of Lipauginæ, based upon Muscicapa simplex of Lichtenstein, a cotingine bird of Brazil.

lip-bit (lip′bit), n. A brace-bit with a cutting lip which projects beyond the end of the barrel.

lip-born (lip′bôrn), a. Coming from the lips only; not arising from the heart; not cordial or genuine.

> Why had he brought his cheap regard and his lip-born words to her who had nothing paltry to give in exchange? George Eliot, Middlemarch, lxxx. (Davies.) lip-cell (lip′sel), n. In bot., one of a group of cells in the sporangia of some ferns between which the dehiscence begins. They have lignified walls, and number from two to four.

lip-clipt, n. A kiss. Halliwell. [Old slang.]

lip-comfort (lip′kum″fėrt), n. Utterance of words of comfort or consolation, especially of an insincere kind or unaccompanied by practical assistance.

> Promises
> Are but lip-comforts.
> Fletcher (and another ?), Prophetess, ii. 1.
>
> Lip-comfort cannot cure me. Pray you, leave me
> To mine own private thoughts.
> Massinger, Maid of Honour, iii. 1.

lip-comforter (lip′kum″fėr-tėr), n. One who consoles or comforts with mere empty talk.

> Reverend lip comforters, that once a week
> Proclaim how blessed are the poor.
> Southey, Soldier's Funeral.

lip-devotion (lip′dē-vō″shọn), n. The utterance of prayer by the lips, especially without genuine desire.

> We saw those large marble stayres, 28 in number, which are never ascended but on the knees, some lip-devotion being us'd on every step. Evelyn, Diary, Nov. 20, 1644.
> Lip-devotion will not serve the turn; it undervalues the very thing it prays for. South, Sermons, VI. 386.

lipe (līp), n. [< ME. lipe, lippe*, < OF. lipee, lippee (ML. lippa), a large piece, a good bit or morsel, a mouthful.] A piece, bit, or fragment; a portion. [Prov. Eng.]

> Ac me were leuere, by oure lorde, a lippe of godes grace > Than al the kynde witt that ge can bothe and connynge of goure bokes. Piers Plowman (C), xii. 226.

lipet†, n. [ME., dim. of lipe.] A portion.

> Of every disshe a lipet out to take.
> Lydgate, Minor Poems, p. 52. (Halliwell.)

★ lip-fern (lip′fėrn), n. A fern of the genus Cheilanthes: in allusion to the lip-like indusium.

lip-fish (lip′fish), n. A labroid fish.

> Many wrasses are readily recognized by their thick lips, the inside of which is sometimes curiously folded: a peculiarity which has given to them the German name of lip-fishes. Encyc. Brit., XIXV. 686.

lip-good (lip′gụd), a. Good in profession only.

> His grace is merely but lip-good.
> B. Jonson, Sejanus, i. 2.

liphæmia (lī-fē′mi-ạ), n. [NL., < Gr. λείπειν, λιπεῖν, leave, be lacking, + αἷμα, blood.] Deficiency or poverty of blood. Also spelled leiphæmia.

lip-head (lip′hed), n. A head of a bolt or analogous metal object which projects toward one side only: used in angles and other situations where there is not room for a head symmetrical all around.

lip-homage (lip′hom″ạj), n. Homage rendered by the lips only; insincere professions of devotion.

> It [devotion to science] is not a mere lip-homage, but a homage expressed in actions.
> H. Spencer, Education, p. 91.

lip-hook (lip′hụk), n. 1. In angling, the upper hook of a gang, which is put through the lips of live bait, as a minnow, closing the mouth but leaving the gills free for respiration: used on spinning-tackles, etc.—2. A kind of grapnel used by whalers for towing a dead whale to the ship.

lip-labor (lip′lā″bọr), n. A laboring merely with the lips; labor that consists in promises and professions.

> When these actions fail of their several ends, . . . alms are misspent, fasting is an impertinent trouble, prayer is but lip-labour. Jer. Taylor, Holy Living, i. 2.

lip-laborious (lip′lā-bō″ri-us), a. Abounding in mere verbal professions; hypocritical.

> The lower the times grew, the worse they were at the bottom: the Bramins grew hypocritical and lip-laborious. Lord, Hist. Banians (1630), p. 86. (Latham.) lip-language (lip′lang″gwāj), n. In the instruction of the deaf and dumb, oral or articulate language, to be understood by watching the motion of the lips, in contradistinction to the language of signs or of the fingers.

liplet (lip′let), n. [< lip + dim. -let.] A little lip.

Lipobrachia (lī-pō-brā′ki-ạ), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. λείπειν, λιπεῖν, leave, be lacking, + L. brachium, arm.] In Haeckel's system of classification, a primary group of Echinodermata, consisting of the sea-urchins (Echinida) and the sea-cucumbers (Holothuria), which are called armless echinoderms in distinction from the ringed-arms or Colobrachia.

lipobrachiate (lī-pō-brā′ki-āt), a. [< Lipobrachia + -ate[1].] Pertaining to or having the characters of the Lipobrachia; armless; rayless; having no brachia.

Lipobranchia (lī-pō-brang′ki-ạ), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. λείπειν, λιπεῖν, leave, be lacking, + βράγχια, gills.] In Lankester's classification, one of three grades of the class Arachnida, contrasted with Embolobranchia and Delobranchia, and composed of the weasel-spiders, harvestmen, false scorpions, and mites, or the four orders Galeodina, Opilionina, Pseudoscorpionina, and Acarina.

lipobranchiate (lī-pō-brang′ki-āt), a. [< Lipobranchia + -ate[1].] Of or pertaining to the Lipobranchia.

Lipocephala (lī-pō-sef′ạ-lạ), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of lipocephalus: see lipocephalous.] Lankester's name of the lamellibranchs or bivalve mollusks, contrasted with the Glossophora, regarded as a branch of Mollusca, and divided into Isomya, Heteromya, and Monomya.

lipocephalous (lī-pō-sef′ạ-lus), a. [< NL. lipocephalus, < Gr. λείπειν, λιπεῖν, leave, be lacking, + κεφαλή, head.] Headless, as a bivalve mollusk; acephalous; of or pertaining to the Lipocephala.

lipofibroma (lī″pō-fī-brō′mạ), n.; pl. lipofibromata (-mạ-tạ). [NL., < Gr. λίπος, fat, + NL. fibroma.] In pathol., a lipoma in which there is a considerable amount of connective tissue. Also called adipofibroma.

lipogastria (lī-pō-gas′tri-ạ), n. [NL., < Gr. λείπειν, λιπεῖν, leave, be lacking, + γαστήρ (γαστρ-), stomach.] Atrophy of the primary enteric cavity.

lipogastrosis (lī″pō-gas-trō′sis), n. [NL., < Gr. λείπειν, λιπεῖν, leave, be lacking, + γαστήρ (γαστρ-), stomach, + -osis.] Absence of a stomach; specifically, in sponges, absence of the paragaster, with the development of diverticula, which form a system of canals replacing the original enteric cavity.

> Lipogastrosis . . . may be produced by the growing together of the roots of the choanosomal folds, thus reducing the paragastric cavity to a labyrinth of canals.
> Sollas, Encyc. Brit., XXII. 416.

lipogastrotic (lī″pō-gas-trot′ik), a. [< lipogastrosis (-ot-) + -ic.] Having no stomach; specifically, in sponges, having no paragaster; characterized by or exhibiting lipogastrosis.

lipogenesis (lī-pō-jen′e-sis), n. [< Gr. λίπος, fat, lard, + γένεσις, origin: see genesis.] The formation of fat.

> The effective agent in lipogenesis . . . also favors the formation of uric acid. Quain, Med. Dict., p. 1053.

lipogenous (lī-poj′e-nus), a. [< Gr. λίπος, fat, + -γενής, producing: see -genous.] Pertaining to the formation of fat; forming or tending to form fat; developed in fat.

Lipoglossa (lī-pō-glos′ạ), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. λείπειν, λιπεῖν, leave, be lacking, + γλῶσσα, tongue.] A grade or series of Mollusca, represented by a class (Scolecomorpha) containing the genus Neomenia (or Solenopus), as alone distinguished from the Echinoglossa (gastropods, cephalopods, etc.). E. R. Lankester.

Lipoglossæ (lī-pō-glos′ē), n. pl. [NL., fem. pl.: see Lipoglossa.] In Nitzsch's classification (1829), a major group of birds, typified by the kingfishers (Alcedinidæ), and including the hornbills (Bucerotidæ) and hoopoes (Upupidæ), in all of which the tongue is very small.

lipoglossate (lī-pō-glos′āt), a. [As Lipoglossa + -ate[2].] Having a small tongue, or none; specifically, of or pertaining to the Lipoglossæ.

lipogram (lī′pō-gram), n. [< Gr. λείπειν, λιπεῖν, leave, be lacking, + γράμμα, a letter, < γράφειν, write. Cf. lipogrammatic.] A writing from which all words containing a particular letter are omitted, as the several books of the Odyssey of Tryphiodorus, in the first of which, it is said, there was no A, in the second no B, etc. Similarly, poems have been written in English avoiding the use of e, which is the most frequent of all English letters, while, on the other hand, pieces also have been written containing only one vowel, as e.

lipogrammatic (lī″pō-gra-mat′ik), a. [< Gr. λιπογράμματος, λειπογράμματος, with a letter left out, < λείπειν, λιπεῖν, leave, be lacking, + γράμμα, a letter. Cf. lipogram.] Pertaining to the writing of lipograms; also, of the nature of a lipogram.

> The Greeks composed lipogrammatic works, works in which one letter of the alphabet is omitted.
> I. Disraeli, Curios. of Lit., I. 385.

lipogrammatism (lī-pō-gram′ạ-tizm), n. [< lipogrammat(ic) + -ism.] The art or practice of writing lipograms.

> Lipogrammatism does not affect the rhythm or metre of verse. G. P. Marsh, Lects. on Eng. Lang., xxv.

lipogrammatist (lī-pō-gram′ạ-tist), n. [< lipogrammat(ic) + -ist.] One who writes lipograms.

> The lipogrammatists or letter-droppers of antiquity . . . would take an exception, without any reason, against some particular letter of the alphabet, so as not to admit it once in a whole poem. Addison, Spectator, No. 59.

lipoma (li-pō′mạ), n.; pl. lipomata (-mạ-tạ). [NL., < Gr. λίπος, fat, + -oma.] In pathol., a tumor formed of fatty tissue. Also called adipoma and liparocele.

lipomatosis (li-pō-mạ-tō′sis), n. [< lipoma(t-) + -osis.] The excessive growth of fatty tissue in the body or any of its parts.

lipomatous (li-pom′ạ-tus), a. [< lipoma(t-) + -ous.] Pertaining to or of the nature of a lipoma.

lipomyxoma (lip″ō-mik-sō′mạ), n.; pl. lipomyxomata (-mạ-tạ). [NL., < Gr. λίπος, fat, + μύξα, mucus, + -oma.] In pathol., a tumor composed partly of fatty and partly of mucous tissue.

Liponema (lī-pō-nē′mạ), n. [NL., < Gr. λείπειν, λιπεῖν, leave, be lacking, + νῆμα, a thread.] The typical genus of Liponemidæ.

Liponemidæ (lī-pō-nem′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Liponema + -idæ.] A family of Hexactiniæ, with numerous perfect septa and with marginal tentacles transformed by retrogression into short tubes or into stomidia. Of the three genera united as Liponemidæ, Liponema comes near the Discosomidæ, as its stomidia may be divided into principal and accessory stomidia; Polystomidium has an endodermal muscle and marginal spherules; and Polysiphonia, with its mesodermal circular muscle, resembles the Paractidæ.

lipopod (lī′pō-pod), a. and n. I. a. Of or pertaining to the Lipopoda.

II. n. One of the Lipopoda.

Lipopoda (lī-pop′ō-dạ), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. λείπειν, λιπεῖν, leave, be lacking, + ποῦς (ποδ-) = E. foot.] A prime division of Rotifera, called a class and contrasted with Parapodiata, and divided into the orders Ploima, Bdelligrada, and Rhizota.

Lipoptera (lī-pop′te-rạ), n. [NL., < Gr. λείπειν, λιπεῖν, leave, be lacking, + πτερόν, a wing, = E. feather.] A genus of pupiparous parasitic dip-terous insects of the family Hippoboscidæ. The species are at first winged and live on birds; afterward they seek quadrupeds and lose their wings, whence the name. Also Lipoptena.

lip-ornament (lip′ôr″na-ment), n. An object inserted in the lip as an ornament, as is customary among many primitive tribes; a labret.

Lipostoma (lī-pos′tō-mä), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. λείπειν, λιπεῖν, leave, be lacking, + στόμα, mouth.] Same as Lipostomata.

Lipostomata (lī-pō-stō′ma-tä), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. λείπειν, λιπεῖν, leave, be lacking, + στόμα, pl. στόματα, mouth.] The mouthless corticate Protozoa; the sporozoans or gregarines: opposed to Stomatophora. Originally Lipostoma. E. R. Lankester.

lipostomatous (lī-pō-stom′a-tus), a. [As Lipostomata + -ous.] Mouthless; astomatous; specifically, of or pertaining to the Lipostomata.

lipostomia (lī-pō-stō′mi-ä), n. [NL.] Same as lipostomy.

lipostomosis (lī″pō-stō-mō′sis), n. [NL., < Gr. λειπειν, λιπειν, leave, be lacking, + στόμα, mouth.] Absence of a mouth, stoma, or oral orifice; specifically, in sponges, lack of an oscule; the state of being lipostomotic.

lipostomotic (lī″pō-stō-mot′ik), a. [< lipostomosis (-ot-) + -ic.] Having no stoma, mouth, or oral orifice; specifically, in sponges, having no oscule; characterized by or exhibiting lipostomosis.

lipostomous (lī-pos′tō-mus), a. [As lipostoma-tous.] ★ Having no mouth; lipostomatous.

lipostomy (lī-pos′tō-mi), n. [< NL. lipostomia, < Gr. λείπειν, λιπεῖν, leave, be lacking, + στόμα, mouth.] Atrophy of the mouth; an astomatous condition.

lipothymia (lī-pō-thim′i-ä), n. [NL., also written leipothymia.] Same as lipothymy.

lipothymic (lī-pō-thim′ik), a. Same as lipothymous.

lipothymous (lī-poth′i-mus), a. [Also written leipothymous; < Gr. λιπόθυμος, fainting, in a swoon, < λείπειν, λιπεῖν, leave, + θυμός, life, soul.] Pertaining to or given to swooning; fainting.

lipothymy (lī-poth′i-mi), n. [Also written leipothymy; < NL. lipothymia, < Gr. λιποθυμία, λειποθυμία, fainting, a swoon, < λιπόθυμος, fainting, in a swoon: see lipothymous.] In pathol., fainting; syncope.

> In lipothymies or swoundings he used the frication of this finger [the ring-finger] with saffron and gold.
> Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., iv. 4.

lipotype (lī′pō-tīp), n. [< Gr. λείπειν, λιπεῖν, leave, be lacking, + τύπος, impression, type.] In zoögeog., a type or form of animal life which distinguishes a given faunal area by its absence therefrom. Gill.

Lipotyphla (lī-pō-tif′lä), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. λείπειν, λιπεῖν, leave, be lacking, + τυφλός, blind (with ref. to the blind gut, NL. cæcum).] In some systems of classification, a division of the mammalian order Insectivora, including those forms which have no cæcum, as distinguished from the Menotyphla, which have a cæcum. Gill.

lipotypic (lī-pō-tip′ik), a. [< lipotype + -ic.] Having the character of a lipotype.

lipoxenous (lī-pok′se-nus), a. [< Gr. λείπειν, λιπεῖν, leave, + ξένος, host, + -ous.] In bot., deserting its host. A term descriptive of some parasitic fungi, which, after a certain period, leave their host and complete their development independently, living entirely upon a reserve of food earlier appropriated from the host plant. De Bary, Fungi (trans.), pp. 388, 466.

lipoxeny (lī-pok′se-ni), n. [As lipoxen-ous + -y.] In bot., the desertion of its host by a parasitic fungus. See lipoxenous. De Bary.

lipped (lipt), a. [< lip + *-ed*².] 1. Having lips; also, having a raised or rounded edge resembling a lip; having lips of a kind specified: often used in composition.

> Come on, you thick-lipp'd slave.
> Shak., Tit. And., iv. 2. 175.

> A virgin purest lipp'd, yet in the lore
> Of love deep learned to the red heart's core.
> Keats, Lamia, i.

2. In bot., same as labiate.—3. In ichth., specifically, thick-lipped; labroid: applied to the wrasse or rockfish family.—Lipped and harled, built, as a wall, of stones without mortar, but with the joints afterward filled with mortar, and the whole surface plastered over with what is called rough-cast or harling. [Scotch.]

lippen (lip′n), v. [< ME. lipnen, trust: origin obscure.] I. trans. To intrust. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.]

II. intrans. To trust; rely or depend: with to or on: as, do not lippen to him; I was lippening on you. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.]

> Na, I had far rather Tib Mumps kenned which way I was gaun than her—though Tib 's no muckle to lippen to neither.
> Scott, Guy Mannering, xxii.

lippening (lip′ning), a. [Appar. ppr. of lippen, peculiarly used (?).] Occasional; accidental. [Scotch.]

> I aye telled the gudeman ye meant weel to him; but he taks the tout at every bit lippening word.
> Scott, Bride of Lammermoor, xii.

lipper¹ (lip′ėr), n. Same as leaper.

lipper² (lip′ėr), n. [Appar. < lip + *-er*¹.] 1. A thin piece of blubber cut in oblong shape, with slits in it, used to wipe up gurry or slumgullion from the deck of a whaler. Fisheries of U. S., V. ii. 287.—2. A large metal ladle used for scooping up the oil from the deck of a whaler. Fisheries of U. S., V. ii. 287.

lipper² (lip′ėr), v. t. [< *lipper*², n.] To wipe with a lipper: followed by off: as, to lipper off the deck.

lipper³ (lip′ėr), a. and n. [Origin obscure.] I. a. Wet; rainy. [Prov. Eng.]

II. n. The spray from small waves, in either fresh or salt water. Halliwell. [North. Eng.]

Lippia (lip′i-ä), n. [NL. (Linnæus), named after Augustin Lippi, a French physician and traveler in Abyssinia.] A genus of plants of the family Verbenaceæ, characterized by a small membranaceous two- to four-toothed calyx, a four-lobed corolla, and a dry indehiscent fruit. They are shrubs or herbs, bearing small flowers in spikes or heads. There are about 100 species, found in all warm regions, but especially abundant in America. L. citriodora is the lemon-scented verbena. See verbena.

lippie, n. See *lippy*².

lipping (lip′ing), n. [< lip + *-ing*¹.] The formation of a lip-like projection. Lancet, No. 3428, p. 933.

lippitude (lip′i-tūd), n. [= F. lippitude = It. lippitudine, < L. lippitudo, inflammation of the eyes, < lippus, blear-eyed.] Soreness of the eyes; bleariedness; lippitudo.

lippitudo (lip-i-tū′dō), n. [L.: see lippitude.] In pathol., the presence of a gummy or crusting accumulation along the edges of the eyelids.

lip-plate (lip′plāt), n. The hypostome of trilobites.

lip-protector (lip′pro-tek″tor), n. A shield to protect the lip from injury during dental operations.

lippy¹ (lip′i), a. [< lip + *-y*¹.] Full of lip (see lip, n., 3); impertinent and voluble in speech; saucy. [Slang.]

lippy², lippie (lip′i), n. [A dim. of lip*, var. of *leap*².] An old Scotch dry measure, the fourth part of a peck: same as forpet. The lippy was the sixteenth part of the firlot, which was the fourth part of the boll. For the different sizes of those measures, see firlot and boll.

lip-reading (lip′rē″ding), n. Reading or understanding what another says by observing the movements of his lips: used in regard to the instruction of the deaf and dumb.

lip-reward† (lip′rē-wârd″), n. An empty promise. Davies.

> To euery act she giues huge lip-reward.
> Lauish of oathes, as falsehood of her faith.
> G. Markham, Sir R. Grinuile (Arber Rep.), p. 56.

lip-righteousness (lip′rī″chus-nes), n. Mere profession of righteousness. Davies.

> Dost thou think
> To trick them of their secret? for the dupes
> Of humankind keep this lip-righteousness.
> Southey, Thalaba, v.

lip-salve (lip′säv), n. 1. In phar., a cosmetic ointment for the lips.—2†. Figuratively, soft and flattering speech.

> Spencer, that was as cunning as a serpent, finds here a female wit that . . . taught him not to trust a woman's lip-salve, when that he knew her breast was fill'd with rancour.
> E. Fannant, Hist. Edw. II., p. 91.

lipsanotheca (lip″sa-nō-thē′kä), n. [NL., < NGr. λειψανοθήκη, < Gr. λείψανον, a relic, a thing left (< λείπειν, leave), + θήκη, a shrine.] A shrine for relics; a reliquary.

lipse†, v. A Middle English variant of lisp. Chaucer.

lip-service (lip′sėr″vis), n. Service with the lips or in pretense only; insincere profession of good will or devotion.

lipsey (lip′si), v. A dialectal variant of lipse, lisp.

lip-spine (lip′spīn), n. In conch., a spine on the lip of a shell.

lip-tooth (lip′töth), n. In conch., a tooth on the lip of a shell.

lipwingle (lip′wing″gl), n. A dialectal variant of lapwing.

lip-wisdom (lip′wiz″dum), n. Wisdom in talk without corresponding practice.

> I find that all is but lip-wisdom, which wants experience.
> Sir P. Sidney.

lip-wise (lip′wīz), a. Garrulous. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

lip-work (lip′wėrk), n. 1. Lip-labor. Milton.—2. The act of kissing. B. Jonson.

lip-working (lip′wėr″king), p. a. Professing with the lips without corresponding practice; lip-laborious.

> Their office is to pray for others, and not to be the lip-working deacons of other mens appointed words.
> Milton, Apology for Smectymnuus.

liquable (lik′wa-bl), a. [= Sp. licuable = It. liquabile, < LL. liquabilis, that may be melted or dissolved, < L. liquare, melt: see liquate.] Capable of being liquefied or melted.

liquament† (li-kwā′men), n. [L., a liquid mixture, a sauce, < liquare, make liquid, dissolve: see liquate.] A liquid sauce.

> And make liquamen castimoniall
> Of peres thus.
> Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 90.

liquate (lī′kwāt), v.; pret. and pp. liquated, ppr. liquating. [< L. liquatus, pp. of liquare (> It. liquare = Sp. licuar), make liquid, melt, dissolve, < liquere, be fluid: see liquid.] I. trans. To melt; liquefy; specifically, in metal., to separate, as one metal from another less fusible, by applying just sufficient heat to melt the more easily liquefiable, so that it can be run off from the other. Also eliquate.

II. intrans. To become liquefied or dissolved; ★ melt.

liquation (lī-kwā′shon), n. [= F. liquation = Sp. licuación, < LL. liquatio(n-), a melting, < L. liquare, pp. liquatus, melt, dissolve: see liquate.] 1. The act or operation of liquating or melting.—2. The condition or capacity of being melted: as, a substance congealed beyond liquation.—3. The separation of metals differing considerably in fusibility by subjecting them, when contained in an alloy or mixture, to a degree of heat sufficient to melt the most fusible only, which then flows away, or liquates, from the unmelted mass. This process is of great antiquity, and was up to 1836 extensively used at Mansfeld in Prussia, in the treatment of argentiferous copper and lead ores. Lead containing antimony and some other metals is also partially freed from these and prepared for further treatment by a process of liquation. Also eliquation.

liquation-furnace (lī-kwā′shon-fėr″nās), n. In metal., a furnace specially adapted to liquation.

liquation-hearth (lī-kwā′shon-härth), n. In metal., a hearth specially adapted to liquation.

liquefacient (lik-wē-fā′shient), n. [< L. liquefacien(t-)s, ppr. of liquefacere, make liquid, dissolve, < liquere, be fluid or liquid, + facere, make. Cf. liquefy.] That which liquefies or serves to liquefy; in med., an agent, as mercury or iodine, used to produce liquefaction of solid depositions.

liquefaction (lik-wē-fak′shon), n. [= F. liquéfaction = Sp. licuefacción = Pg. liquefacção = It. liquefazione, < LL. liquefactio(n-), a melting, < L. liquefacere, pp. liquefactus, melt: see liquefacient.] 1. The act or process of liquefying, or of rendering or becoming liquid; reduction to a liquid state. The liquefaction of solids is effected by the application of heat or in some cases by pressure, that of gases by cold or pressure, or by both combined (see gas). Of the gases, chlorin, ammonia, and others were first liquefied by Faraday. The experiment of Andrews with carbon dioxid led to the conclusion that for every gas there is a certain temperature such that if the temperature of the gas is above it, no increase in pressure, however great, will produce liquefaction. This is called the critical temperature. If the gas has this temperature, a certain pressure, the critical pressure, will produce liquefaction, and the volume per unit mass at this instant is the critical volume. If the temperature of the gas is below the critical value compression produces gradual increase in pressure until (the temperature being kept constant) liquefaction begins at a definite pressure. Further decrease in volume produces very slight increase in pressure until all the gas is liquefied, after which a slight decrease in volume necessitates a large increase in pressure, liquids being, in general, almost incompressible. From these experiments it was predicted that all the so-called permanent gases could be liquefied if they could be cooled below their critical temperatures, and in fact this has been accomplished. The critical constants of some of the most important gases are as follows:

	Crit. Temp. °C.	Crit. Temp. °F.	Boiling-Point. °C.	Boiling-Point. °F.	Crit. Pressure. Atmosphere.
H	−234	−389	−246	−411	20
O	−119	−182	−181	−295	51
N	−146	−231	−194	−317	35
Air	−140	−220	−191	−312	39
CO_2	+ 31	+ 88	− 80	−112	77
Argon	−121	−186	−187	−305	50.6

For the liquefaction of gases having only moderately low critical temperatures, freezing mixtures produce sufficient cold. Gases thus liquefied, if allowed to evaporate under low pressure, produce still greater cold which can be used in the liquefaction of other gases; or, the gas to be liquefied can be compressed, cooled as much as possible, and allowed suddenly to expand. In many cases this sudden expansion will cool the gas sufficiently to produce partial liquefaction and even solidification. By such methods Pictet and Cailletet succeeded in 1877 in liquefying oxygen, nitrogen, and hydrogen. More recently Wroblewski, Dewar, and Olzewski produced these liquids in quantities large enough to permit their critical constants to be studied. In the process later perfected by Linde, Dewar, Travers, and others, and applied most notably to the liquefaction of air, the gas to be liquefied is compressed to a pressure of from 1,200 to 3,000 pounds per square inch, cooled to the ordinary atmospheric temperature, and then led through a long coil of pipe and allowed to escape through a small orifice. The escaped gas, cooled by expansion, is led back around the coil of pipe, cooling the compressed gas on its way to the orifice. This cooled compressed gas therefore after expansion becomes colder than the gas preceding it, and upon flowing back around the pipe produces still greater cooling of the incoming gas; hence the temperature of the escaped gas will gradually diminish until equilibrium is reached either by gain of heat from the surroundings or by liquefaction of part of the gas. If there is sufficient protection from influx of heat from the outside the liquid will accumulate and can be drawn off, in some machines at the rate of several gallons an hour. If air thus liquefied be exposed to the atmosphere the nitrogen, having the lowest boiling-point, boils away first, leaving nearly pure liquid oxygen, which boils away with sufficient rapidity to keep itself at a temperature of −181° C., its boiling-point at atmospheric pressure. Liquid air will probably find its greatest practical application in various refrigerative processes and in operative surgery. It cannot (as has been asserted) be a source of power, for a theoretically perfect process of liquefaction would require the expenditure of more energy than could be obtained by the evaporation of the liquid product, and practical methods are necessarily even less efficient. See article in supplement.

2. The state of being liquefied or melted.

liquefactive (lik-wē-fak′tiv), a. [< liquefact(ion) + -ive.] Pertaining to or producing liquefaction.

liquefiable (lik′wē-fī-a-bl), a. [< F. liquéfiable; as liquefy + -able.] Capable of being liquefied, melted, or changed to a liquid state.

liquefier (lik′wē-fī-ėr), n. One who or that which liquefies.

liquefy (lik′wē-fī), v.; pret. and pp. liquefied, ppr. liquefying. [< OF. liquefier, F. liquéfier, < L. liquefieri, become liquid, pass off, liquefacere (> It. liquefare), make liquid, melt, < liquere, be fluid or liquid, + facere (pass. fieri), make: see liquid and -fy. Cf. liquefacient.] I. trans. To make liquid; melt, as a solid, or compress, as a gas, into a liquid state.

II. intrans. To become liquid.

liquescence, liquescency (li-kwes′ens, -en-si), n. [= Sp. licuescencia; as liquescen(t) + -ce, -cy.] The condition of being liquescent; aptness to melt; the state of becoming liquid.

liquescent (li-kwes′ent), a. [= Sp. licuescente, < L. liquescen(t-)s, ppr. of liquescere (> Pg. liquescer), become fluid, < liquere, be fluid: see liquid.] Having a tendency to liquefy; melting; becoming liquid: as, a substance naturally liquescent.

> At the end of our path a liquescent
> And nebulous lustre was born. Poe, Ulalume.

liqueur (li-kėr′), n. [F.: see liquor, n.] 1. An alcoholic drink, usually sweet and of high flavor and perfume; a cordial.

> Bitters form a class of liqueurs by themselves, claiming to possess certain tonic properties and a medicinal value. Encyc. Brit., XIV. 686.

Especially—(a) A strong and sweet wine like those grown in some southern places, such as Lunel, Alicant, and Cyprus, which are also called liqueur wines. (b) A spirituous compound based upon brandy or pure alcohol, and wholly artificial in its composition. These liqueurs are in a certain sense the successors of those of the middle ages, which were supposed to be universal remedies. Their modern use is almost exclusively the gratification of the palate. See curaçao, Benedictine, chartreuse, maraschino, eau-de-vie de Dantzig (under eau-de-vie), anisette, and cordial.

Liqueurs may be distinguished as of three qualities: first, the ratafias, or simple liqueurs, in which the sugar, the alcohol, and the aromatic substances are in small quantities; such are anise-water, noyau, the apricot, cherry, &c., ratafias. The second are the oils or fine liqueurs, with more saccharine and spirituous matter, as the anisette, curaçoa, &c. The third are the creams or superfine liqueurs, as rosoglio, maraschino, Danzig water, &c.
Pop. Encyc.

(c) A mixture prepared for the purpose of dosing champagne, the effervescence and sweetness of the wine depending much upon its composition. It consists either of wine or of fine brandy, or of a mixture of the two, with pure rock-candy dissolved in it.

2. Same as liqueur-glass.

liqueur-cup (li-kėr′kup), n. A very small goblet, usually of silver or of silver gilt, used for the same purpose as a cordial-glass.

liqueur-glass (li-kėr′glȧs), n. A very small drinking-glass intended for liqueurs or cordials; a cordial-glass.

liqueuring (li-kėr′ing), n. [< liqueur + -ing.] The process of qualifying wine by means of liqueur, as in the making of champagne.

> The liqueuring is regulated by a machine, by which the quantity is measured to a nicety.
> Encyc. Brit., XXIV. 606.

liquiblet, n. [ME., appar. for liquable: see liquable.] A fusible metal.

> ȝe schal vndirstonde that wiyn not aloonly holdith in it the propirtees of gold, but myche more the propirtees of alle liquibles. Book of Quinte Essence (ed. Furnivall), p. 7.

★liquid (lik′wid), a. and n. [< ME. liquide, < OF. liquide, F. liquide = Sp. líquido = Pg. It. liquido, < L. liquidus, fluid, liquid, moist, < liquere, be liquid, be fluid; cf. Skt. √ ri or rī, flow, run.] I. a. 1. Composed of particles that move freely among each other on the slightest pressure; of a fluid consistence; flowing, or capable of flowing; not fixed or solid.

> Wash me in steep-down gulfs of liquid fire!
> Shak., Othello, v. 2. 280.

Hence—2. Clear or transparent, like a liquid: as, liquid eyes; liquid depths.—3. Tearful.

> She . . . turned her face, and cast
> A liquid look on Ida, full of prayer.
> Tennyson, Princess, iv.

4. Sounding smoothly or agreeably to the ear; devoid of harshness: as, liquid melody.

> Lull with Amelia's liquid name the Nine.
> Pope, Imit. of Horace, II. i. 31.

5. Pronounced with a smoothly sonorous and freely continuable sound: as, a liquid letter. See II., 2.—Liquid ammonia. See ammonia, 1.—Liquid confections. See confection.—Liquid debt. (a) In Scots law, a debt the amount of which is ascertained and constituted against the debtor, either by a written obligation or by the decree of a court. (b) See debt.—Liquid glue, measure, etc. See the nouns.—Liquid verb, in Gr. gram., a verb the stem of which ends in a liquid (λ, μ, ν, ρ).

II. n. 1. A substance of which the molecules, while not tending to separate from one another like those of a gas, readily change their relative position, and which therefore retains no definite form, except that determined by the containing receptacle; an incompressible fluid. The definition of a liquid as an incompressible fluid is not strictly correct, experiment having shown that liquids are compressible to a very limited extent. See fluid.

2. In gram., a smoothly flowing sound or letter. The name liquids (ὑγρά, sc. σύμφωνα or στοιχεῖα, ὑγρά being neuter plural of ὑγρός, liquid, pliant, easy) was given by Greek grammarians, as early as the second century B. C., to l, m, n, r (λ, μ, ν, ρ)—that is, to consonants not mutes or sibilants—on account of their smooth and flowing sound and the pliancy with which they coalesce in pronunciation with a preceding mute. It was adopted by Roman grammarians (liquidæ, sc. consonantes or literæ), and has since remained in common use. The classification is not now approved as scientific, and is obsolescent.—Amniotic liquid. See amniotic.—Burnett's liquid, a solution of zinc chlorid, used by Sir William Burnett, for preserving timber, canvas, and cordage from dry-rot, mildew, etc. It is also employed as an antiseptic to preserve dead bodies, and for disinfecting hospitals, ships, etc.—Diffusion of liquids. See diffusion.—Dutch liquid. See Dutch.

liquidable (lik′wi-da-bl), a. [= F. liquidable = Sp. liquidable; as liquid(ate) + -able.] Capable of being liquidated.

Liquidambar (lik′wid-am″bär), n. [NL. (Linnæus), < L. liquidus, liquid, + ML. ambar, ambra, amber: see liquid and *amber*2.] 1. A genus of dicotyledonous trees of the family Hamamelidaceæ, distinguished by monœcious flowers without petals, growing in heads and surrounded by an involucre of four bracts. The carpels of the fruit are tipped by long, persistent styles, and the leaves are palmately lobed and deciduous. There are two species—one, L. orientalis of Asia Minor, furnishing the balsam called liquid storax; another, L. Styraciflua of the warmer parts of North America, extending as far north as Connecticut, Ohio, etc., abundant and at its best on bottom-lands in the South. The latter is a large tree with handsome, shining, star-shaped leaves. In hot regions it exudes a gum, sometimes called copalm (a name also given to the tree) or copal-balsam, used in the preparation of chewing-gum, and to some extent in medicine as a substitute for storax. The tree is variously named sweet-gum, star-leafed gum, liquid-amber (liquidamber) or amber, red-gum, and bilsted, as well as copalm. From the corky ridges of its branches, it has been called alligator-tree. Fossil remains of the genus are found in the Tertiary deposits of Europe, Greenland, Alaska, California, and Colorado, and also in Japan, and one species occurs in the Cretaceous of Kansas and Nebraska. Sixteen fossil species have been described.

Branch of Liquidambar styraciflua.

2. [l. c.] A tree of this genus.

liquidamber (lik′wid-am″bėr), n. Same as liquidambar, 2.

liquidate (lik′wi-dāt), v. t.; pret. and pp. liquidated, ppr. liquidating. [< ML. liquidatus, pp. of liquidare (> It. liquidare = Pg. Sp. liquidar = F. liquider), make liquid, make clear, clarify, < L. liquidus, liquid: see liquid, a.] 1. To make clear or plain; clarify; free from obscurity. [Obsolete or rare.]

> A senseless jumble, soon liquidated by a more egregious act of folly, the King with his own hand crowning the young Duke of Warwick King of the Isle of Wight.
> Walpole, Anecdotes of Painting, I. ii.

2. To clear up; reduce to order or precision; settle the particulars of; adjust: as, to liquidate the affairs of a bankrupt firm. See liquidation.—3. To clear off; settle; pay: as, to liquidate a debt or a mortgage.—4. To make less harsh and offensive: as, to liquidate the harshness of sound. Imp. Dict.—Liquidated damages. See damage.

liquidation (lik-wi-dā′shon), n. [= F. liquidation = Sp. liquidación = Pg. liquidação = It. liquidazione, < ML. as if liquidatio(n-)*, < liquidare, pp. liquidatus, liquidate: see liquidate.] The act of liquidating; the act of adjusting debts, or ascertaining their amount or the balance of them due. In a more general sense, the act or operation of winding up the affairs of a firm or company by getting in the assets, settling with its debtors and creditors, and apportioning the amount of each partner's or shareholder's profit or loss, etc.—Signing in liquidation, the act of the partner who is intrusted with the business of liquidation, in signing for the firm when necessary for that purpose. It is indicated by his writing the name of the firm and adding the words in liquidation.—To go into liquidation, to refrain from new business, and continue business only for the purpose of getting in the assets, paying obligations, and dividing the surplus, if any.

★liquidator (lik′wi-dā-tọr), n. [= F. liquidateur = Sp. liquidador; as liquidate + -or.] One who or that which liquidates or settles; specifically, in Great Britain, in com., an officer appointed to conduct the winding up of the affairs of a firm or company, to bring and defend actions and suits in its name, and to do all necessary acts on behalf of the firm or company: called a receiver in the United States.

liquidity (li-kwid′i-ti), n. [= F. liquidité = It. liquidità, < LL. liquidita(t-)s, liquidity, < L. liquidus, liquid: see liquid, a.] 1. The state or quality of being liquid; fluid consistence; capacity of flowing freely.—2. The quality of being smooth, flowing, and agreeable: said of sound, music, etc.

liquidize (lik′wi-dīz), v. t.; pret. and pp. liquidized, ppr. liquidizing. [< liquid + -ize.] To make liquid; liquefy. Also spelled liquidise. [Rare.]

liquidly (lik′wid-li), adv. In a liquid or flowing manner; smoothly; flowingly.

liquidness (lik′wid-nes), n. The state or quality of being liquid; fluency.

liquidogenic (lik″wi-dō-jen′ik), a. [< L. liquidus, liquid, + √ gen, produce, + -ic.] Giving rise to liquids or forming fluid substances. [Rare.] Nature, XXXVIII. 91.

liquid-refrigerator (lik′wid-rē-frij″ė-rā-tọr), n. In brewing, an apparatus for cooling wort; a wort-refrigerator. It consists of a shallow tank, or a series of such tanks, through which is laid a pipe for cold ★water, the circulation of which cools the wort.

liquor (lik′ọr; L. pron. lī′kwôr), n. [Early mod. E. also liquoure; the spelling with qu is a mod. accom. to the orig. L., without change of the reg. E. pronunciation; < ME. licour, lycour, licure, licur, < AF. licur, OF. licor, licour, liqueur, likeur,

F. liqueur = Sp. Pg. licor = It. liquore, < L. liquor, fluidity, liquidness, a fluid, a liquid, < liquere, be fluid or liquid: see liquid.] 1. A liquid or fluid substance, as water, milk, blood sap, etc.

This flooring wol be blak and wynter warme,
And lycoure shedde.
Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 13.

From silver spouts the grateful liquors glide,
While China's earth receives the smoking tide.
Pope, R. of the L., iii. 109.

2. A strong or active liquid of any sort. Specifically—(a) An alcoholic or spirituous liquid, either distilled or fermented; an intoxicating beverage; especially, a spirituous or distilled drink, as distinguished from fermented beverages, as wine and beer.

Fetch me a stoup of liquor. Shak., Hamlet, v. 1. 68.

(b) A strong solution of a particular substance, used in the industrial arts. The liquor of any substance is that substance held in solution, and the word used absolutely has meanings differing according to the industry in which it is used. (c†) An elixir.

I, and my six servants, are not able to make of this precious liquor so fast as it is fetched away from my lodging by gentlemen of your city. B. Jonson, Volpone, ii. 1.

Hence—(d) Any prepared solution, as a sugar solution for claying the loaves, or a solution of a dye or mordant. (e) A dilution, as in liquor ammoniæ. [In technical Latin phrases pronounced li'kwôr, as in liquor amnii, liquor potassæ, etc.]—Ammoniacal liquor. See ammoniacal.—Black liquor. See black-liquor.—Boiled-off liquor, the soapy liquid which has been employed for the purpose of removing the silk-glue from raw silk previous to dyeing. It is a slightly alkaline and more or less concentrated solution of silk-glue. It is added to the dye-bath in dyeing silk, in order that the coloring matter may be attracted more slowly and evenly by the silk, and it also preserves the luster of the latter.—Gas-liquor. See gas.—In liquor. (a) Drunk. (b) Measured (in selling) with their natural juice, as oysters: opposed to solid. [U. S.]—Liquor amnii, the amniotic liquid. See amniotic.—Liquor cœliarum, liquor ventriculorum cerebri, the serous fluid in the ventricles of the brain. See cœlia.—Liquor Cotunnii, the fluid of Cotunnius; the perilymph of the ear.—Liquor Morgagni [so called from G. B. Morgagni, 1682–1771], a small quantity of liquid which frequently collects after death between the back of the lens and the capsule. Also called humor or aqua Morgagni.—Liquor of flints. See flint.—Liquor of Libavius, a solution of tin tetrachlorid.—Liquor sanguinis, the plasma of the blood.—Liquor Scarpæ, Scarpa's fluid; the endolymph of the ear.—Liquor silicum. Same as liquor of flints.—Malt liquors, liquors brewed from malt.—Red liquor, a crude aluminium acetate prepared from pyroligneous acid, used as a mordant in calico-printing.—Spirituous liquors, liquors procured by distillation.—The grand liquor†, the great elixir, or aurum potabile, of the alchemists. Nares.

Where should they Find this grand liquor that hath gilded 'em?
Shak., Tempest, v. 1. 280.

Vinous liquor, liquor made from grapes; wine.

liquor (lik'ọr), v. [< liquor, n.] I. trans. 1†. To moisten; drench.

The stranger reply'd, "I'll liquor thy hide,
If thou offer'st to touch the string."
Robin Hood and Little John (Child's Ballads, V. 217).

2†. To rub with oil or grease; anoint; lubricate.

Cart-wheels squeak not when they are liquored.
Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 117.

3. To treat with a liquor; apply liquor or a solution to, as in various manufacturing operations. Liquoring sugar, in refineries, consists in pouring on the top of the molds a solution of pure sugar, which, percolating through, removes all remaining coloring matter.

4. To give liquor to; supply with liquor for drinking. [Obsolete or colloq.]

O, the musicians, Master Edward, call 'em in, and liquor 'em a little. Middleton (?), Puritan, v. 1.

II. intrans. To drink; especially, to drink spirits: often with up. [Slang.]

liquor-gage (lik'ọr-gāj), n. A gagers' measuring-rod for ascertaining the depth of liquid in a cask or tank.

liquorice, n. See licorice.

liquorish[1]†, liquorishly†, etc. Obsolete spellings of lickerish, etc.

liquorish[2]†, n. An obsolete form of licorice.

liquorist (lik'ọr-ist), n. [< liquor + -ist.] A maker of liquor or cordials. [Rare.]

The manufacture of these liqueurs constitutes the trade of the "compounder" or liquorist.
Spons' Encyc. Manuf., I. 225.

liquorous†, liquorously†, etc. Variant spellings of lickerous, etc.

liquor-pump (lik'ọr-pump), n. A portable pump used to draw liquor from a cask, a barrel, or the like.

liquor-thief (lik'ọr-thēf), n. A tube used to lift a small quantity of liquor from a cask through the bung-hole; a sampling-tube.

lira[1] (lē'rä), n.; pl. lire (-re). [It. (= F. livre), < L. libra, a balance, a pound: see libra, livre.] 1. A modern silver coin of the kingdom of Italy, divided into 100 centesimi, and worth a franc, or 19.3 United States cents.—2. A gold coin of Turkey, containing 100 piasters, worth $4.40; a medjidie.

Obverse. Lira. Reverse.

lira[2] (lē'rä), n. [It., < L. lyra: see lyre.] A lyre; formerly, also, some related instrument. The name has been loosely applied to many instruments of the viol class, and to others having a resonance-box resembling that of the violin and violoncello; also to an instrument in which the tones are produced by properly tuned steel bars fastened in a lyre-shaped rim and struck with a hammer.—Lira da braccio, an obsolete variety of tenor viol, having seven strings.—Lira da gamba, an obsolete variety of violoncello, having fourteen or sixteen strings.—Lira pagana, rustica, or tadesca, a hurdy-gurdy.

lire[1]†, n. An obsolete form of leer[1].

lire[2] (līr), n. [< ME. lire, lyre, < AS. lira, flesh, brawn.] Flesh; brawn. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.]

lire[3]†, n. [Origin obscure.] A cloth manufactured in England in the fifteenth century, and apparently a valuable and rich fabric.

lirella (li-rel'ä), n. [NL., dim. of L. lira, a furrow.] In bot., the narrow furrowed apothecium of some lichens, as in the genus Graphis.

lirellate (li-rel'āt), a. [< NL. lirella + -ate[1].] In bot., narrow with a longitudinal furrow; having the character of a lirella: said of the apothecia of some lichens.

lirelliform (li-rel'i-fôrm), a. [< NL. lirella, a little furrow, + L. forma, form.] In bot., lirellate; narrow and furrowed.

Liriodendron (lir″i-ō-den'dron), n. [NL. (Linnæus), < Gr. λείριον, a lily (see lily), + δένδρον, a tree.] 1. A genus of one or two species, natives of eastern North America and China, belonging to the family Magnoliaceæ, characterized by extrorse anthers and a sessile gynophore; the tulip-trees. The carpels have two ovules, and the fruits are like samaras. L. Tulipifera often attains a height of over 100 feet, has a close bark, large four-lobed leaves, and solitary terminal greenish-yellow flowers, shaped somewhat like a tulip and consisting of three sepals and six petals. The wood is light-yellow or brown with white sapwood, light and soft, not strong, and close- and straight-grained. The tulip tree reaches its greatest development in the lower Wabash valley and along the western slopes of the Alleghanies southward. It is the sole remaining representative of a nearly extinct type which was formerly abundant, not less than 17 fossil species being known, the greater part occurring in the Cretaceous formation in New Jersey, Kansas, Nebraska, Wyoming, Greenland, and Bohemia, with a few in the Tertiary, chiefly of Europe.

Flowering Branch of Liriodendron Tulipifera, the tulip-tree. a, a stamen; b, fruit; c, a carpel.

Lissencephala (lis-en-sef′a-lä), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of lissencephalus: see lissencephalous.] Those mammals which have smooth brains; in Owen's system of classification, one of four prime divisions of Mammalia. The corpus callosum is present and well developed (as it is not in Lyencephala), but the cerebral hemispheres are small, leaving much of the olfactory lobes and of the cerebellum uncovered, and their surfaces are smooth, having slight, few, or no convolutions (as is not the case in Gyrencephala and Archencephala). The Lissencephala comprise the Bruta or edentates, Chiroptera or bats, Insectivora, and Rodentia. The group thus corresponds to the Ineducabilia of Bonaparte and Microsthena of Dana, or the lower series of placental or monodelphous mammals, as Gyrencephala does to the higher series Educabilia. Owen's Lyencephala were the marsupials and monotremes, or didelphian and ornithodelphian mammals; his Archencephala included man alone. The lissencephalous brain is illustrated under gyrus (fig. 1).

lissencephalous (lis-en-sef′a-lus), a. [< NL. lissencephalus, < Gr. λισσός, smooth, + ἐγκέφαλος, brain: see encephalon.] Having a smooth cerebrum; pertaining to the Lissencephala, or having their characters.

Crownes of goolde and asure bendes entrauerse lysted as grene as a mede, and the stremers down to the handes of Antony his stiwarde. Merlin (E. E. T. S.), ii. 163.

Most of them, I mean among your Latin Epistolizers, go freighted with mere Bartholomew Ware, with trite and trivial Phrases only, listed with pedantic Shreds of Schoolboy Verses. Howell, Letters, I. i. 1.

A Danish Curtax, listed with gold or silver, hung on his left shoulder. Milton, Hist. Eng., vi.

2. To sew or put together, as strips of cloth, so as to make a variegated display of color, or to form a border.

The showery arch,
With listed colours gay, or, azure, gules,
Delights and puzzles the beholder's eye.
J. Philips, Cider, ii.

3. To cover with list, or with lists or strips of cloth: as, to list a door; hence, to mark as if with list; streak.

He listed the doors against approaching winter breezes.
R. T. Cooke, Somebody's Neighbors, p. 64.

4. In carp., to take off the edge of, as a board; shape by chopping preparatory to finishing, as a block or stave. E. H. Knight.—5. To ridge with raised borders of earth, as rows of Indian corn, by throwing up a furrow on each side with a double-moldboard plow. [Western U. S.]

Particularly for use on growing check-rowed and listed corn. Sci. Amer., N. S., LVIII. 298.

6. In cotton-culture, to prepare for the crop (as land) by making a bed with the hoe, and alternating beds with alleys. [Southern U. S.]

There is much difference of opinion upon the subject of burning or listing [in preparing the land for a cotton crop].
New Amer. Farm Book, p. 261.

list[5] (list), n. [= D. lijst = G. Dan. liste = Sw. lista, < OF. liste, F. liste = Sp. Pg. It. lista, orig. a border, band, strip, in present use a roll or list of names, catalogue, < MHG. liste, G. leiste (= AS. list, E. list[4]), a border, band, edge, strip: see list[4].] 1. A roll or catalogue; an enumeration of persons or things by their names: as, a list of officers or members of a society; a list of books or of clothing.

Yes; 'tis the list
Of those that claim their offices this day
By custom of the coronation.
Shak., Hen. VIII., iv. 1. 15.

I would not enter on my list of friends . . .
the man
Who needlessly sets foot upon a worm.
Cowper, Task, vi. 560.

What student came but that you planed her path
To Lady Psyche? . . .
Still her lists were swell'd and mine were lean.
Tennyson, Princess, iv.

2. A book, card, or slip of paper containing a series of names of persons or things, or prepared for the noting of such names: as, a visiting-list; a washing-list.—Active list, burgess list, descriptive list. See the qualifying words.—Civil list, the list or the aggregate of the sums appropriated for the payment of the civil officers of a government; hence, the body of such officers in a country. (For the use of the phrase in Great Britain, see civil.)—Free list, a list or category of particular persons who or things which are exempt from some general requirement. Specifically—(a) A list of the articles exempt from duty under existing revenue laws. (b) A list of persons allowed free admittance to any public entertainment. =Syn. List, Roll, Register, Catalogue, Inventory, Schedule. Roll applies only to persons, inventory and schedule only to things; the rest apply to both. List is much the most general. A list may be merely of names, without description or order, as a list of shops, a list of persons proscribed. Roll differs from list only in limitation to persons and in faint suggestion of its original meaning of a roiled-up paper or parchment. Register suggests an official act of some formality and fullness of detail, perhaps according to a legal or customary form: as, a register of voters, of marriages, or of deaths. Catalogue supposes orderly arrangement and some fullness of description: as, a catalogue of the paintings in a gallery, of the specimens in a museum, of the books in a library, or of the students in a college. An inventory is a list of property, generally with prices or values, made for legal or business purposes, as on a dissolution of partnership. A schedule is a list of things, made for any purpose, and showing what they are both in a general view and in some detail: as, a schedule of studies, or of assets.

list[5] (list), v. [< list[5], n.] I. trans. 1. To put into a list or catalogue; register; enroll.

They may be listed among the upper serving-men of some great household. Milton.

Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), II. 310.

Though all th' inhabitants of sea and air
Be listed in the glutton's bill of fare.
Cowley, On a Garden.

Specifically—2. To register the name of as a soldier; muster into the public service as a soldier; enlist: in this sense partly by apheresis from enlist.

Libertinism hath erected its standard, hath declared war against religion, and openly listed men of its side and party. Bp. Atterbury, Sermons, I. xiii.

A sergeant made use of me to inveigle country fellows, and list them in the service of the parliament.
Addison, Adventures of a Shilling.

3. To enter for taxation, as property of any kind, upon the assessment-roll or a tax-book. [Local, U. S.]

II. intrans. To enter the public service by enrolling one's name; enlist: in this use partly by apheresis from enlist.

At the age of fifteen, I went and listed for a soldier.
Goldsmith, Strolling Player.

Listerise, v. t. See Listerize.

Listerism (lis'tėr-izm), n. [< Lister (see def.) + -ism.] An antiseptic method of operating introduced by Sir Joseph (Lord) Lister, an English surgeon. It was designed to effect the total exclusion of living germs from surgical wounds. A spray of carbolic solution was brought to play over the part under operation, that the germicidal effect might result not only on the surface of the tissues, but also in the surrounding air. After the operation the part was closely enveloped in dressings impregnated with carbolic acid or other germicide, which were disturbed as little as possible during recovery. Some of the features of the early forms of Lister's method have fallen into disuse, but the recognition of the importance of the exclusion of living germs from surgical wounds, of the danger of the introduction of germs from air, instruments, appliances of all kinds, and the hands of those operating, and of the value in this regard not only of cleanliness but of germicidal drugs, seems to be a permanent acquisition of surgical art.

Listerize (lis'tėr-īz), v. t.; pret. and pp. Listerized, ppr. Listerizing. [< Lister (see Listerism) + -ize.] To treat by Sir Joseph Lister's (Lord Lister) antiseptic method. See Listerism. Also spelled Listerise.

I, listless, yet restless,
Find every prospect vain.
Burns, Despondency.

2. Marked by languid inactivity; manifesting relaxed attention; inanimate: as, a listless attitude.

His listless length at noontide would he stretch.
Gray, Elegy.

With a half smile she let fall the gold
And glistening gems her listless hand did hold.
William Morris, Earthly Paradise, II. 220.

=Syn. 1. Listless, Careless, Supine, Indolent. The listless and the careless do not care or desire; the supine and the indolent do not care enough to conquer their shrinking from activity or work. The words may all indicate a temporary state or a permanent element of character; indolent generally indicates the latter. (See idle.) Careless is not caring; supine is literally lying flat on one's back, not rousing one's self at all, ignobly indifferent; listless, indifferent and languid. Listless does not necessarily imply blame.

listlessly (list'les-li), adv. In a listless manner; without attention; heedlessly.

listlessness (list'les-nes), n. The state of being listless; indifference to what is passing; languid inattention.

litany (lit'a-ni), n.; pl. litanies (-niz). [Early ★mod. E. litanie, < ME. letanie, < OF. letanie, F. litanie = Pr. letania = Sp. letanía = Pg. ladainha = It. litania, letania, letana (in F., etc., usually in pl.), < LL. litania, < Gr. λιτανεία, an entreating, a litany, < λιταίνειν, rare form of λιτανεύειν, pray, < λίτεσθαι, λίσσεσθαι, beg, pray; cf. λιτή, prayer: see lite[2].] 1. Primarily, a solemn prayer of supplication; a public or general supplication to God, especially in processions.

Thei putten his name in here Letanyes, as a Seynt.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 177.

The morning hymns and psalmody and prayers then came all under the general term of litany, and the Arians were forbidden in this sense to make any litanies within the city, by this law of Arcadius.
Bingham, Antiq., I. xiii. 1.

2. Specifically, in liturgics, an appointed form of responsive prayer, used as part of a service or separately. The most important varieties have been the following: (a) Liturgical or missal litanies, found in the oldest liturgies or eucharistic offices, especially in the introductory division. Such are the synapte and ectene of the Oriental forms, consisting of a series of brief clauses, mostly beginning "In behalf of," then naming the person or thing prayed for, and concluding "let us beseech the Lord," with the response Kyrie eleïson. There were originally five such litanies in the liturgy: the initial diaconica or irenica (the Western Kyrie, pacificæ, and collect), the ectene after the Gospel, the litany after the offertory, that following the great intercession by the priest after consecration, and a closing litany after communion. In the West such litanies were in use for many centuries, but they have not been retained in the Roman Church, which has, however, versicles before the introit and the Kyrie after it. (b) In the day hours and other offices similar litanies often form part of the service in both East and West. (c) As separate offices in the Western Church, litanies have been used since the fifth century, especially in processions of clergy and people. The earliest form of these was the repetition of Kyrie eleïson a great number of times without variation, the petitions of the missal litanies being omitted. Somewhat later the existing Western form was developed, beginning with the Kyrie and invocation of the Trinity, followed by invocations of saints, deprecations, obsecrations, supplications or intercessions, with other suffrages and prayers. The Anglican Litany in the Book of Common Prayer follows very closely the model just described, but omits all invocations of saints, recites generally several petitions in succession before inserting a response, and makes a few additions. (See deprecation, 2.) It is, properly speaking, a separate service, but is regularly said after the third collect at morning prayer on Sundays, Wednesdays, and Fridays. On Sundays and holy days it immediately precedes the communion service, or else is said separately. In the Roman Catholic Church three litanies are recognized for use in public worship: (1) the Litany of the Saints; (2) the Litany of the Blessed Virgin, or Litany of Loreto; and (3) the Litany of the Most Holy Name of Jesus. See lite[2].

And songe the letanye
And other gode orysons.
Rob. of Gloucester, p. 406.

Hence—3. Any earnest supplication or prayer. [Poetical.]

See diaconica, ectene, irenicon, synapte. —Lesser litany. (a) The petitions Kyrie eleison, Christe eleison, Kyrie eleison, each said thrice, as at the beginning of the eucharistic office or mass, or the same translated, "Lord (or Christ), have mercy upon us." (b) The same petitions with the following versicles or prayers and responses in the litany in the English Book of Common Prayer, allowed to be omitted at discretion in the American Book. (c) The same petitions with the following versicles and responses in the Orders for Morning and Evening Prayer.

litany-desk (lit'a-ni-desk), n. In the Anglican Ch., a movable desk at which a minister or reader kneels facing the altar, while he recites the litany. It is placed in the body of the church, in front of the door of the rood-screen or chancel. This position outside the choir or sanctuary is intended to accord with the penitential character of the litany. Also called litany-stool and (less correctly) faldstool. See cut under faldstool.

litany-stool (lit'a-ni-stōl), n. Same as litany-desk.

A petty schoolmaster; a dabbler in learning.

They systematically corrupt a very corruptible race, . . . a set of pert, petulant literators, to whom, instead of their proper, but severe, unostentatious duties, they assign the brilliant part of men of wit and pleasure, of gay young military sparks, and danglers at toilets.
Burke, To a Member of the Nat. Assembly.

2. A man of literary culture; a man of letters; a literary man.

Eobanus was the Poet of the Reformation, and, with Melanchthon and Camerarius, its chief Literator.
Sir W. Hamilton.

Literator, modified from littérateur, is much nearer being Anglicized. This word, but not in the sense attached to it by Burke, we have long desiderated; and the countenance it has received from Southey, Landor, Lockhart, Mr. De Quincey, and Mr. Carlyle has already availed to take off something of its strangeness of aspect.
F. Hall, Mod. Eng., p. 184.

★literature (lit'ę-ra-tūr), n. [Early mod. E. also litterature (in ME. letterure, lettrure, < OF. lettrure: see letterure), < OF. literature, F. littérature = Sp. literatura = Pg. litteratura = It. litteratura, letteratura = D. litteratuur = G. A clerk hadde litherly biset his whyle
But if he koude a carpenter bigyle.
Chaucer, Miller's Tale, l. 113.

Saise to syr Lucius, to unlordly he wyrkez,
Thus letherly agaynes law to lede my pople.

litherness¹† (līᵺ′ėr-nes), n. [ME. lithernesse; < *lither*¹ + -ness.] 1. Wickedness.

Thei als wrecchis, wittirly,
Has ledde ther liffe in lithirnesse.
York Plays, p. 498.

2. Idleness. [Prov. Eng.]

litherness²† (līᵺ′ėr-nes), n. [< *lither*² + -ness.] The condition or quality of being lither or limber.

litherous† (līᵺ′ėr-us), a. [Also lidderous, liddrous; < *lither*¹ + -ous.] Wicked; base.

But my learning is of an other degree,
To taunt theim like liddrous lewde as thei bee.
Skelton, Against Venomous Tongues, l. 29.

lithesome (līᵺ′- or līth′sum), a. [< *lithe*¹ + -some. Also contr. lissome.] Pliant; limber; nimble; lissome.

lithesomeness (līᵺ′- or līth′sum-nes), n. The state of being lithe or lithesome.

lithia (lith′i-ä), n. [NL., < lithium, q. v.] An oxid (Li_2O) of the metal lithium. It is of a white color, and is slowly soluble in water, forming a hydroxid, acrid and caustic, which acts on colors like other alkalis.—Lithia emerald. See emerald.—Lithia mica. See lepidolite.—Lithia water, mineral water containing a considerable portion of lithia salts, found in natural springs in the United States. The name is also applied to artificial mineral waters of similar constitution.

lithiasis (li-thī′a-sis), n. [NL., < Gr. λιθίασις, the stone (a disease), < λίθος, a stone.] In pathol.: (a) A condition of the body in which uric acid is deposited in the form of stone or gravel in the urinary passages, or in gouty concretions in the tissues. (b) In a general sense, the formation of stony deposits of any kind in any part of the body.

lithiate (lith′i-āt), n. Same as lithate.

lithiate (lith′i-āt), v. t. [< lithium + *-ate*².] To impregnate with a salt of lithium.

lithic¹ (lith′ik), a. [< Gr. λιθικός, of or for stones, < λίθος, a stone (a substance), stone (a disease), etc.; no cognate forms appear in other languages. Hence -lith, -lite, in E. words.] 1. Pertaining to or consisting of stone.

As a general rule it may be asserted that the best lithic ornaments are those which approach nearest to the grace and pliancy of plants. J. Fergusson, Hist. Arch., I. 35.

2. Pertaining to stone in the bladder; uric.— Lithic acid. Same as uric acid (which see, under uric).

lithic[2] (lith'ik), a. [< lithium + -ic.] Containing or related to the element lithium.

Lithic Iodide gave the red line of this metal (W. L. 6705) extending all across the spectrum.
J. N. Lockyer, Spect. Anal., p. 160.

Lithic paint, a mastic of petalite (a mineral containing lithium), sand, and litharge, used as a coating for walls. E. H. Knight.

Lithichnozoa (li-thik-nō-zō'ä), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. λίθος, a stone, + ἴχνος, a track, + ζῷον, an animal.] A name given by Prof. E. Hitchcock to the undetermined fossil animals which left their footprints in the Connecticut sandstones. Some, at first supposed to have been gigantic birds, are now believed to have been dinosaurian reptiles.

lithification (lith″i-fi-kā'shon), n. [< Gr. λίθος, a stone, + L. -ficatio(n-), < facere, make: see -fication, -fy.] A hardening into stone; the process of becoming stone. Rarely used, and only when it is desired to speak of the conversion of unconsolidated sediments into solid rock, without any reference to the fossils which they may contain. See petrifaction.

Lithification of sediments will probably take place under heavy pressure even at ordinary temperature, but is no doubt hastened by high temperature.
J. Le Conte, in Amer. Jour. Sci., 3d ser., IV. 468.

lithing (līтн'ing), n. [Verbal n. of lithe[1], v.] The thickening of soup or broth. [Scotch.]

lithiophilite (lith-i-of'i-līt), n. [So called as containing lithium; < NL. lithium + Gr. φίλος, loving, + -ite[2].] A variety of triphylite containing a large amount of manganese. It occurs at Branchville in Connecticut.

lithistid (lith'is-tid), a. and n. I. a. Pertaining to the Lithistida, or having their characters; lithistidan.

II. n. A sponge of the group Lithistida.

Lithistida (li-this'ti-dä), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. as if *λίθιστος, assumed verbal n. of λιθίζειν, look like a stone (< λίθος, a stone), + -ida.] A large group of silicious sponges in which the spicules are more or less clearly tetraxial and are interwoven into a dense skeleton, the stony body presenting a central gastric cavity or many vertical tubes; the stone-sponges. It contains the recent families Rhizomorinidæ, Anomocladinidæ, and Tetracladinidæ, and the fossil Megamorinidæ. In Sollas's classification the Lithistida are one of two orders of tetractinellidan sponges, the other being Choristida, and are defined as Tetractinellida with branching scleres or desmas, which may or may not be modified tetrad spicules, articulated together to form a rigid skeleton. Also Lithistidæ and Lithistinæ, variously rated.

lithistidan (li-this'ti-dan), a. and n. [< Lithistida + -an.] I. a. Of or pertaining to the group Lithistida; stony, as a sponge.

II. n. A stone-sponge of the group Lithistida.

lithium (lith'i-um), n. [NL., < Gr. λίθος, a stone.] Chemical symbol, Li; atomic weight, 7.00. A metallic element having a silver-white luster, quickly tarnishing in the air. It may be cut with a knife, but is less soft than potassium or sodium; it fuses at 180° C., and takes fire at a somewhat higher temperature. Lithium is the lightest of all known solid bodies, its specific gravity being 0.5936. It forms salts analogous to those of potassium and sodium. It occurs only in combination, most abundantly in the minerals spodumene, petalite, amblygonite, triphylite (and lithiophilite), and lepidolite (lithia mica).

lithly†. An irregular Middle English spelling of lightly. Chaucer.

litho (lith'ō). A common technical abbreviation of lithograph.

lithobiblion† (lith-ō-bib'li-on), n. [NL., < Gr. λίθος, stone, + βιβλίον, a book: see bible.] Same as bibliolite.

Lithobiidæ (lith-ō-bī'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Lithobius + -idæ.] A family of centipeds of the order Chilopoda, having the body unequally segmented, with 9 larger and 6 smaller divisions, 15 pairs of legs, and long many-jointed antennæ. The species are of moderate and small size, and their bite is not severe. They are common under stones, and are sometimes called earwigs in the United States. Also Lithobiinæ, as a subfamily of Scolopendridæ.

Lithobius (li-thō'bi-us), n. [NL., < Gr. λίθος, stone, + βίος, life.] The typical genus of Lithobiidæ, characterized by a flattened form, 2-jointed tarsi, and 40-jointed antennæ. L. americanus is a common United States species. L. forficatus is the corresponding European form.

lithocarp (lith'ō-kärp), n. [< Gr. λίθος, stone, + καρπός, fruit.] A fossil fruit; a carpolite.

lithochromatic (lith″ō-krō-mat'ik), a. [< Gr. λίθος, stone, + χρῶμα, color: see chromatic.] Pertaining to lithochromatics; relating to or produced by the application of oil-colors to stone: as, lithochromatic painting.

lithochromatics (lith″ō-krō-mat'iks), n. [Pl. of lithochromatic: see -ics.] The art of painting in oil-colors upon stone, and of taking impressions from the stone on canvas.

lithochromatographic (lith-ō-krō″ma-tō-graf'-ik), a. [< Gr. λίθος, stone, + χρῶμα(τ-), color, + -γραφία, < γράφειν, write.] Same as chromolithographic.

lithochromic (lith-ō-krō'mik), a. [< Gr. λίθος, stone, + χρῶμα, color: see chromatic.] Same as lithochromatic.

lithochromics (lith-ō-krō'miks), n. [Pl. of lithochromic: see -ics.] Same as lithochromatics.

lithoclast (lith'ō-klast), n. [< Gr. λίθος, stone, + *κλαστής, < κλᾶν, break in pieces.] 1. One who breaks stones.

A party of horsemen . . . were ready at the gates of the mosque to assist the lithoclast as soon as he should have executed his task.
Burckhardt, Travels in Arabia, i. 307. (Davies.)

2. An instrument used for crushing stones in the bladder, particularly for crushing stones too large for extraction in the course of a lithotomy, the instrument being introduced through the wound.

lithoclastic (lith-ō-klas'tik), a. [As lithoclast + -ic.] Of or pertaining to the breaking of stones in the bladder.

Lithocolletidæ (lith″ō-ko-let'i-dē), n. pl. [NL. (Staudinger, 1861), < Lithocolletis + -idæ.] A family of tineid moths containing such important genera as Lithocolletis (the type), Tischeria, and Bedellia. They have no ocelli, short and thin palpi, long-fringed fore wings with the middle cell closed and 7, 8, or 10 veins, and small lanceolate hind wings with very long fringes. The larvæ are usually leaf-miners, but those of Œnophila live in fungi.

Lithocolletis (lith″ō-ko-lē'tis), n. [NL. (Hübner, 1816), < Gr. λιθοκόλλητος, set with precious stones, < λίθος, stone, < κολλητός, verbal adj. of κολλᾶν, glue, fasten, < κόλλα, glue.] A large genus of tineids, typical of the family Lithocolletidæ, with over 100 European and nearly as many North American species, whose larvæ are leaf-miners. L. blancardella mines the leaves of the apple in the United States.

Lithocorallia (lith″ō-kō-ral'i-ä), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. λίθος, stone, + κοράλλιον, coral: see coral.] An abandoned ordinal name for the fossil corals.

lithocoralline (lith-ō-kor'a-lin), a. [As Lithocorallia + -ine[1]. Cf. coralline.] Having the characters of the Lithocorallia.

lithocyst (lith'ō-sist), n. [< Gr. λίθος, stone, + κύστις, bladder: see cyst.] A vesicular sense-organ containing an inorganic concretion or crystal. Lithocysts are present in the veiled medusæ, the veilless medusæ, the Mollusca, and many other animals.

There can be little doubt that the lithocysts, or sacs containing mineral particles, which are so frequently found in the Medusæ, are of the nature of auditory organs; while the masses of pigment, with embedded refracting bodies, which often occur associated with the lithocysts, are doubtless rudimentary eyes.
Huxley, Anat. Invert., p. 115.

Lithocyst of the Ephyra of Aurelia aurita, with pedunclc, side view—arrow indicating direction in which the cilia of the exterior work.

Lithodendron (lith-ō-den'-drọn), n. [NL., < Gr. λιθόδενδρον, a tree-shaped coral, < λίθος, a stone, + δένδρον, a tree.] The typical genus of Lithodendroninæ. Schweigger, 1820. Also written Lithodendrum. J. D. Dana, 1846.

Lithodendroninæ (lith-ō-den-drō-nī'nē), n. pl. [NL., < Lithodendron + -inæ.] A subfamily of fossil carboniferous stone-corals, of the family Cyathophyllidæ, typified by the genus Lithodendron: so called from their branched form and petrified state. Edwards and Haime, 1856.

Lithodendrum (lith-ō-den'drum), n. [NL.] Same as Lithodendron.

Lithodes (li-thō'dēz), n. [NL., < Gr. λιθώδης, like stone, stony: see lithoid.] The typical genus of Lithodidæ, containing such species as L.

Agassiz's Deep-sea Spider-crab (Lithodes agassizii).

arcticus of northern seas, and L. agassizi. These crabs resemble maioids in general form and appearance, but belong to a different group. Latreille, 1802.

Lithodidæ (li-thod'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Lithodes + -idæ.] A family of anomurous decapod crustaceans, typified by the genus Lithodes, having the carapace triangular or somewhat cordate, with elongated rostrum, no abdominal appendages, and the fifth pair of legs much reduced.

lithodome (lith'ō-dōm), n. [< NL. lithodomus, < Gr. λιθοδόμος, a mason, < λίθος, stone, + δέμειν, build (> δόμος, a house): see dome[1].] A shell-fish which lives in a hole made by it in a rock, as a date-shell or a piddock. See Lithodomus and Pholas.

lithodomi, n. Plural of lithodomus, 2.

lithodomous (li-thod'ō-mus), a. [As lithodome + -ous.] 1. Dwelling in rocks; having the characters of a lithodome: as, lithodomous mollusks.—2. Done by a lithodome; pertaining in any way to a lithodome: as, lithodomous perforations. Sir C. Lyell.

Lithodomus (li-thod'ō-mus), n. [NL.: see lithodome.] 1. A genus of mussels of the family Mytilidæ, of small size and subcylindric form, which burrow in rocks, and are known as date-shells. L. lithophagus is an example. Also called Lithotomus and Lithophagus. See cut under date-shell.—2. [l. c.; pl. lithodomi (-mī).] A member of this genus.

lithofracteur (lith-ō-frak'tėr), n. [F., < Gr. λίθος, a stone, + LL. fractor, a breaker, < L. frangere, pp. fractus, break: see fraction.] An explosive mixture, containing 40 per cent. of nitroglycerin, mixed with silicious earth, or wood fiber, potassium nitrate, and paraffin, used principally in blasting. Also rend-rock.

lithogenesy (lith-ō-jen'e-si), n. [< Gr. λίθος, stone, + γένεσις, origin: see genesis.] The doctrine or science of the origin of the minerals composing the globe, and of the causes which have produced their form and disposition.

lithogenous (li-thoj'e-nus), a. [< Gr. λίθος, stone, + -γενής, -producing: see -genous.] Stone-producing; of or pertaining to animals which form coral.

lithoglyph (lith'ō-glif), n. [< Gr. λιθογλύφος, carving stone, < λίθος, stone, + γλύφειν, carve.] An incision, engraving, or sculpture in stone, especially in a precious stone; also, an engraved or incised stone.

lithoglypher† (li-thog'li-fėr), n. One who cuts or engraves precious stones, gems, etc.

lithoglyphic (lith-ō-glif'ik), a. [As lithoglyph + -ic.] Relating to the art of cutting and engraving on precious stones, gems, etc.

lithoglyphite (li-thog'li-fīt), n. [As lithoglyph + -ite[2].] A fossil that presents the appearance of being engraved or shaped by art.

lithoglyptics (lith-ō-glip'tiks), n. [< Gr. λίθος, stone, + E. glyptics, q. v.] The art of cutting and engraving precious stones or gems, as intaglios, cameos, etc.

lithograph (lith'ō-gràf), n. [< Gr. λίθος, stone, + γράφειν, write. Cf. lithography.] A print executed by lithography.

lithograph (lith'ō-gràf), v. [< lithograph, n.] I. trans. To reproduce by means of lithography: as, to lithograph a picture.

II. intrans. To practise lithography.

lithographer (li-thog'ra-fėr), n. One who practises lithography.

lithographic (lith-ō-graf'ik), a. [As lithograph-y + -ic.] Of or pertaining to lithography; engraved upon or printed from stone; produced by or employed in lithography: as, lithographic prints; a lithographic press.—Lithographic crayon. Same as crayon, 2.—Lithographic ink. See ink[1].—Lithographic paper, paper used, or specially prepared, for taking impressions from lithographic stones. For ordinary use common book- and map-papers are employed, but are specially selected from those in which the bleaching-agents and substances employed in the size are in kind or quantity such as do not, by chemical reaction upon ink or stone, injuriously affect the quality of the work.—Lithographic pen, a small, very fine steel pen used in lithographic work.—Lithographic press, a printing-press adapted for striking off impressions from lithographic stones. There are lithographic hand-presses, usually working by means of a traveling carriage which is run under a horizontal scraper-bar, and lithographic power-presses, in which the pressure is applied by means of a cylinder, and which generally have automatic devices for dampening and inking the stone and for feeding and removing the paper.—Lithographic roller, a wooden or metallic inking-roller used in lithographic printing. It is wrapped in woolen cloth, and covered with leather of uniform thickness and fine quality. Hand-rollers have handles at each end, covered with loose leather sleeves, by the compression of which the printer can produce varied effects. Machine-rollers, similar in construction to hand-rollers, have stocks of metal, and are sometimes as much as 60 inches long. They are driven by friction-disks running with the bed of the press.—Lithographic slate. Same as lithographic stone.—Lithographic stone, a compact slaty limestone, of a yellowish color and fine grain, used in lithography. The best comes from the flaggy oölites of Solnhofen in Bavaria; but others are got in the oölites of England, France, and Greece, and from Canada and Utah.—Lithographic-stone dresser, a machine for facing lithographic stones, or polishing their faces.—Lithographic varnish, a medium employed in making and also for thinning lithographic printing-ink. It is prepared from linseed-oil, heated and then burned, and retains enough of the greasy character to give the ink the qualities necessary for lithographic printing, but not enough to grease the stone or paper.

lithographical (lith-ō-graf'i-kal), a. [< lithographic + -al.] Same as lithographic. [Rare.]

lithographically (lith-ō-graf'i-kal-i), adv. By means of, or as regards, lithography.

lithographize (li-thog'ra-fiz), v. t.; pret. and pp. lithographized, ppr. lithographizing. [< lithograph + -ize.] To lithograph. [Rare.]

> Archæologia, XXII. 452.

lithography (li-thog'ra-fi), n. [< Gr. λίθος, stone, + -γραφία, < γράφειν, write.] The art of making a picture, design, or writing upon stone in such a manner that ink-impressions can be taken from the work, and of producing such impressions by a process analogous to ordinary printing. Lithography was invented by Aloys Senefelder of Munich, about 1796. A special kind of stone is used, called lithographic stone. (See lithographic.) The design may be put upon the stone by direct drawing, by transfer from paper or from another stone, by engraving, or by transfer from a photograph. In the first process the stone is prepared by grinding to give it a grained or slightly roughened surface, on which the design is drawn with a lithographic crayon precisely as it is to appear in print, but reversed; or the surface is smoothed, and the design is made with pen or brush in lithographic ink. When the drawing is finished, the stone is etched with dilute nitric acid, and then flooded with a solution of gum arabic in water, or it is flooded with nitric-acid and gum-arabic solutions combined. The acid decomposes the soap of the crayon or ink, and leaves the marked surface of the stone in a chemical condition that fits it to absorb fatty inks. The gum-water, on the other hand, covers with an adherent film all those parts of the surface of the stone which have been left untouched by the crayon or ink. The stone is then passed on to the printer, who "washes out" the picture with turpentine, after which the image appears faintly defined in white. To print from it, an inking-roller is now passed over the stone. The wet gummed surface resists the ink and remains clean, while the design takes up the ink and readily gives it back to paper under pressure in the press. The second or autographic process is by transfer. The design, picture, map, or writing is made on prepared paper with the proper ink, dampened, laid face downward on a heated stone and pulled through the press, when the ink leaves the paper and adheres to the stone. The after-treatment is the same as in the first process. Transfers are also made from stone to stone in like manner, to save from wear the original drawing on the first stone. The third process is allied to copperplate engraving. A smooth stone is prepared with gum-water, its face is colored with lamp-black or other pigment, and the picture is scratched through the gum with a steel needle. When it is finished the stone is oiled, and the oil is absorbed wherever the surface of the stone has been laid bare by the needle. The incised design is thus made fit to take up fatty inks, which are resisted by the gummed surface so long as it is kept damp. The fourth process is that of transferring a photograph to the stone, and is called photolithography (which see). These four processes are modified and combined in a great variety of ways, yet in all, with the exception of photolithography, the method is essentially that invented by Senefelder.

lithoid (lith'oid), a. [< Gr. λιθοειδής, also contr. λιθώδης. like stone, stony, < λίθος, stone, + εἶδος, form.] Resembling a stone; of a stony structure: opposed to vitreous. See devitrification.

> By the progressive development of crystallites or crystals during the cooling and consolidation of a molten rock a glass loses its vitreous character and becomes lithoid—in other words, undergoes devitrification.
> Geikie, Text-Book of Geol. (2d ed.), p. 108.

lithoidal (li-thoi'dal), a. [< lithoid + -al.] Same as lithoid.

litholabe (lith'ō-lāb), n. [< LGr. λιθολάβος, an instrument for extracting a stone, < Gr. λίθος, stone, + λαμβάνειν, λαβεῖν, take, seize.] A device to keep a stone in the bladder fixed so that it can be acted upon by lithotritic instruments; also a forceps for extracting the stone.

litholapaxy (lith″ō-la-pak'si), n. [< Gr. λίθος, stone, + λάπαξις, an evacuation, < λάπασσειν, empty.] In surg., a form of lithotrity; a method of crushing stone in the bladder and evacuating it.

litholatrous (li-thol'a-trus), a. [< litholatr-y + -ous.] Practising or pertaining to litholatry: as, litholatrous persons or rites. Imp. Dict.

litholatry (li-thol'a-tri), n. [< Gr. λίθος, stone, + λατρεία, worship: see latria.] The worship of stones of particular shapes. Imp. Dict.

litholeine (li-thō'lē-in), n. [< Gr. λίθος, stone, + L. oleum (< Gr. ἔλαιον), oil, + -ine[2].] A yellow oily liquid distilled from petroleum, used in eczema and parasitic skin-diseases.

lithologic (lith-ō-loj'ik), a. [< lithology + -ic.] Of or pertaining to lithology or the science of rocks; relating to stones; concerning the nature or composition of stone; petrographic.

lithological (lith-ō-loj'i-kal), a. [< lithologic + -al.] Same as lithologic.

lithologically (lith-ō-loj'i-kal-i), adv. In a lithological manner; from a lithological point of view; as regards lithologic character or structure: as, strata lithologically distinct.

lithologist (li-thol'ō-jist), n. [< litholog-y + -ist.] One who is versed in lithology.

lithology (li-thol'ō-ji), n. [< Gr. λίθος, stone, + -λογία, < λέγειν, speak: see -ology.] 1. Formerly the science of rocks; as used by some geologists, the study of specimens of rocks in their minute mineral characters: used in a broad indefinite sense. The designation of the systematic science of rocks is now petrography.

2. That department of medical science which is concerned with the study and treatment of calculi found in the human body.

lithomancy (lith'ō-man-si), n. [< Gr. λίθος, stone, + μαντεία, divination, < μάντις, a diviner.] Divination or prediction by means of stones.

> As strange must be the lithomancy, or divination from this stone, whereby Helenus the prophet foretold the destruction of Troy. Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., ii. 3.

lithomarge (lith'ō-märj), n. [< Gr. λίθος, stone, + L. marga, marl.] One of several imperfectly determined minerals, or mixtures of minerals, all of which are hydrous silicates of alumina, and closely related to or identical with kaolin and kaolinite. Some varieties are compact, others more or less pulverulent. The word is little used in English except as the translation of the German steinmark, literally 'rock-marrow.'

lithopædium (lith-ō-pē'di-um), n. [NL., < Gr. λίθος, a stone, + παιδίον, dim. of παῖς (παιδ-), a child.] A dead fetus, retained, and impregnated with salts of lime.

Lithophaga (li-thof'a-gä), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of lithophagus: see lithophagous.] A family of bivalve mollusks containing several genera whose members burrow in rocks and other hard substances, as Saxicava, Petricola, Venerupis, etc. The term is no longer in use; the family being heterogeneous, its representatives are by modern systematists dissociated in different families, namely Saxicavidæ (or Glycimeridæ), Petricolidæ, and Veneridæ. Also called Lithophagæ, Lithophagi, Lithophagidæ. Lamarck, 1812–18.

lithophagi (li-thof'a-jī), n. pl. [NL.: see lithophagous.] 1. Eaters of stone: applied collectively or indiscriminately to animals that perforate or penetrate stones or stony objects to make a nest or burrow for themselves therein. Such are the lithodomous mollusks, as date-shells (Lithodomus) and piddocks (Pholadidæ), various zoöphytes, annelids, etc. See cuts under date-shell and piddock.

2. [cap.] Same as Lithophaga.

Lithophagidæ (lith-ō-faj'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Lithophagus + -idæ.] Same as Lithophaga.

lithophagous (li-thof'a-gus), a. [< NL. lithophagus, < Gr. λίθος, a stone, + φαγεῖν, eat.] 1. Eating stones; swallowing gravel, as a bird.—2. Perforating or penetrating stones, as the Lithophaga; lithodomous.

Lithophagus (li-thof'a-gus), n. [NL.: see lithophagous.] 1. A genus of mussels of the family Mytilidæ (not pertaining to the Lithophaga): same as Lithodomus, 1.

lithophane (lith'ō-fān), n. [< Gr. λίθος, stone, + -φανής, appearing, < φαίνεσθαι, appear.] A style of ornamentation adapted for lamps, decorative windows, and other transparencies, produced by impressing sheets of porcelain-glass, when in a soft state, with figures, which become visible by transmitted light.

lithophosphor (lith'ō-fos-fôr), n. [< Gr. λίθος, stone, + φωσφόρος, giving light: see phosphor, phosphorus.] A stone that becomes phosphorescent when heated.

lithophosphoric (lith″ō-fos-for'ik), a. [< lithophosphor + -ic.] Pertaining to lithophosphor, or having its nature; becoming phosphorescent by heat.

lithophotography (lith″ō-fō-tog'ra-fi), n. [< Gr. λίθος, stone, + E. photography, q. v.] Same as photolithography. Imp. Dict.

lithophyl, lithophyll (lith'ō-fil), n. [NL., < Gr. λίθος, stone, + φύλλον, a leaf.] A fossil leaf or impression of a leaf, or a stone containing such a leaf or impression.

lithophysa (lith-ō-fī'sä), n.; pl. lithophysæ (-sē). [NL., < Gr. λίθος, stone, + φῦσα, bubble.] A spherulite having a concentrically chambered structure: so called by von Richthofen.

lithophyse (lith'ō-fīs), n. Same as lithophysa.

lithophyte (lith'ō-fīt), n. [< Gr. λίθος, stone, + ★φυτόν, a plant.] Any one of the polyps whose substance is stony or hard, as corals and sea-fans.

lithophytic (lith-ō-fit'ik), a. [< lithophyte + -ic.] Same as lithophytous.

lithophyton†, n. A lithophyte.

> Coral . . . is a lithophyton, or stone plant, and groweth at the bottom of the sea. Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., ii. 5.

lithophytous (lith'ō-fī-tus), a. [< lithophyte + -ous.] Pertaining to or consisting of lithophytes.

lithopone (lith'ō-pōn), n. A substance composed of zinc sulphid and barium sulphate, used as a white pigment.

Lithornis (li-thôr'nis), n. [NL., < Gr. λίθος, stone, + ὄρνις, a bird.] The generic name proposed by Professor Owen for certain bird-remains from the Eocene clay at Sheppey in England, supposed to have been accipitrine. The species is named Lithornis vulturinus.

Lithosia (li-thō'si-ä), n. [NL. (Fabricius, 1798), < Gr. λίθος, a stone.] The typical genus of Lithosiidæ. The palpi are short, squamous, and two-jointed; the antennæ are simple, and setose in the male; and the tibiæ are short and slender. There are nearly 100 species, and the genus is wide-spread. L. (Lexis) bicolor is common in North America. The common footman of Great Britain is L. complanula, of a dull color, expanding about 1¼ inches.

Lithosia (Crambidea) cephalica. (Cross shows natural size.)
This moth is a pure silvery-white. The fringe on the under pair of wings is long and soft.

lithosiid (li-thō'si-id), a. and n. I. a. Pertaining to the Lithosiidæ, or having their characters.

II. n. Any member of the Lithosiidæ.

Lithosiidæ (lith-ō-sī'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Lithosia + -idæ.] A family of bombycoid moths, typified by the genus Lithosia; the footmen. They have a slender body, filiform antennæ, moderate three-jointed labial palps, ample wings, subelliptical fore wings, and unfolded hind wings with a conspicuous frenulum. The larvæ feed upon plants and lichens, and are often clothed with hairs arising from piligerous tubercles. There are about 100 genera, and the family is wide-spread.

Lithospermeæ (lith-ō-spėr'mē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (A. P. de Candolle, 1845), < Lithospermum + -eæ.] A tribe of plants of the family Boraginaceæ, typified by the genus Lithospermum, and characterized by having the four erect or incurved nutlets sessile and attached by the immediate base to a plane gynobase. It embraces 17 genera of herbs or low shrubs, including among them Mertensia (the lungworts), Onosmodium (the false gromwell), Myosotis (the forget-me-not), and many other plants.

lithospermous (lith-ō-spėr'mus), a. [< Gr. λίθος, stone, + σπέρμα, seed: see sperm.] In bot., having hard and stone-like fruit.

Lithospermum (lith-ō-spėr'mum), n. [NL. (Linnæus, 1753) (so called in allusion to the nuts or seeds, which are very hard and have a polished surface), < L. lithospermon, < Gr. λιθόσπερμον, gromwell, < λίθος, stone, + σπέρμα, seed: see sperm.] A genus of plants of the family Boraginaceæ, type of the tribe Lithospermeæ, characterized by a corolla with a cylindrical tube, a usually naked throat, and a spreading limb. The stamens are included, and the nutlets smooth, with a small flat surface at the base. There are about 40 species, growing throughout the warm and temperate parts of the northern hemisphere, a few in eastern Africa and the western part of South America. They are rough hairy herbs, rarely undershrubs, bearing purple, blue, white, or yellow flowers, either solitary in the axils or (the upper) in leafy bracted spikes or racemes. See gromwell, alkanet, 3, and puccoon.

lithosphere (lith'ō-sfēr), n. [< Gr. λίθος, stone, + σφαῖρα, sphere: see sphere.] The crust of the earth: a designation corresponding with atmosphere and hydrosphere.

lithostrotion (lith-ō-strō'ti-on), n. [NL., < L. lithostrotus, mosaic, < Gr. λιθόστρωτος, paved with stones, < λίθος, stone, + στρωτός, covered, < στρωννύναι, spread: see strew, strow.] 1†. A kind of fossil coral found in Carboniferous limestone. Llhwyd, 1699.—2. [cap.] A genus of fossil rugose corals of the family Cyathophyllidæ. Also Lithostrotium.

lithothryptic (lith-ō-thrip'tik), a. [< Gr. λίθος, stone, + θρυπτικός, able to break, < θρύπτειν, break to pieces.] Same as lithotritic. Sometimes, erroneously, lithonthryptic.

lithothryptist (lith-ō-thrip'tist), n. [< lithothrypt-ic + -ist.] Same as lithotritist.

lithothryptor (lith'ō-thrip-tor), n. [< lithothrypt-ic + -or.] Same as lithotritor.

lithothrypty (lith'ō-thrip-ti), n. [< Gr. λίθος, stone, + θρύπτειν, break to pieces.] The operation of crushing stone in the bladder; lithotrity.

lithotint (lith'ō-tint), n. [< Gr. λίθος, stone, + E. tint.] 1. The art or process of producing pictures in colors from lithographic stones.—2. A picture so produced.

lithotome (lith'ō-tōm), n. [< Gr. λιθοτόμος, cutting stones, < λίθος, stone, + τέμνειν, ταμεῖν, cut: see tome.] 1. A mineral which in its rough state has the appearance of a cut gem.—2. In surg., an improper name for a cystotome.

lithotomic (lith-ō-tom'ik), a. [< lithotom-y + -ic.] Of, pertaining to, or performed by lithotomy.

lithotomical (lith-ō-tom'i-kal), a. [< lithotomic + -al.] Same as lithotomic.

lithotomist (li-thot'ō-mist), n. [< lithotom-y + -ist.] One who practises cutting for stone in the bladder.

lithotomize (li-thot'ō-mīz), v. t.; pret. and pp. lithotomized, ppr. lithotomizing. [< lithotom-y + -ize.] To perform lithotomy on.

He lithotomized a man, but was unable to extract a stone.
S. D. Gross, Autobiog., p. 45.

Lithotomus (li-thot'ō-mus), n. [NL.: see lithotome.] Same as Lithophagus or Lithodomus: a term coined to replace Lithophagus, in order to avoid the implication that the members of this genus eat the rock they excavate. Nitzsche, 1825; Voigt, 1834.

lithotomy (li-thot'ō-mi), n. [< LL. lithotomia, < Gr. λιθοτομία, a cutting of stones, a cutting for stone, < λιθοτόμος, cutting stones, cutting for stone: see lithotome.] The operation, art, or practice of cutting for stone in the bladder.

lithotripsy (lith'ō-trip-si), n. [< Gr. λίθος, stone, + τρῖψις, rubbing, < τρίβειν, rub.] Same as lithotrity.

lithotriptic (lith-ō-trip'tik), a. [< lithotripsy (-tript-) + -ic.] Same as lithotritic.

lithotriptist (lith-ō-trip'tist), n. [< lithotripsy (-tript-) + -ist.] Same as lithotritist.

lithotriptor (lith'ō-trip-tor), n. [< lithotripsy (-tript-) + -or.] Same as lithotritor.

lithotrite (lith'ō-trīt), n. [< Gr. λίθος, stone, + L. tritus, pp. of terere, rub: see trite.] An instrument for crushing a stone in the bladder, so as to reduce it to small particles which will pass through the urethra. Also lithotritor.

lithotritic (lith-ō-trit'ik), a. [As lithotrite + -ic; partly confused with lithothryptic.] Of or pertaining to lithotrity; having the property of destroying stone in the bladder.

lithotritist (lith'ō-trī-tist), n. [< lithotrite + -ist.] One who practises lithotrity. Also lithothryptist.

lithotritor (lith'ō-trī-tor), n. [NL., < Gr. λίθος, stone, + L. tritor, a rubber, < terere, pp. tritus, rub, grind.] Same as lithotrite.

lithotrity (lith'ō-trī-ti), n. [< Gr. λίθος, stone, + L. tritus, pp. of terere, rub, grind.] The operation of crushing a stone in the bladder by ★means of an instrument called a lithotrite.

lithotype (lith'ō-tīp), n. [< Gr. λίθος, stone, + τύπος, impression: see type.] 1. A kind of stereotype plate produced by lithotypy.—2. A method of printing from lithographic stone in the same manner as from type, the design on the stone being etched deeply enough to admit of the use of the type-press. E. H. Knight.

lithotype (lith'ō-tīp), v. t.; pret. and pp. lithotyped, ppr. lithotyping. [< lithotype, n.] To prepare for printing by lithotypy.

lithotypic (lith-ō-tip'ik), a. [< lithotype + -ic.] Relating to lithotypy; printed by the lithotype process.

lithotypy (lith'ō-tī-pi), n. [As lithotype + -y.] A peculiar process of stereotyping by pressing the types into a soft mold or matrix. On the removal of the types the hollows left by them are filled with a mixture of gum shellac, fine sand, tar, and linseed-oil in a heated state. This mixture when thrown into cold water becomes hard, and forms a plate ready to be printed from. From the sand present in it, it has a stony texture.

lit-house (lit'hous), n. A dye-house. [Prov. Eng.]

lithoxyle (li-thok'sil), n. [< Gr. λίθος, stone, + ξύλον, wood.] A variety of wood-opal, which retains distinctly the form and texture of the original wood.

lithoxylite (li-thok'si-līt), n. [< lithoxyle + *-ite*2.] Same as lithoxyle.

Lithuanian (lith-ū-ā'ni-an), a. and n. [< Lithuania (see def.) + -an.] I. a. Of or pertaining to Lithuania, or to its people or language.

II. n. 1. A member of a race inhabiting Lithuania, formerly an independent country southeast of the Baltic sea, afterward subject to Poland, now included in West Russia.—2. The language of Lithuania. It is one of a branch of Indo-European or Aryan tongues, usually called Lettic or Lettish, and most nearly allied to Slavic. These languages are spoken in parts of western Russia and eastern Prussia.

Lithuanic (lith-ū-an'ik), a. and n. [< Lithuania + -ic.] I. a. Same as Lithuanian.

II. n. Same as Lithuanian, 2; in a wider sense, same as Lettic.

lithuria (li-thū'ri-ä), n. [NL., < Gr. λίθος, stone, + οὖρον, urine.] The presence of an abnormal amount of uric acid in the urine.

lithwake (lith'wāk), a. [Also dial. leathwake; < ME. lithwayke, lythewayke, < leothewok, < AS. lithowāc, lithewāc, leothuwāc, with pliant joints, flexible, < lith (pl. leothu), a joint, + wāc, yielding, weak: see *lith*1 and weak.] Limber; flexible; pliable.

lithy (lī'ᴛʜi or -thi), a. [Also dial. lethy; < *lithe*1. + *-y*1.] 1. Lithe; easily bent; pliable.

Their lithie bodies bound with limits of a shell.
A Herrings Tayle (1598). (Nares.)

2. Heavy; warm: applied to the weather. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

lithy-tree (lī'ᴛʜi-trē), n. [From its pliable limbs; < lithy + tree.] The wayfaring-tree, Viburnum Lantana; also, Lithræa caustica.

litigable (lit'i-gą-bl), a. [< ML. litigabilis, < L. litigare, litigate: see litigate.] Capable of being litigated, or made the subject of a suit at law.

litigant (lit'i-gant), a. and n. [= F. litigant = Sp. Pg. It. litigante, < L. litigan(t-)s, ppr. of litigare, litigate: see litigate.] I. a. Disposed to litigate; contending in law; engaged in a lawsuit.

II. n. One who is a party to a suit at law.

In all the Teutonic bodies of custom except the English and the Lombardic, even when the greatest latitude of seizure is allowed to litigants out of Court, some judicial person or body must be applied to before they proceed to extremities. Maine, Early Hist. of Institutions, p. 284.

litigate (lit'i-gāt), v.; pret. and pp. litigated, ppr. litigating. [< L. litigatus, pp. of litigare, dispute, quarrel, carry on a suit, < lis (lit-), strife, dispute, suit, + agere, drive, carry on: see *lis*1 and agent.] I. intrans. To carry on a suit by judicial process.

The appellant, after the interposition of an appeal, still litigates in the same cause. Ayliffe, Parergon.

II. trans. To make the subject of a suit at law; bring before a court of law for decision; prosecute or defend at law, as a right or claim.

It is taken absolutely for granted that there is somewhere a rule of known law which will cover the facts of the dispute now litigated. Maine, Ancient Law, p. 31.

litigation (lit-i-gā'shon), n. [< LL. litigatio(n-), a dispute, < L. litigatus, pp. of litigare (> It. litigare = Pg. Sp. litigar), quarrel, carry on a suit: see litigate.] 1. The act or process of litigating or carrying on a suit in a court of law or equity; a judicial contest.

It was a curious coincidence that the great breach between England and Rome should be the result of a litigation in a matrimonial suit. Stubbs, Const. Hist., § 403.

Nothing quells a spirit of litigation like despair of success. Paley, Moral Philos., vi. 8.

2. Any dispute or discussion dependent upon evidence for decision. [Rare.]

Whether the "muscular sense" directly yields us knowledge of space is still a matter of litigation among psychologists. W. James, Mind, XII. 1.

litigator (lit'i-gā-tor), n. [< L. litigator, < litigare, litigate: see litigate.] One who litigates.

litigiosity (li-tij-i-os'i-ti), n. [< L. as if litigiosita(t-)s*, < litigiosus, contentious: see litigious.] 1. The character or quality of being litigious; litigiousness.—2. In Scots law, a tacit legal prohibition of alienation, to the prejudice of a begun action or diligence the object of which is to attain the possession or to acquire the property of a particular subject, or to attach it in security of debt. Imp. Dict.

litigious (li-tij'us), a. [< F. litigieux = Sp. Pg. It. litigioso, < L. litigiosus, disputatious, contentious, < litigium, strife, dispute, < litigare, dispute: see litigate.] 1. Inclined to litigate or go to law; given to the practice of bringing lawsuits; fond of litigation; contentious.

A rich litigious lord I love to follow,
A lord that builds his happiness on brawlings.
Fletcher, Spanish Curate, iii. 4.

2. Subject to or dependent upon legal contest; hence, disputable; controvertible; subject to contention: as, litigious right.

No fences, parted fields, nor marks nor bounds,
Distinguish'd acres of litigious grounds.
Dryden, tr. of Virgil's Georgics, i. 194.

The Governor . . . encouraged me to buy it, saying "that such kind of lands only were lawful here to be bought and sold, and that this was not in the least litigious." R. Knox (Arber's Eng. Garner, I. 386).

3. Of or pertaining to litigation; relating to or connected with legal contention.

They view'd the ground of Rome's litigious hall;
Once oxen low'd where now the lawyers bawl.
Dryden, Æneid, viii.

I never visit these scenes . . . without a very vehement desire to be disengaged . . . from litigious terms.
R. Choate, Addresses, etc., p. 134.

The litigious sophism, a logical puzzle, which runs thus: A law-student agreed to pay his teacher a certain sum if he won his first case. As he never had a case, his teacher sued him for the amount, thinking that if the matter was not decided in his favor in the first instance, he should necessarily win a second process for the same money, because the law-student would then have won his first case. The student, on the other hand, maintained that if the case was decided in his favor, he ought not to be compelled to pay; and if it were decided against him, then by the terms of the contract he should not pay.

litigiously (li-tij'us-li), adv. In a litigious or contentious manner.

litigiousness (li-tij'us-nes), n. The character of being litigious; a disposition to engage in or carry on lawsuits; inclination to judicial contests.

Litiopa (li-tī'ō-pą), n. [NL., so called as having a simple aperture, without a spout; irreg. < Gr. λιτός, smooth, plain, simple, + ὀπή, hole, aperture.] The typical genus of Litiopidæ. The species are very small. They are oceanic, and attach themselves to gulfweed by glutinous threads.

Litiopidæ (lit-i-op'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Litiopa + -idæ.] A family of tænioglossate gastropods typified by the genus Litiopa; the gulfweed-snails. They are related to the Rissoidæ and Cerithiidæ, but have filaments developed from the epipodium and operculigerous lobe. The shell is conic, with an entire aperture (whence the name) and a truncated columella. The species are of small size, and live in various seas, chiefly on sargassum.

litiscontestation (lī-tis-kon-tes-tā'shon), n. [< OF. litiscontestation, < LL. litis contestatio(n-), the formal entering of a suit by calling witnesses.] In civil law, the submission of the formulated issue in a trial to the judge for decision. In eccles. law, the issue of an action. In Scots law, an appearance in court of both parties to an action with the issue defined.

litispendence† (lī-tis-pen'dens), n. [< OF. litispendence, < ML. litis pendentia, pendency of a suit.] In law: (a) The time during which a lawsuit is going on. (b) A plea that another action is pending.

litmus (lit'mus), n. [A corruption of lacmus, simulating dial. lit, dye: see lacmus.] A peculiar coloring matter procured from Roccella tinctoria and some other lichens. It is prepared chiefly in Holland by macerating the lichens with a mixture of urine, lime, and potash or soda. As a result of the fermentation, the mass finally becomes blue, when it is removed, is mixed with calcareous matter to give it consistence, and is then allowed to harden in molds. Paper tinged blue by litmus, called litmus-paper, is reddened by an acid, for the presence of which it is used as a test; its blue color is restored by an alkali. See archil.—Litmus on rags, or tournesol en drapeaux, a name given to a pigment prepared by steeping coarse linen rags in the juice of Tournesol tinctorium, and afterward subjecting them to the action of ammonia from urine or manure. The tournesol en drapeaux is used especially to color the crust of certain kinds of Holland cheeses, in order to render them less liable to decay or to attacks of cheese-mites. The color of the cloths is blue, but turns red after application to the cheese.—Litmus-paper. See above.

Litonotidæ (lit-ō-not'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Litonotus + -idæ.] A family of hypotrichous ciliate infusorians, represented by the genus Litonotus, free-swimming, soft and flexible, and of lanceolate or elongate figure. They have a narrow and often highly elastic neck-like anterior prolongation; the entire ventral surface flat and finely ciliated throughout; the dorsal surface smooth and glabrous, and mostly convex; the oral aperture ventral; a series of larger preoral cilia mostly developed in advance of the oral aperture; the pharynx unarmed; and the trichocysts usually abundant.

Litonotus (lit-ō-nō'tus), n. [NL (Wrzesniowski, 1870), < Gr. λιτός, smooth, + νῶτος, back.] The typical genus of Litonotidæ. L. fasciolà inhabits ponds.

litoral, a. See littoral.

Litoralia (lit-ō-rā'li-ä), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of L. litoralis, of or belonging to the sea-shore.] In Fieber's classification, a subsection of aquatic hemipterous insects, including those which are subaquatic.

litotes (lit'ō-tēz), n. [NL., < Gr. λιτότης, plainness, simplicity, < λιτός, smooth, plain, < λίς, smooth.] In rhet., a figure in which an affirmative is expressed by the negative of the contrary. Thus, "a citizen of no mean city" means one "of an illustrious city."

litra (lē'trä), n. [NL., < Gr. λίτρα, a pound, a silver coin, prob. a dial. var. of L. libra, a pound: see libra.] A silver coin of Sicily. Compare decalitron.

litrameter (li-tram'e-tėr), n. [NL., < Gr. λίτρα, a pound (see liter), + μέτρον, a measure (see meter).] An instrument for ascertaining the specific gravity of liquids.

litre[1], n. See liter.

litre[2] (lē'tėr), n. [< F. litre, OF. litre, littre, prob. orig. listre* (= Pr. listra = It. dial. listra), a band used in draping a church for a funeral service; prob. orig. a var. of liste, a border, band: see list[4], list[5].] In her., a black band, supposed to represent the knightly belt, charged with the arms of the defunct, and painted on the wall of a church or chapel at the time of the funeral. This variety of the funeral achievement was formerly considered a mark of very high dignity. It is now nearly abandoned.

litre[3] (lit're), n. [Chilian.] A small tree of Chile, Lithræa caustica, with very hard wood, used for axletrees, cogs, and furniture.

Litsea (lit'sē-ä), n. [NL., from the Jap. name of the tree.] A name given by Lamarck in 1789 to Glabraria, a genus of lauraceous trees, rarely shrubs, characterized by dicœcious flowers with usually a 4- to 6-parted involucre. There are nine, twelve, or an indefinite number of stamens in the three-parted flowers, and six in the two-parted, all having four-celled anthers. The leaves are usually alternate and coriaceous, with a pinnate venation or triple-nerved, and the staminate flowers are generally sessile, while the pistillate are often umbelled. There are about 100 species, mostly natives of tropical and eastern Asia and Australia. One species, Glabraria geniculata (Laurus geniculata of Walter), occurs in the eastern United States from southern Virginia to Florida.

Litseeæ (lit-sē'ē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Reichenbach, 1840), < Litsea + -cæ.] A tribe of plants of the family Lauraceæ, based on the Litsea of Lamarck (1789), which is antedated by Glabraria of Linnæus (1771), and cannot be maintained.

litster (lit'stėr), n. [< ME. litster, littester, lytster, lyster, a dyer; < lit[2] + -ster.] A dyer. [Old and prov. Eng.]

> No madyr welde, or wod no litestere
> Ne knew. Chaucer, Former Age, l. 17.

litten (lit'en), n. [ME. litton, lytton*, < AS. līctūn, a graveyard, churchyard, < līc, body, corpse, + tūn, inclosure. See like[1] and town.] A churchyard. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

litter (lit'ėr), n. [Early mod. E. also littour; < ME. liter, litere, lyter, lytere, lytier, < OF. litiere, F. litière = Pr. leittiera, littiera = Sp. litera = Pg. liteira = It. lettiera as if lecticaria* (ML. also litera, literia, lectoria, after OF.), a litter (cf. lecticarius, a litter-bearer), < lectica, a litter, sedan, < lectus (> F. lit), a bed; < √ legh = E. lie[1]: see lectual, lectica, lectern, etc., and lie[1]. All the various senses are derived from the primitive sense, a 'bed' or 'couch,' whence 'a portable bed,' 'a bed for animals' (usually of loose straw), etc. It is an error to refer 'litter,' a brood, to Icel. lātr, lāttr, a place where animals produce their young. The E. word from this source is the dial. lafter, latter, lighter, lauchter.]

1. A vehicle consisting of a bed or couch suspended between shafts, and borne by men or horses. It was formerly esteemed as an easy and fashionable method of carriage. Among the Romans the litter Ancient Roman Litter, preserved in the Capitoline Museum, Rome.

(lectica) was borne by slaves set apart for that special service; it was in common use by patricians in the time of Tiberius. In Europe horse-litters were much used before the introduction of coaches.

> Make somowne all thyn oste an thy peple; and whan thei be alle come, do the to be bore in a lytier, and so go fight with thyn enmyes; and, wite it verily, thow shalt hem venquise. Merlin (E. E. T. S.), i. 92.

2. A form of hurdle-bed on which a sick or wounded person is conveyed from one point to another, as to a hospital in a city, or to a field-hospital on a battle-field. For this purpose the stretcher or hand-litter is in use, consisting of canvas, about 6½ feet long by 3 feet wide, securely fastened at the sides to two hard-wood poles about 8 feet long, and convenient for rolling up. Horse- and mule-litters of various forms are used in some armies and in American frontier service.

3. A birth or bringing forth of more than one young animal at a time, as of pigs, kittens, rabbits, puppies, etc.

> The thirty pigs at one large litter farrowed.
> Dryden, tr. of Juvenal's Satires, vi. 256.
>
> My mother had ij. whelps at one litter,
> Both borne in Lent.
> Marriage of Witt and Wisdome (1579).

4. A number of young animals brought forth at a birth: used with reference to mammals which regularly give birth to more than one young at once, as the sow, bitch, cat, rabbit, etc., and only slightingly of human beings.—5. Loose straw, hay, or the like, spread on a floor or the ground as bedding for horses, cows, or other animals.

> Gromes palettis shyn fyle and make litere, > ix fote on lengthe with-out diswere.
> Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 313.

6. Waste matter, as shreds, fragments, or the like, scattered about, as on a floor; scattered rubbish; things strewn about in a careless or slovenly manner; clutter.

> Strephon, who found the room was void,
> Stole in, and took a strict survey
> Of all the litter as it lay. Swift.

7. A condition of disorder or confusion: as, the room is in a litter.—Indian litter, an extemporized litter made by attaching three cross-pieces to two stout saplings, by means of notches and cords. The sick or wounded man is laid in his blanket, which is then knotted to the framework. In storms the man is protected by a top made with a blanket stretched over bent twigs.—To be in litter, to be in the state of bringing forth young, or of lying in with young, as a sow or a bitch.

> He called me Turmots and arsked what were the price o' pigs. I arsked him, were any of his fambly in litter.
> J. W. Palmer, After his Kind, p. 116.

litter (lit'ėr), v. [< litter, n.] I. trans. 1†. To carry in a litter.

> These Pagan ladies were litter'd to Campus Martius, ours are coached to Hyde-Park. Gentleman Instructed, p. 112.

2. To scatter straw, hay, or other similar substance on or over for bedding.

> At last he found a stall where oxen stood, . . .
> But, for his ease, well littered was the floor.
> Dryden, Cock and Fox, l. 226.

3. To spread a bed for; supply with litter: usually with down.

> I'll see the horse well littered.
> The Suffolk Miracle (Child's Ballads, I. 221).

4. To make litter of; use for litter.

> Then to their roots
> The light soil gently move, and strew around > Old leaves or litter'd straw, to screen from heat
> The tender infants. Dodsley, Agriculture, ii.

5. To bring forth; give birth to: said of mammals which usually produce a number at a birth, as the sow, cat, rabbit, bitch, etc., or slightingly of human beings.

> My father named me Autolycus; who being, as I am, littered under Mercury, was likewise a snapper-up of unconsidered trifles. Shak., W. T., iv. 3. 25.

6. To scatter things over or about in a careless or slovenly manner.

> They found
> The room with volumes litter'd round.
> Swift, Cadenus and Vanessa.

II. intrans. 1. To be supplied with a bed or litter for bedding; sleep in litter: as, to litter in the straw.

> The inn
> Where he and his horse littered.
> Habington, Castara, ii.

2. To bring forth a litter of young animals.

> These [dogs] have in this City no particular owners; . . . [the Turks] thinking it neverthelesse a deed of piety to feed, and provide them kennels to litter in.
> Sandys, Travailes, p. 45.
>
> A horrible desert, . . . where the she-wolf still littered.
> Macaulay.

litterateur (lit-e-ra-tėr'), n. [F., < L. litterator: see literator.] A literary man; one who is engaged in literary work; one who adopts literature as a profession.

littery (lit'ėr-i), a. [< litter, n., + -y[1].] Consisting of litter; encumbered or covered with litter.

little (lit'l), a. and n.; compar. less, superl. least (rarely, and only in modern obs. or dial. use, littler, littlest). [< ME. litel, litil, lytel, litle, lutel, < AS. lytel, litel = OS. luttil = D. luttel = MLG. luttel = OHG. luzil, luzzil, MHG. G. dial. lützel = (with a diff. base līt-, instead of lut- as in the preceding forms) Icel. lītill = Dan. lille = Sw. lille, lilla = Goth. leitils, little; also without the suffix -el, ME. lit, lyt, < AS. lyt = OS. lut = D. E. dial. lite, < ME. lite, lyte, abbr. of litel, lytel, little, etc.); root unknown. The word is connected by Skeat with AS. lytig, deceitful (< lot, deceit; cf. Goth. liuts, deceitful, lutōn, betray), as if the sense 'little' in size were derived from the sense of 'little' in spirit, 'mean,' 'base'; but this is improbable in itself, and no such transition or connection of sense appears in AS. use.] I. a. Not large or much. (a) Of small size, bulk, or compass; diminutive, absolutely or relatively: as, a little grain of sand; a little child or man; the little finger.

> Thanne was the place to litill for them all,
> Wherefore the Sowdon anon dede ordeyne
> A larger place owt vppon the playn.
> Generydes (E. E. T. S.), l. 1392.
> Presumptuous man! the reason wouldst thou know,
> Why form'd so weak, so little, and so blind?
> Pope, Essay on Man, i. 36.

(b) Not large in number; having few constituent members or parts: as, a little army or fleet; a little city.

> If the household be too little for the lamb. Ex. xii. 4.

(c) Not much; of small amount, quantity, or degree; restricted; limited: as, a little food or drink; little joy or happiness; little influence.

> O thou of little faith, wherefore didst thou doubt?
> Mat. xiv. 31.
> There was too much talk . . . and too little real work done. O. W. Holmes, Emerson, v.

(d) Not of great extent or duration; not long; short in space or time; brief: as, a little way or distance; a little while.

> Our little life
> Is rounded with a sleep.
> Shak., Tempest, iv. 1. 157.

(e) Not great; small in consideration, dignity, consequence, etc.; petty; inconsiderable; insignificant: as, a little office; little affairs; a little accident.

> I wol yow telle a litel thing in prose,
> That oughte lyken you, as I suppose.

>
> When thou wast little in thine own sight, wast thou not made the head of the tribes of Israel? 1 Sam. xv. 17.
>
> These considerations have given me a kind of contempt for those who have risen by unworthy ways. I am not ashamed to be little, when I see them so infamously great.
> Dryden, Ded. of the Third Misc.

Hence—(f) Petty in character; mean; narrow; wanting breadth or largeness: as, a little soul or mind.

> There are poets little enough to envy even a poet-laureat.
> Gray, Letters, I. 346.

Little assimilations. See assimilation.—Little casino. See casino.—Little ease. See little-ease, below.—Little fever, go, habit, office, etc. See the nouns.—Little hours. See hour.—Little pot†, a pint pot; also, the contents of a pint pot.—The Little Entrance. See entrance[1].—The little masters. See master[1].—Syn. (b) Minute, tiny. (c) and (d) Scanty, slender, moderate. (e) Insignificant, contemptible, weak. See littleness.

II. n. A small quantity, amount, space, or the like.

> Suche other tymes when we haue lytle or nothynge a doyng elles.
> Quoted in William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), Pref., p. xxiii.
>
> A little that a righteous man hath is better than the riches of many wicked. Ps. xxxvi. 16.
>
> Walk you that way,
> Whilst I in zealous meditation stray
> A little this way.
> Fletcher, Faithful Shepherdess, ii. 4.

Man wants but little here below,
Nor wants that little long.
Goldsmith, The Hermit.

A little, somewhat; to or in a small degree; to a limited extent; for a short time.

Lenge a lyttel with thy lede, I logly biseche.
Alliterative Poems (ed. Morris), ii. 614

Here is her picture: let me see; I think,
If I had such a tire, this face of mine
Were full as lovely as is this of hers:
And yet the painter flattered her a little.
Shak., T. G. of V., iv. 4. 192.

Pray stay a little, my lord. Shak., 1 Hen. IV., ii. 4. 63.

By little and little, by slow degrees; gradually.—In little, on a small scale; within a small compass; in miniature: as, the history of one's life in little.

Those that would make mows at him while my father lived give twenty, forty, fifty, an hundred ducats a-piece for his picture in little. Shak., Hamlet, ii. 2. 384.

Into little†, very near; almost.

For which we han so sorwed, he and I,
That into litel both it hadde us slawe.
Chaucer, Troilus, iv. 884.

Not a little, considerably.—To make little of. See make[1].

little (lit'l), adv. [< ME. litel, litil, lytel, etc., < AS. lytel, adv., prop. neut. acc. of the adj.: see little, a. and n.] In a small quantity or degree; not much; slightly.

Master, be well war of the screffe of Notynggam,
For he ys leytell howr frende.
Robin Hood and the Potter (Child's Ballads, V. 22).

How very little the world misses anybody!
Macaulay, in Trevelyan, I. 285.

little† (lit'l), v. [< ME. litelen, lytelen, lutelen, lutlen, < AS. lytlian, become or make little, < lytel, little: see little, a.] I. intrans. To become little or less.

His Godhede luttulde not theiȝ he lowe lihte.
Joseph of Arimathie (E. E. T. S.), p. 5.

II. trans. To make less. Compare belittle.

littlebeak (lit'l-bēk), n. A brachiopod of the genus Rhynchonella; a rhynchonellid.

little-ease (lit'l-ēz), n. A state of discomfort or misery; hence, anything that causes uneasiness; specifically, an old name for a punishment causing bodily discomfort or pain, as the stocks or the pillory, or some especially uncomfortable part of a prison, as a very small cell.

Welcome, sweet friend, to liberty of air, . . .
How dost thou brook thy little-ease thy trunk?
Middleton, Family of Love, iii. 1.

Was not this fellow's preaching a cause of all the trouble in Israel? was he not worthy to be cast in bocardo or little-ease? Latimer, Sermons, fol. 105, b. (Nares.) little-endian (lit-l-en'di-an), n. [In Swift's "Gulliver's Travels," a member of the Lilliputian party which contended that boiled eggs should be cracked at the little end: opposed to big-endian.] One of a set of disputers about trifles. Also used adjectively. See big-endian.

little-go (lit'l-gō'), n. See little go, under go, n.

little-neck (lit'l-nek), a. [So named from a locality on the north coast of Long Island (Little Neck), whence these originally came into favor.] A local epithet, noting young, round, hard clams of a size preferred for eating raw. They are simply ungrown quahaugs (Venus mercenaria or Mercenaria violacea). The epithet is wrongly but very generally supposed to refer to the absence of the long siphon or "neck" which is conspicuous in the common clam, Mya arenaria. These young quahaugs are sometimes called pea-clams. On the Pacific coast of the United States the name little-neck is applied to various edible clams, as Tapes straminea and T. laciniata, Chione succincta and C. simillima. See cut under dimyarian.

littleness (lit'l-nes), n. [< ME. litelnesse*, < AS. lytelnys, < lytel, little: see little and -ness.] The state or quality of being little, in any sense of that word.=Syn. Littleness, Meanness (see meanness); Smallness, Littleness, Pettiness, and nouns formed from adjectives given in the list under little. Smallness and littleness are general terms, but the latter is stronger, and generally implies more or less disparagement, but sometimes endearment. Pettiness is used in strong disparagement, as of that which is beneath consideration; it characterizes a mind that busies itself with insignificant or trifling things.

littleship†, n. [ME.lutleschip*, lotleschipe; < little + -ship.] Littleness; smallness.

Hou thi fairnisse is bi-spit;
Hou thi swetnisse is i-betin and ipit;
Hou thi lotleschipe to scharp deȝ is of set.
Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 240.

littlest (lit'l-est), a. The regularly formed superlative of little; least.

littleworth (lit'l-wėrth), a. and n. [< little + worth, a.] I. a. Of little or no value; worthless; of a bad character; destitute of moral principle. [Rare or archaic.]

He returned for answer that he would not come to a stranger. He defended himself by saying "He had once come to a stranger who sent for him; and he found him a littleworth person." Boswell.

II. n. A worthless fellow; a blackguard.

littoral (lit'ō-ral), a. and n. [Also sometimes litoral; = F. littoral = Pg. Sp. litoral = It. litorale, < L. litoralis, belonging to the sea-shore, < litus (litŏr-), sea-shore, coast, shore of a lake, bank of a river.] I. a. 1. Of or pertaining to a shore, as of the sea or a great lake; frequenting or living near the shore: as, littoral trade; littoral fishes or vegetation.—2. Situated or bordering on a shore: as, the Littoral Provinces (Litorale or Küstenland), a division of Austria on the east coast of the Adriatic.—Littoral cordon. See cordon.—Littoral rocks, rocks which have been laid down in the littoral zone, or within the range of influence of tides and breakers. Deposits thus formed consist chiefly of coarse materials, while those formed in deep water, or thalassic rocks, are fine-grained and often largely calcareous in character.—Littoral zone, the interval on a sea-coast between high- and low-water mark.

II. n. A littoral tract or region; the part of a country lying along the coast.

In the towns of the Albanian littoral Italian is the language of civilized intercommunication.
A. J. Evans, Illyrian Letters, p. 139.

Littorella (lit-ō-rel'ą), n. [NL. (Linnæus, 1771), so called in ref. to the place of growth, < L. litus (litor-), the sea-shore: see littoral.] A genus of plants of the family Plantaginaceæ, distinguished from Plantago by the one-celled ovary. See shoreweed.

Littorina (lit-ō-rī'ną), n. [NL., < L. litus (litor-), sea-shore: see littoral.] The typical genus of Littorinidæ. L. litorea is the common periwinkle of Europe, which has recently become abundant on the Atlantic coast of the United States. It is used for food in some countries. In England several hundred tons are used annually. L. rudis is another species common to both continents. L. palliata of the New England coast is common on rocky shores, where it creeps over rockweed and eel-grass. It is very variable in color, either plain or marked with white, green, or brown. Further south a larger and sharper-pointed species, L. irrorata, is abundant. The generic name has been much more comprehensive than it is now, various species formerly included being now referred to other genera. Also written Litorina.

Littorinidæ (lit-ō-rin'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Littorina + -idæ.] A family of holostomatous tænioglossate gastropods; the periwinkles or sea-snails. As generally understood, they have a wide, short snout, long tentacles, eyes at the external bases of the tentacles, and a radula with nearly uniform lateral and marginal teeth. The shell is conic or subglobose, with a roundish aperture and a spiral corneous operculum. They are mostly of maritime habitat, and generally live between or near tide-levels, attached to rocks or stones. The family is now much restricted by the exclusion of several genera formerly included.

Littorina litorea, natural size.

Littré's glands. See gland.

littress (lit'res), n. [Origin unknown.] A smooth kind of cartridge-paper used in the manufacture of cards. E. H. Knight.

Lituaceæ† (lit-ū-ā'sē-ą), n. pl. [NL. (De Blainville, 1818), < Lituus + -aceæ.] A family referred to the cephalopods, and composed of Spirula as well as of certain foraminifers supposed to be related to that genus.

lituary†, n. An obsolete form of electuary.

lituate (lit'ū-āt), a. [< NL. lituatus, < L. lituus, an augur's staff, a trumpet: see lituus.] In bot., forked, with the points turned outward.

litui, n. Plural of lituus.

lituiform (lit'ū-i-fôrm), a. [< L. lituus, an augur's staff, a trumpet (see lituus), + forma, shape.] Curved like a lituus.

lituite (lit'ū-īt), n. [< NL. Lituites, q. v.] A fossil cephalopod of the genus Lituites.

Lituites (lit-ū-ī'tēz), n. [NL., < L. lituus, an augur's staff: see lituus.] The typical genus of Lituitidæ. All of the species are of Silurian age.

Lituitidæ (lit-ū-it'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Lituites + -idæ.] A family of Silurian cephalopods, typified by the genus Lituites, containing the lituites, generally associated with Nautiloidea.

Lituola (li-tū'ō-lą), n. [NL., dim. of L. lituus, an augur's staff, a trumpet: see lituus.] The typical genus of Lituolidæ. Lamarck, 1804.

Lituolidæ (lit-ū-ol'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Lituola + -idæ.] A family of imperforate Foraminifera, with the test arenaceous and usually regular in contour, the septation of the polythalamous forms often imperfect, and the chambers frequently labyrinthic. It comprises sandy isomorphs of the simple porcellaneous and hyaline types, together with some related species. Lituacea, Lituitæ, Lituolacea, and Lituolea of the old authors are inexact synonyms, embracing not only the foraminiferous Lituolidæ, but some cephalopods, as Spirula.

Lituolidea (lit″ū-ō-lid'ē-ą), n. pl. [NL.: see Lituolidæ.] The family Lituolidæ, advanced to the rank of an order of imperforate foraminifers.

lituolidean (lit″ū-ō-lid'ē-an), a. and n. [NL., < Lituolidea + -an.] I. a. Lituoline, in a broad sense; specifically, of or pertaining to the Lituolidea.

II. n. One of the Lituolidæ.

Lituolina (lit″ū-ō-lī'nā), n. pl. [NL., < Lituola + -inæ[2].] A group of Lituolidea represented by the genus Lituola and its immediate congeners, having the test composed of coarse sand-grains, rough outside and often labyrinthic.

Lituolinæ (lit″ū-ō-lī'nē), n. pl. [NL., < Lituola + -inæ.] A subfamily of Lituolidæ, with test composed of coarse sand-grains.

lituoline (lit'ū-ō-lin), a. [< Lituola + -ine[1].] Having the characters of the genus Lituola; being or resembling one of the Lituolidæ.

lituolite (lit'ū-ō-līt), n. [< L. as if lituolus*, dim. of lituus, a trumpet, + -ite[2].] A fossil lituoline foraminifer: so named from the shape. Lituolites are of microscopic size, and abound in the Jurassic and Cretaceous.

litura (li-tū'rą), n.; pl. lituræ (-rē). [NL., < L. litura, a smearing, erasure, blot, blur, < linere, pp. litus, smear, rub: see liniment.] In entom., an ill-defined and somewhat obscure spot, growing paler or fading into the ground-color at one end, as if daubed or blotted.

liturate (lit'ū-rāt), a. [< LL. lituratus, pp. of liturare, rub out, erase, < L. litura, a smearing, erasure: see litura.] 1. In bot., having spots formed by the abrasion of the surface: said of a plant.—2. In entom., marked with lituræ or indeterminate spots growing paler at one end.

liturge (li-tėrj'), n. [< LL. liturgus, < Gr. λειτουργός, a public servant, a minister, a Jewish or Christian priest: see liturgy.] 1. A liturgist; a Jewish priest as offering sacrifice, or a Christian priest as celebrating the eucharist or liturgy.—2. A leader in public worship; an officiating clergyman, especially one leading in the use of a fixed or prescribed liturgy.

liturgic (li-tėr'jik), a. [< LGr. λειτουργικός, ministering (in the Septuagint, pertaining to the temple service), < Gr. λειτουργία, liturgy: see liturgy.] Same as liturgical.

liturgical (li-tėr'ji-kal), a. [< liturgic + -al.] 1. Of or pertaining to a liturgy, in the ancient Greek sense of that word. See liturgy, 1.—2. Of or pertaining to sacrificial or eucharistic worship; in a wider sense, used in, prepared for, or pertaining to worship or religious ceremonies in general. All services of public worship have sometimes been called liturgical.—3. Specifically, pertaining to or employing a fixed or prescribed liturgy, or pertaining to public worship conducted in accordance with such a liturgy.—4. Noting a part of a public religious exercise that is explicitly directed to the deity rather than to the worshiper: opposed to didactic or homiletic.—Liturgical colors. See color.—Liturgical fan. See flabellum[1].

liturgically (li-tėr'ji-kal-i), adv. In a liturgical manner; as a form of public worship.

It is . . . proper that a portion of [the Bible] should be daily used liturgically in the public schools.
T. Hill, True Order of Studies, p. 143.

liturgics (li-tėr'jiks), n. [Pl. of liturgic: see -ics.] 1. The science or art of conducting public worship. Liturgics, as a branch of pastoral theology, is coördinate with poimenics, catechetics, and homiletics, though in strictness it may be made to include the last.

2. Specifically, the science of liturgies—that is, of orders of public worship; liturgiology. It comprises the history of the origin of liturgical formulæ and of their combination with one another into liturgies, and the art of using such formulæ in conformity with custom or ecclesiastical rule.

liturgiologist (li-tėr-ji-ol'ō-jist), n. [< liturgiology + -ist.] One versed in liturgiology; a specialist in the study of liturgies.

Minute peculiarities, which would be of interest to professed liturgiologists. Encyc. Brit., XIV. 708.

liturgiology (li-tėr-ji-ol'ō-ji), n. [< Gr. λειτουργία, liturgy, + -λογία, < λέγειν, say: see -ology.] The science or systematic study of appointed forms of public worship, especially of the ancient forms for the celebration of the eucharist. See liturgy.

liturgist (lit'ėr-jist), n. [< liturg-y + -ist.] 1. A leader in public worship; a liturge.—2. An authority on liturgies; a liturgiologist.—3. One who uses or favors the use of a liturgy.

liturgy (lit'ėr-ji), n.; pl. liturgies (-jiz). [Formerly liturgie; < OF. liturgie, lyturgie, F. liturgie = Sp. liturgia = Pg. It. liturgia, < ML. liturgia, < Gr. λειτουργία, also λητουργία, public service, a public office or duty (see def. 1), any service, esp. eccles. the service or ministry of priests, public worship; in a restricted sense, the eucharist, < λειτουργός, a public servant, a minister, eccles. a priest, < λειτος, λέϊτος, also λήϊτος, λῆτος, and λάϊτος, λαΐτος (rare), public (< λαός, λεώς, people), + ἔργειν,* do, work, > ἔργον = E. work: see work.]

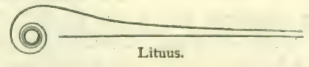
1. In ancient Greece, particularly at Athens, a form of personal service to the state which citizens possessing property to a certain amount were bound, when called upon, to perform at their own cost. These liturgies were ordinary, including the presentation of dramatic performances, musical and poetic contests, etc., the celebration of some festivals, and other public functions entailing expense upon the incumbent; or extraordinary, as the fitting out of a trireme in case of war.



2. A form or method of conducting public worship; an appointed form for the words and acts used in the rites and ceremonies of the Christian church. The word denotes especially an appointed form for the holy communion, the hours or daily prayer, litanies, baptism, confirmation, marriage, burial, penance, visitation and unction of the sick or dying, ordinations, and other offices such as are contained in the Missal, Breviary, Ritual, Pontifical, Euchologion, Horologion, etc., of the Roman Catholic and the Greek Church, or united in one volume in the Anglican Book of Common Prayer. Liturgies seem to have originated partly in the inheritance or adoption of Jewish forms of worship and their adaptation to Christian purposes. The Book of Psalms, especially as containing inspired prayers, praises, thanksgivings, etc., furnished a large amount of liturgical material. On the other hand, the forms given by Christ, such as the Lord's Prayer, the words of institution in the eucharist, the baptismal formula, etc., became centers of development for the new and distinctively Christian parts of the offices.

3. Specifically, in liturgiology, and as the name most frequently used in the Greek Church, the form of service used in the celebration of the eucharist, or that service itself. In this last sense Latin and Roman Catholic writers generally prefer the word mass. An account of primitive Christian liturgical worship is given by Justin Martyr (in the middle of the second century A. D.), and this agrees with the Clementine Liturgy, a form referable to about A. D. 250, and so called because incorporated in the Apostolical Constitutions, a compilation attributed to St. Clement of Rome. Five great groups or families of liturgies are recognized, each of which can be referred to a single original liturgy represented by one or more direct derivatives still existing. They are: (1) The Liturgy of St. James (or of Jerusalem), also called the Hierosolymitan Liturgy, the Greek form of which has been somewhat modified by that of St. Chrysostom; it exists also in a Syriac Jacobite form, with numerous derivatives. From its Greek form came the Greek Liturgy of St. Basil (of Cappadocia), and from this the Liturgy of St. Chrysostom on the one hand and the Armenian Liturgy on the other. The liturgies of St. Basil and St. Chrysostom, together with the Liturgy of the Presanctified (see below), are known as Liturgies of Constantinople, and are almost exclusively used at the present day by the whole Greek Church. (2) The Liturgy of St. Mark (or of Alexandria), the original Catholic or Greek form of which has been influenced by that of Constantinople. It is used also to the present day in a Coptic (Egyptian Monophysite) form named after St. Cyril. The Copts, however, use as their principal liturgy one named after St. Basil, different from that of the same name in the first group. The Ethiopian (that is, Abyssinian) forms belong to this group. (3) The Liturgy of Sts. Adæus and Maris (or of Edessa), also known as the Liturgy of the Apostles. It is a very ancient orthodox liturgy, and is the original of the East Syrian group. It is often called Nestorian, because used by Nestorians, and because the ancient Malabar and other Nestorian liturgies are derived from it. (4) The Liturgy of St. Peter (or of Rome), the earliest extant forms of which are the Gelasian and Gregorian Sacramentaries. It is the principal liturgy of the Roman or Petrine group, and has almost entirely supplanted all the liturgies in the Latin language — that is, those in this and the next group. Allied but independent forms are the Ambrosian Liturgy, which is that of the archdiocese of Milan, still sometimes used, and the liturgies or uses of the Anglo-Saxon and medieval English Church, of which the most important was the Use of Sarum. These medieval English uses are the sources of the Communion Office in the successive revisions of the Anglican Prayer-book. The Nonjurors' office of 1718 and the Scottish office of 1764 were, however, largely conformed to the Liturgy of St. James, and from these the American office derives its prayer of consecration. (5) The Liturgy of St. Paul (or of St. John), also called the Liturgy of Ephesus, is the inferred original of the so-called Ephesine Liturgies, these names being not historical or traditional, but the generally accepted result of scientific combination. These liturgies are also called Gallican or Hispano-Gallican, and are the forms, Latin in language, ancient in use in Britain, Gaul, and Spain, and traced through the church at Lyons to Ephesus. The varieties used in Gaul have been supplanted since the time of Charlemagne by the Roman form, which has also been substituted since the eleventh century for the ancient liturgy of Spain, known as the Mozarabic. This last, however, as revived at the beginning of the sixteenth century by Cardinal Ximenes, is still used in three or four chapels or churches, but with some assimilation to the Roman rite. — Liturgy or Mass of the Presanctified, an office with a communion (the elements having been consecrated at a previous celebration), but no consecration, and therefore not a liturgy or mass in the strict sense of these words. Such a service (containing parts of the Liturgy of St. Chrysostom) is said in the Greek Church throughout Lent, except on Saturdays, Sundays, and the Feast of the Annunciation. In the Roman Catholic Church the rite is confined to Good Friday.

litus (lī'tus), n. [ML., also letus, lætus; AS. læt: see læt.] In old Saxon law, a member of the third order in the nation, the first being the nobilis, and the second the ingenuus, corresponding to the eorl, the ceorl, and the læt of the Kentish laws.

The litus appears to be distinctly recognized as a member of the nation. . . . Instead of being a mere dependent with no political rights, the remnant of a conquered alien people, he is free in relation to every one but his lord, and simply unfree as cultivating land of which he is not the owner. Stubbs, Const. Hist., § 22.

★liver[2] (liv'ėr), n. [< ME. liver, < AS. lifer = D. lever = MLG. lever = OHG. libara, lebara, lebera, lepera, MHG. lebere, G. leber = Icel. lifr = Dan. lever = Sw. lefver, liver. Cf. Russ. liverŭ, the pluck of animals. Attempts have been made to identify liver, through the assumed earlier stems lik, lyēk, with L. jecur = Gr ἡπαρ (ἡπατ-) = Skt. yakrit, liver, the medial Teut. labial (v), in this view, having been developed from an orig. guttural (h). A similar change appears in the history of four, five, and prob. eleven and twelve, as well as in wolf.] 1. In anat., a large gland, secreting bile and performing other important metabolic functions, situated in the upper part of the abdominal cavity on the right side. The human liver lies beneath the diaphragm, and weighs 50 or 60 ounces. It presents a large right- and a smaller left-hand lobe, and on the under surface are distinguished a quadrate lobe, a caudate lobe, and a lobus Spigelii. The gall-bladder lies in a fissure on its under side. The liver is supplied with blood by the portal vein and the hepatic artery, and discharges it by the hepatic veins. The bile is conveyed away by the bile-ducts, which unite to form the hepatic duct. There are five fissures: the longitudinal, which separates the right and left lobes, and contains the round ligament; the venous, the continuation of the former backward, containing the remains of the ductus venosus; the caval, for the inferior vena cava or postcaval vein; the portal or transverse, connecting the others, also called the porta or gateway of the liver, where lie the portal vein, hepatic artery, and hepatic duct; with a depression for the gall-bladder, called, for convenience in enumerating, the fifth fissure. There are likewise five ligaments: right and left lateral, coronary, and falciform, consisting of folds of peritoneum, and the round ligament, which is the obliterated umbilical vein of the fetus. A liver like that of man in all essentials exists in nearly all vertebrates. Glandular structures or tissues recognizable as hepatic occur in very many invertebrates, and are commonly called liver. Thus, the mass of dark-greenish substance in the thickest part of an oyster is the liver of that creature, and a glandular organ in worms, connected with the mid-gut, receives the same name. The livers of food-animals constitute a common article of diet. The liver was formerly supposed to be the seat of love.

> Are you not yet
> Relenting? ha' you blood and spirit in those veins?
> You are no image, though you be as hard > As marble: sure, you have no liver; if you had,
> 'Twould send a lively and desiring heat
> To every member. Beau. and Fl., Woman-Hater, iii. 1.

Bronze liver, a liver colored dark reddish-brown, olive-brown, or black from severe malarial poisoning.—Degraded liver, in human pathol., an abnormal condition in which the liver is divided into a number of lobes as in the gorilla.—Floating liver, a displaced and movable liver.—Granular liver. See granular.—Hobnailed liver. See hobnailed.—Line of the liver. See line of health, under line[2].—Liver of antimony†, a combination of trisulphid of antimony with a basic sulphid of another metal.—Liver of sulphur, a mixture of polysulphids of potassium with potassium sulphate. It is made by heating sulphur with potassium carbonate in a closed vessel. The composition of the fused liver-colored mass is variable.—Longitudinal ligament of the liver, the broad ligament.

liver[3] (liv′ėr), v. t. [< ME. liveren, leveren, < OF. livrer, F. livrer = Sp. Pg. librar = It. liberare, liverare, livrare = D. leveren = G. liefern = Dan. levere = Sw. levera, deliver, give up, < L. liberare, set free, liberate, deliver, ML. also (with other forms librare, livrare, after Rom.) give up: see liberate and deliver. Hence livery[2].] To deliver. [Old and prov. Eng.]

And to his men he liverd hym hole and feere.
MS. Lansdowne, 208, fol. 2. (Halliwell.) liver[4]†, a. [Appar. < live[1], or live[2], + -er; but perhaps, by apheresis, from deliver, a.] Lively.

Those that saw Robin Hood run
Said he was a liver old man.
Robin Hood and the Old Man (Child's Ballads, V. 259).

liver[5] (liv′ėr), n. A fabulous bird borne upon the arms of Liverpool, England, traditionally supposed to have given a part of the name of that city. It has been variously identified. See liver[2], 2.

liverance (liv′ėr-ans), n. [< ME. liveraunce, < OF. liverance, livrance, delivery, < livrer, deliver: see liver[3]. Cf. deliverance.] A delivery or deliverance. Halliwell. [North. Eng.]

liver-color (liv′ėr-kul″ọr), n. A color resembling or suggesting that of raw calf's liver freshly cut, somewhat smeared with blood, and seen at a little distance; a red of very low luminosity, and of moderately full chroma. A color-disk composed of $\frac{1}{16}$ scarlet iodide of mercury and $\frac{15}{16}$ intense velvet-black might be called a fine liver-color tending toward maroon. The liver itself is decidedly yellower, grayer, and brighter. Ridgway defines liver-color by a wash of Schönfeld's Indian red, which is matched by the following color-disk formula: scarlet, 14; bright chrome-yellow, 2; white, 4; velvet-black, 80. This inclines toward terra-cotta.

liver-colored (liv′ėr-kul″ọrd), a. Of the color of liver; hepatic; of the color called liver-color; said especially of ceramic ware, as a certain variety of old Chinese porcelain and its imitations.

liver-complaint (liv′ėr-kọm-plānt″), n. Disease of the liver.

livered (liv′ėrd), a. [< liver[2] + -ed[2].] 1. Having a liver (of the kind specified): used in composition: as, a poor-livered or fat-livered codfish.—2. Of some character attributed to a state of the liver: as, white-livered, lily-livered, milk-livered (all meaning 'cowardly').

But I am pigeon-liver'd, and lack gall
To make oppression bitter.
Shak., Hamlet, ii. 2. 605.

3. Heavy or underbaked. Halliwell. [South. Eng.]

liverer† (liv′ėr-ėr), n. [< liver-y[2] + -er[2].] A servant in livery. Davies.

Their sumptuous suits of liverers.
Patten (Arber's Eng. Garner, III. 74).

liveresont, n. [ME. lyveresone, < OF. livreison, livreson, livraison, etc., F. livraison, delivery, livery: see livery[2], livraison, liberation.] Livery. ★Prompt. Parv., p. 309.

liver-fluke (liv′ėr-flōk), n. A trematoid worm, Distoma hepatica. See Distoma and fluke[2].

liver-grown† (liv′ėr-grōn), a. Suffering from enlargement of the liver.

I suffer'd him to be open'd, when they found that he was what is vulgarly call'd liver-grown.
Evelyn, Diary, Jan. 27, 1658.

liveried (liv′ėr-id), a. [< livery + -ed[2].] Wearing a livery, or uniform dress. See livery.

A thousand liveried angels lacky her.
Milton, Comus, l. 455.

livering† (liv′ėr-ing), n. [< ME. leveryng; < liver[2] + -ing[2].] A kind of pudding or sausage made of liver or pork.

Two blodynges, I trow, a leveryng betwene.
Towneley Mysteries, p. 89. (Halliwell.)

Liverings, white-skinned as ladies. Chapman.

liverleaf (liv′ėr-lēf), n. [So called from a fancied resemblance of the three-lobed leaves to the liver.] A spring flower of the genus Hepatica. There are about 4 species, two of which occur in North America. The leaves are all from the root, heart-shaped and three-lobed. The delicate flowers are single on hairy scapes, colored blue, pink, or white. The round-lobed or kidney liverleaf is Hepatica Hepatica. (See cut under Hepatica.) The sharp-lobed or heart liverleaf is H. acuta. [Local, U. S.] liver-ore (liv′ėr-ōr), n. An impure liver-brown variety of cinnabar; hepatic cinnabar.

liver-pyrites (liv′ėr-pi-rī″tēz), n. A massive form of iron pyrites (marcasite, and sometimes also pyrite and pyrrhotite), having a dull liver-brown color.

liversick† (liv′ėr-sik), a. Having a diseased liver—that is, in love: from the old notion that the liver is the seat of love.

Demon, my friend, once liversick of love.
Bp. Hall, Satires, II. vii. 47.

liver-spots (liv′ėr-spots), n. pl. A disease, pityriasis versicolor. See pityriasis.

liverstone (liv′ėr-stōn), n. [= G. leberstein (tr. NL. lapis hepaticus, so called by Cronstedt with ref. to the color, or perhaps to the similarity to liver-pyrites (G. leberkies), which gives off sulphur fumes when heated).] A variety of the mineral barite which gives off a fetid odor when rubbed or heated to redness.

liver-wing (liv′ėr-wing), n. In cookery, the right wing of a bird having the liver tucked into it in cooking, preferred by epicures.

Mr. Pumblechook helped me to the liver wing and to the best slice of tongue. Dickens, Great Expectations, xix.

liverwort (liv′ėr-wėrt), n. [< ME. liverwort; < liver[2] + wort[1].] 1. Any plant of the cryptogamic class Hepaticæ. In general appearance they differ from mosses in having the stems bilateral, and the leaves usually two-ranked, though often there are rudiments of a third rank, never with a midvein.

2. One of several other plants that suggest the liver by their form, or are supposed to be useful in diseases of the liver. Among them are the common agrimony, Agrimonia Eupatoria, and the liverleaf, Hepatica Hepatica.—Horned liverwort, a name sometimes given to any of the plants of the family Anthocerotaceæ of the class Hepaticæ. They are small, terrestrial, annual plants, with flaccid thallose vegetation, and bivalved, mostly erect, pod-like capsules. Also called hornwort.—Noble liverwort, Hepatica Hepatica. (See also ground-liverwort, stone-liverwort, water-liverwort, wood-liverwort.) livery[1] (liv′ėr-i), a. [< liver[2] + -y[1].] Resembling the liver: as, a livery color, texture, etc.

livery[2] (liv′ėr-i), n.; pl. liveries (-iz). [< ME. liverey, lyverey, liveray, liveree, lyvery, lyvere, leverie, levere (= Sp. librea = It. livrea = ML. refl. liverea, livreia), livery, < AF. liverie, liveree, OF. liveree, livree, F. livrée, delivery, livery, < ML. liberata, delivery, livery, lit. a thing delivered, fem. (sc. res, a thing) of liberatus, pp. of liberare, give up, deliver: see liver[3].] 1†. Delivery; allowance; grant; permission.

Saie, what are ȝe that makis here maistrie,
To loose thes bestis with-oute leverie?
York Plays, p. 203.

2. In law: (a) The act of giving possession; delivery. Chiefly used in the phrase livery of seizin—that is, the act of putting a person in corporal possession of a freehold by giving him the ring, latch, or key of the door; or, if land, by delivering him a turf or twig, accompanied by a form of words or (as always in later times) a written document expressing the transfer of possession; or, in either case, doing any act before witnesses which clearly places the party in possession. It formerly accompanied all conveyances of land, but is now confined in England to that conveyance called a feoffment. It is unknown in American law.

Alienation of feudal holdings, when it came to be allowed, was subject to the condition of being notorious. This was assured by requiring an actual delivery of possession before witnesses and on the land itself: a proceeding accompanied with different forms in different countries and districts, and known by the general name of investiture. In England it was called livery of seisin.
F. Pollock, Land Laws, p. 72.

(b) The charter or deed of possession accompanying the delivery.—3†. Release from constraint or control; deliverance.

Death fewer liveries gives Than life. Chapman.

It concerned them first to sue out their livery from the unjust wardship of his encroaching prerogative. Milton.

4†. Delivery (of blows).

William as a wod man was euer here & there, & leide on swiche liuere leue me forsothe
That his daies were don that of him hent a dent.
William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 3822.

5. (a) An allowance of food or other provisions statedly given out; a ration, as to a family, to servants, to horses, etc.

Edward IV.'s Esquiers for the Body, IIII, had "for wynter lyverey from All Hallowentide (Nov. 1) tyll Estyr, one percher wax, one candell wax, ij candells Paris, one tallwood and dimidium, and wages in the countyng-house." Quoted in Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 311.

(b) Keeping on a certain or regular allowance at a certain rate; regular keeping and attendance: now used only of horses: as, to keep a horse at livery.

What Liverye is, we by common use in England knowe well enough, namelye that it is allowaunce of horse-meate, as they commonly use the woord in stabling; as, to keepe horses at livery; the which woord, I geess, is derived of livering or delivering foorth theyr nightlye foode.
Spenser, State of Ireland.

6. (a) A regular distribution of uniform garments, badges, etc., to any body of men; hence, a uniform style prescribed for the dress of a body of servants, followers, or associates.

Commaunde ȝe that ȝoure gentilmen yomen and other dayly bere and were there robis in ȝoure presence, and namely at the mete, for ȝoure worshyppe, and not oolde robis and not cordyng to the lyuerey, nother were they oolde schoon ne fylyd. Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 329.

The term livery was . . . gradually restricted to the gift of clothing, the gift of food and provisions being known as allowances or corrodies; the clothing took the character of uniform or badge of service. As it was a proof of power to have a large attendance of servants and dependents, the lords liberally granted their livery to all who wished to wear it, and the wearing of the livery became a sign of clientship or general dependence.
Stubbs, Const. Hist., § 470.

(b) A badge, cognizance, garment, or entire costume of uniform fashion formerly marking the retainers of a feudal lord, the followers of a military superior, or the members of a company, as a gild or corporation; at the present time, the dress worn by servants, especially men servants, when of peculiar fashion and indicating whom it is that they serve. Such liveries usually take their colors from the heraldic tinctures used in the armorial bearings, or with modifications. Thus, if the master's arms include a field or, the color of the livery-coat, instead of yellow, may be drab; so in England red, being the color of the royal livery, is avoided by all subjects, and maroon or chocolate is substituted for it when gules is prominent in the arms of the employer.
(c) Figuratively, any characteristic dress, or a dress assumed for or worn upon a particular occasion; hence, characteristic covering or outward appearance: as, the livery of May or of autumn.

The spring, the summer,
The childing autumn, angry winter, change
Their wonted liveries. Shak., M. N. D., ii. 1. 113.

Now came still evening on, and twilight gray
Had in her sober livery all things clad.
Milton, P. L., iv. 599.

7. A livery-stable. [U. S.]—8. Same as livery company: as, the London liveries.—Livery companies. See company.—Livery of seizin, the delivery of property into possession. See def. 2 (a).—Statute of Liveries. See statute.—To sue one's livery, in old Eng. law, to issue the writ which lay for the heir to obtain the seizin of his lands from the king.

He came but to be Duke of Lancaster,
To sue his livery and beg his peace.
Shak., 1 Hen. IV., iv. 3. 62.

livery[2] (liv′ėr-i), v. t.; pret. and pp. liveried, ppr. liverying. [< livery[2], n.] To clothe in or as if in livery.

His rudeness so with his authorized youth
Did livery falseness in a pride of truth.
Shak., Lover's Complaint, l. 105.

He had 116 servants in liverys, every one liveried in greene sattin doublets. Evelyn, Diary, Nov. 3, 1633.

livery-coat (liv′ėr-i-kōt), n. A coat forming part of a livery-dress—especially, in modern times, of that of a man servant.

livery-collar (liv′ėr-i-kol″ėr), n. A collar of an order or of honorary distinction, as the collar of SS, the collar of the Bath, etc.

livery-colors (liv′ėr-i-kul″ọrz), n. pl. Colors adopted by a person or family of rank and importance for the livery of the household, and also for decorative purposes. Thus, the colors of the Tudor princes of England were white and green (Boutell), those of the Stuarts scarlet and gold, etc.

livery-cupboard (liv′ėr-i-kub″ėrd), n. A stand with two or three shelves formerly used in the dining-room, on which the liveries (food, drink, etc.) intended for distribution were placed.

livery-fish (liv′ėr-i-fish), n. A North of Ireland name of the striped wrasse.

livery-gown (liv′ėr-i-goun), n. The gown forming part of a livery-dress, especially that worn by a London liveryman.

liveryman (liv′ėr-i-man), n.; pl. liverymen (-men). 1. One who wears a livery; specifically, a freeman of the City of London, who, having paid certain fees, is entitled to wear the characteristic dress or livery of the company to which he belongs, and also to enjoy certain other privileges, as the right to vote in the election of the lord mayor, sheriffs, chamberlain, etc.—2. One who keeps a livery-stable.

livery-office (liv′ėr-i-of″is), n. An office appointed for the delivery of lands. Wharton.

livery-servant (liv′ėr-i-sėr″vant), n. A servant who wears a livery; hence, a servant not of the highest grade, as that of steward or the like. Compare servant out of livery, under servant.

livery-stable (liv′ėr-i-stā″bl), n. A stable where horses are kept for hire and vehicles are let.

livery-table† (liv′ėr-i-tā″bl), n. A side table or cupboard. Fuller, Pisgah Sight, V. i. 18.

lives, n. 1. Plural of life.—2†. An obsolete genitive of life.

live-spindle (līv′spin″dl), n. In a lathe, the rotating spindle in the head-stock by which power is imparted, as distinguished from the dead-spindle in the tail-stock.

livetide†, n. [< *live*³, for life, + tide.] Fortune; living. Holland, tr. of Camden, p. 245. (Davies.) live-well (līv′wel), n. The well of a fishing-smack in which fish are kept alive.

livid (liv′id), a. [< F. livide = Sp. lívido = Pg. It. livido, < L. lividus, black and blue, < livere, be livid.] 1. Black and blue, like a contusion. The term is applied, with the strong exaggeration usually characterizing the use of color-names, to the color of a person "black in the face" from strangulation, or having a cold, death-like complexion from rage, fear, or suffering; or to a light which imparts a death-like aspect to the face. Thus, a face illuminated by the yellow monochromatic light produced by the burning of an alcoholic solution of common salt is said to present a livid appearance.

> At this the blood the virgin's cheek forsook;
> A livid paleness spreads o'er all her look.
> Pope, R. of the L., iii. 90.

> A thousand flambeaux . . . turned all at once that deep gloom into a livid and preternatural day.
> Poe, Tales, I. 371.

> On livid brows of agony
> The broad red lightning shone.
> Whittier, The Slave Ship.

2. In zoöl., pale purplish-brown, more or less translucent, resembling the color of a bruised surface of flesh.

lividity (li-vid′i-ti), n. [< F. lividité, < ML. lividita(t-)s, lividness, < L. lividus, livid: see livid.] The state of being livid; the peculiar darkness of color exhibited by bruised flesh.

> The signs of a tendency to such a state [the atrabilarian] are darkness or lividity of the countenance [and] dryness of the skin. Arbuthnot, Aliments, vi. § 28.

lividness (liv′id-nes), n. Same as lividity.

living (liv′ing), n. [< ME. living, livyng, libbing; verbal n. of *live*¹, v.] 1. The act or the condition of existing; the state of having life; power of continuing life.

> There is no living without trusting somebody or other in some cases. Sir R. L'Estrange.

> And do you think this is Living, to be involved in so many Miseries, and to wallow in so great Iniquities?
> N. Bailey, tr. of Colloquies of Erasmus, I. 266.

2†. Period of life; term of existence.

> To spend her [a nun's] living in eternal love.
> Shak., Lover's Complaint, l. 238.

3. Manner or course of life: as; holy living.

> The younger son . . . wasted his substance with riotous living. Luke xv. 13.

> Dr. Parker, in his sermon before them, touched them so near for their living, that they went near to touch him for his life. Sir J. Hayward.

4. Means of subsistence; estate; livelihood.

> For to drawen up all thing
> That nede was to her libbeing.
> Arthour and Merlin, p. 38.

> And ther lyvyng ys mynystired vnto them twyes a Day from the seyd Mownte Syon.
> Torkington, Diarie of Eng. Travell, p. 39.

> She of her want did cast in all that she had, even all her living. Mark xii. 44.

> My duty toward my neighbour is . . . to learn and labour truly to get mine own living.
> Book of Common Prayer, Catechism.

Specifically—(a) An ecclesiastical office by virtue of which the clerk or incumbent has the right to enjoy certain church revenues on condition of discharging certain services prescribed by the canons, or by usage, or by the conditions under which the office has been founded. (See induction, 2.) In the reign of Henry VIII. a system of "pluralities" was established, whereby the same clerk might hold two or more livings; but in the reign of Victoria this privilege, which was attended with great abuses, has been repeatedly abridged; and no clerk may now hold two livings unless the churches so attached are within three miles of each other, and the annual value of one of them does not exceed one hundred pounds.

> We see some parents, that have the donations or advocations of Church livings in their hands, must needs have some of their children . . . thrust into the ministry.
> Bp. Sanderson, Works, III. 125.

> He obtained licence from the King that the University might purchase advouzances of spiritual livings.
> Fuller, Hist. Cambridge, II. 38.

> Your peculiar institution of church livings—which (as I understand it) makes it possible that a priest of the oracles of God may be a mere functionary.
> J. W. Palmer, After his Kind, p. 235.

(b) The income from a benefice; ecclesiastical revenue.

> They [the clergy] have great labors, and therefore they ought to have good livings, that they may commodiously feed their flock. Latimer, Sermon of the Plough.

(c) The seat of the office; a parish.

> I shall pass part of next summer at my living, and in all probability come over to Edinburgh.
> Sydney Smith, To Francis Jeffrey.

5. A farm. [Prov. Eng.]

> My lands and livings are not small,
> My house and lynage faire.
> The Child of Elle (Child's Ballads, III. 231).

High living. See high. = Syn. 4. Living, Livelihood, Subsistence, Sustenance, Support, Maintenance. These words differ essentially, as their derivations suggest. To make a living or a livelihood is to earn enough to keep alive on with economy, not barely enough to maintain life, nor sufficient to live in luxury. Livelihood is a rather finer and less material word than living. Subsistence and sustenance refer entirely to food: subsistence is that which keeps one in existence or animal life; sustenance is that which holds one up. Support and maintenance, like living and livelihood, cover necessary expenses. To guarantee a man his support is to promise money to cover all expenses proper to economical living, or such living as may be agreed upon. Maintenance may be applied to expensive living. An honest livelihood; a bare living; bare subsistence; scanty sustenance; ample support; an honorable maintenance at the university.

living (liv′ing), p. a. [Altered from ME. livend, lifand, < AS. lifiende, ppr. of lifian, live: see *live*¹, v.] 1. Being alive; having life or vitality; not dead: as, a living animal or plant.

> The Lord God . . . breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul. Gen. ii. 7.

2. In actual existence; having present vigor or vitality; now in action or use; not lifeless, stagnant, inert, or disused: applied to things: as, living languages; a living spring; living faith.

> To live a life half dead, a living death.
> Milton, S. A., l. 100.

> Then flash'd the living lightning from her eyes.
> Pope, R. of the L., iii. 155.

> It is the living question of the hour, and not the dead story of the past, which forces itself into all minds.
> O. W. Holmes, Old Vol. of Life, p. 78.

3. Furious; fierce: applied by seamen to a gale: as, a living gale of wind.—4. Existing in the original state and place; being as primarily formed and situated: only in the phrases living rock, living stone.

> I now found myself on a rude and narrow stairway, the steps of which were cut out of the living rock. Moore.

> The forms they hewed from living stone
> Survive the waste of years, alone.
> Bryant, The Greek Boy.

Living force. See vis viva.—Living language. See language.—The living, one who is or those who are alive: usually with a plural signification: as, in the land of the living.

> The living will lay it to his heart. Eccl. vii. 2.

living-chamber (liv′ing-chām″bėr), n. The chamber or cavity of a shell in which an animal lives, as distinguished from that part from which the body of the animal has receded during the growth of the shell: said especially of fossil cephalopods.

livingly (liv′ing-li), adv. [< living + *-ly*².] In a living state or manner; by the course or way of life.

Livistona (liv-is-tō′nä), n. [NL. (R. Brown, 1810), named for Patrick Murray of Livistone, near Edinburgh.] A genus of fan-palms of the tribe Sabaleæ, distinguished by the terminal styles and stigmas, the petals and sepals being valvate in the bud, and by the distinct or slightly coherent globose carpels. The flowers are hermaphrodite, and consist of three sepals and a three-lobed corolla, six stamens and three carpels, of which generally but one matures and forms the fruit. The leaves are fan-shaped and generally split on the edges, and are borne on spiny petioles. There are about 14 species, found in eastern and tropical Asia, the Malay archipelago, New Guinea, and eastern Australia. L. australis, the Australian or Victorian cabbage-tree, is native as far south as Victoria.

Livonian (li-vō′ni-an), a. and n. [< Livonia (see def.) + -an.] I. a. Of or pertaining to Livonia; Lettish.

II. n. 1. A native or an inhabitant of Livonia, one of the Baltic provinces of Russia; specifically, a member of the primitive race of Livonia.—2. The language formerly spoken by the Livonians.

livor (lī′vǫr), n. [< L. livor, lividness, envy, < livere, be of a bluish color, be envious: see livid.] 1†. Envy; malignity.

> Out of this root of envy spring those feral branches of faction, hatred, livor, emulation.
> Burton, Anat. of Mel., p. 167.

2. pl. The parts of skin in a corpse discolored by the hypostatic accumulation of blood.

livraison (lē-vrā-zôṅ′), n. [F., < ML. liberatio(n-), a giving, L. a setting free, liberation: see liberation and *liver*³. Cf. livereson, an obs. E. form of the same word.] One of several parts of a printed work issued at intervals in advance of the completion of the whole; a number of a book published in parts, or of a periodical; a fascicle: used only or chiefly of French publications.

> I shall send you several livraisons of the Encyclopédie.
> Jefferson, Correspondence, II. 69.

livre (lē′vėr), n. [F., = Sp. Pg. libra = It. libbra, lira, < L. libra, the Roman pound; cf. Gr. λίτρα, a pound: see libra.] An old French coin and money of account, now superseded by the franc. The value of the livre tournois, or livre of Tours, by comparison of the gold coinage of 1726–1785 with the present United States gold coinage, was 19¼ cents, and by comparison of silver coin of the same periods it was 18² cents. The livre parisis, or livre of Paris, in use until 1667 conjointly with the livre tournois, was worth one quarter more than the latter.

lixivial (lik-siv′i-al), a. [= F. lixiviel = Sp. lejivial = It. lissiviale. < L. lixivius, lixivium, lye: see lixivium.] 1. Obtained by lixiviation; impregnated with alkaline matter extracted from wood-ashes.—2. Containing or consisting of salts so extracted.—3. Of the color of lye; resembling lye.—4. Having the qualities of alkaline salts extracted from wood-ashes.—Lixivial salts, in chem., salts obtained by passing water through wood-ashes, or by pouring water on wood-ashes.

lixiviate (lik-siv′i-āt), v. t.; pret. and pp. lixiviated, ppr. lixiviating. [< ML. lixiviatus*, pp. of lixiviare*, form into a lye, < L. lixivium, lye: see lixivium.] To subject to the process of lixiviation; form into lye; impregnate with salts from wood-ashes: as, lixiviated water.

> [Iodine] is obtained by pouring an excess of concentrated sulphuric acid on the water obtained by burning different fuci, lixiviating the ashes, and concentrating the liquor.
> Dunglison, Dict. Med. Science.

lixiviate (lik-siv′i-āt), a. [< ML. lixiviatus*, pp.: see the verb.] 1. Pertaining to lye or lixivium; of the nature of alkaline salts.

> The fixed nitre is of an alcalizate nature, and participates the qualities belonging generally to lixiviate salts.
> Boyle, Works, I. 370.

2. Impregnated with salts from wood-ashes.

lixiviation (lik-siv-i-ā′shon), n. [= F. lixiviation = Pg. lixiviação = It. lissiviazione, < ML. lixiviatio(n-), < lixiviare, make into lye: see lixiviate.] The operation or process of extracting alkaline salts from ashes by percolation of water; the process of leaching. For the application of leaching or lixiviation to the treatment of metalliferous ores, see Augustin's process, Patera process, Russell's process, Ziervogel's process, all under process.

lixivious (lik-siv′i-us), a. [< L. lixivius, also lixivus, made into lye: see lixivium.] Lixivial.

lixivium (lik-siv′i-um), n. [< L. lixivium, also lixivia, lye, neut. and fem. respectively of lixivius, made into lye, < lix, ashes, lye.] Water impregnated with alkaline salts extracted from wood-ashes; lye: sometimes applied to other extracts.

> I have found wonderfull benefit in bathing my head with a decoction of some hot and aromaticall herbs, in a lixivium made of the ashes of vine-branches.
> Evelyn, To Doctor Beale.

lixt†. An obsolete form of liest, second person singular indicative present of *lie*¹. Chaucer.

liza (lī′zä), n. The white or blue-backed mullet, Mugil curema.

lizard (liz′ärd), n. [< ME. lesarde, lusarde, < OF. lezard, lesard, lisard, F. lézard = Sp. Pg.

lagarto (> E. aligarto, now alligator) = It. lacerta, lucerta, < L. lacertus, lacerta, a lizard. Cf. lacert.] 1. A scaly four-legged reptile without a shell; a squamate quadruped saurian; a saurian or lacertilian. In popular language a lizard is almost any reptile except a frog, toad, snake, or turtle; and ordinary book usage is equally indefinite. Thus, skinks, stellios, geckos, chameleons, basilisks, monitors, agamas, iguanas, alligators, crocodiles, etc., are all lizards; pterodactyls are flying-lizards; dinosaurs, plesiosaurs, and mosasaurs are huge extinct lizards. But the word is most frequently used as the name of the small lacertilians, as those of the family Lacertidæ and some others, which have no special names of their own. See Lacerta, Lacertidæ.

Our Author saw one Lizard as big as a man, with scales on her backe like Oysters. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 838.

Lizards, the green lightnings of the wall, . . .
With such prodigious eyes in such small heads!
Mrs. Browning, Aurora Leigh, vii.

2. Any member of the old order Sauria or modern order Lacertilia. Such are the reptiles known as slow-worms, glass-snakes, horned toads, etc. Many of these have no limbs, or no obvious ones, and are therefore not lizards in sense 1.

3. Naut., a piece of rope with a thimble or bull's-eye spliced into one or both ends, used in a vessel as a leader for ropes.—4. [cap.] A certain small constellation. See Lacerta, 2.—5. A crotch of timber or a forked limb used in place of a sled for hauling stone: a form of stone-boat.—6. In her., a beast like a wildcat, usually represented as spotted: a rare bearing.—Anguine lizard. See anguine.—Broad-backed lizards, the varanians or monitors.—Croaking lizard, a gecko common in Jamaica, Thecadactylus lævis: so called from the noise it makes. It is nocturnal. Also croaking gecko.—Frilled lizard. See frill-lizard.—Scaly lizard, a pangolin or scaly ant-eater. See Manis.

lizard-bait (liz′ärd-bāt), n. The lesser sand-lance. [Prov. Eng.]

lizard-fish (liz′ärd-fish), n. 1. A ganoid fish of the group of sauroids.—2. A fish of the genus Synodus, of which there are several species, as the sandpike, S. fœtens, found from Cape Cod southward. S. lucioceps occurs on the Californian and Mexican coasts.

lizard-seeker (liz′ärd-sē′kėr), n. An American ground-cuckoo, Saurothera vetula, or some other member of the subfamily Saurotherinæ.

lizard-stone (liz′ärd-stōn), n. A name for the serpentine marble obtained in Cornwall, England, in the vicinity of Lizard Point. It is made into chimneypieces, ornaments, etc.

lizard's-tongue (liz′ärdz-tung), n. A name of several orchids included in the genus Sauroglossum. All the species are natives of tropical America.

lizardtail, lizard's-tail (liz′ärd-, liz′ärdz-tāl), n. 1. An herbaceous plant, Saururus cernuus, growing in marshes in North America. The name was suggested by its nodding spikes of white flowers. Also called breastweed (which see).—2. A plant, Pathomorphe peltata, of tropical America.

lizard-tailed (liz′ärd-tāld), a. Having long fragile arms or rays, likened to the tail of a lizard: specifically applied to the ophiurans.

lizari (li-zä′ri), n. Same as alizari.

Lizzia (liz′i-ä), n. [NL.] A genus of gymnoblastic acalephs or jellyfishes, with 32 marginal tentacles arranged by fives and threes, and the young produced by direct budding from the polypite. L. octopunctata is an example.

llama (lä′mä, Sp. lyä′mä), n. [Also lama, glama, as the L. generic or specific name; < Quichua llama.] 1. An even-toed ruminant ungulate quadruped, Auchenia glama or llama, or Lama peruviana, of South America, of the order Ungulata, suborder Artiodactyla, superfamily Llama.

Tylopoda, family Camelidæ, closely related to the camel of the Old World, but smaller, without a hump, and woolly-haired. Like the camel, it is known only in the state of domestication; it is supposed to be descended from the guanaco. The llama is also called the American camel, and has been known to Europeans since 1544. It was the only beast of burden in America before the arrival of the Spaniards, and is still used as such in the Andes, the formation of its feet enabling it to walk on slopes too rough or steep for any other animal. It is about 3 feet high at the shoulder, and so closely allied to the alpaca that the latter is sometimes regarded as a finer-wooled variety of it.

2. The wool of the llama. It is used in making stuffs for women's wear, lace, tassels, etc.

Her [the Lady Mayoress's] petticoat was of llama and gold. First Year of a Silken Reign, p. 69.

llan. [W. llan, an inclosure, a church.] A church: a very frequent element in place-names in Wales, and occurring also in England and Scotland, as in *Llan*daff, *Llan*gollen, *Llan*idloes, *Lan*ark.

Llandeilo group (lan-dī′lō grōp). [See def.] A division of the Lower Silurian, first described by Murchison as occurring at Llandeilo in Carmarthenshire, Wales, and also found in Pembrokeshire and Radnorshire. The group consists of dark-colored flags, sandstones, and shales, and is between 2,000 and 3,000 feet thick. It contains many of the characteristic fossils of the lowest division of the Silurian, especially trilobites of genera included in Barrande's "primordial fauna," such as Asaphus, Calymmene, and Ogygia.

Llandovery group (lan-dō′ve-ri grōp). [See def.] A series of rocks, so named by Murchison because well developed near Llandovery in Carmarthenshire, Wales. The group consists of sandstones, grits, and conglomerates, having a maximum thickness of nearly 2,500 feet. It is divided into two subdivisions, the Lower Llandovery beds, and the Upper Llandovery beds or the May Hill sandstone. By some geologists the Upper and the Lower Llandovery and the Tarannon shales were formerly grouped together as the May Hill series, and considered as the lowest division of the Silurian, the fossiliferous strata below this being called Cambrian. At one time the division between the Lower and Upper Silurian was taken between the Upper and Lower Llandovery. See Silurian.

llanero (lyä-nā′rō), n. [Sp., < llano, a plain: see llano.] An inhabitant of the llanos of South America. The llaneros are principally converted Indians or descendants of Indians and whites, and are distinguished for activity, ferocity, ignorance, and semi-barbarous habits. They are for the most part shepherds or herdsmen.

llano (lyä′nō), n. [Sp., a plain, < L. planus, level: see plain and plane.] In some of the Spanish or originally Spanish parts of America, a treeless level steppe or plain. The llanos in the northern part of South America surround the lower and middle course of the Orinoco, and are separated by the great forest-belt of the Amazon from the region of the pampas farther south. Many parts of these llanos bear little or no vegetation, except on the banks of rivers and during the seasons of inundation, when they are broadly flooded. In the intermediate season they are luxuriant pastures for great herds of cattle. The Llano Estacado or Staked Plain of the United States is a vast arid plateau in the former Spanish possessions of Texas and New Mexico. The seasonal change in the llanos is due to the northward advance of the equatorial rains in the wet season (summer), followed by the advance of the parching trade-winds as the rain-belt retreats southward in the dry season (winter).

The northernmost of the South American plains—the Llanos—are in the torrid zone.
Humboldt, Aspects of Nature (trans.), p. 30.

LL. B. An abbreviation of the Latin (Middle or New Latin) Legum Baccalaureus, Bachelor of Laws.

LL. D. An abbreviation of the Latin (Middle or New Latin) Legum Doctor, Doctor of Laws.

llean (lēn), n. The pilchard. [Cornwall.]

llestraid, n. [W.: see listred.] Same as listred.

Lloyd's (loidz), n. [See def.] The name (which ★has become in some degree generic) of an association in London, consisting of members and subscribers, for the transaction of marine insurance for all parts of the world through individual underwriters, and the promotion of shipping interests in general. The association has occupied Lloyd's Rooms in the Royal Exchange since 1774. These rooms were originally called the New Lloyd's Coffee-House, from a house established by Edward Lloyd in Tower street, in the latter part of the seventeenth century, where merchants and underwriters met to transact business. About 1692 the establishment was removed to Lombard street for the convenience of merchants of the highest class doing business in the old city. About 1770 the place came into the possession of the society of marine underwriters, together with "Lloyd's List" (formerly "Lloyd's News"), a newspaper devoted to shipping intelligence, that was founded about 1726, probably by Lloyd, and has been published daily since 1800. The society retained the official title Lloyd's Coffee-House until 1871, when it was for the first time incorporated by act of Parliament, under its present shortened name. Its operations are so extensive and important that the name has been adopted by several continental associations for maritime and mercantile enterprises, the principal of which are the Austrian Lloyd at Trieste and the North German Lloyd at Bremen.

Lloyd's was then [in Anne's reign] in Lombard Street, and indeed to this day, on Lloyd's policies, is stated that this policy shall have the same effect as if issued in Lombard Street.
J. Ashton, Social Life in Reign of Queen Anne, I. 224.

Lloyd's agent, one of a class of agents, in nearly all parts of the world, acting for the committee of underwriters at Lloyd's, who transmit maritime information of all kinds, report disasters, etc. They are generally local merchants, shippers, or others concerned with maritime business.—Lloyd's bond. See bond[1].—Lloyd's Register of British and Foreign Shipping, an annual work, published by an association of members of Lloyd's, containing the names of vessels alphabetically arranged, and ranked in different classes (as A1, etc.) according to their qualifications, their title to be in any class being determined by the report of surveyors, and by certain rules as to their construction, their state of repair, age, etc.

lo[1] (lō), interj. [< ME. lo, loo, < AS. lā, a common interj. of surprise, calling, or mere greeting. Confusion of lā, ME. lo, with lōc, ME. lok, impv., look, is supposed to have given lo its now usual implication of 'behold'; but the difference of form is too great to make any such confusion probable.] Look! see! behold! observe!—used to invoke or direct the particular attention of a person to some object or subject of interest.

Lo, ȝe lordes, what leute did by an emperoure of Rome, That was an vncrystene creature as clerkes fyndeth in bokes. Piers Plowman (B), xi. 149.

Lo, Adam, in the felde of Damascene,
With Goddes owen finger wrought was he.
Chaucer, Monk's Tale, l. 17.

Why, lo you now, I have spoke to the purpose twice.
Shak., W. T., i. 2. 105.

Lo[2] (lō), n. [From the well-known lines of Pope, "Lo! the poor Indian, whose untutored mind," etc. ("Essay on Man," i. 99), the word Lo being humorously taken as the name of "the poor Indian."] A North American Indian. [Humorous, U. S.]

loa (lō′ä), n. A larval nematode worm infesting the eye; the larval stage of the eye-threadworm, Filaria oculi.

loach (lōch), n. [Also loche; < F. loche = Sp. locha, loja, loach: origin unknown.] 1. A small European fish, Cobitis (Nemachilus) barbatula, Common Loach (Nemachilus barbatulus).

of the family Cobitidæ; hence, any fish of that family. The common loach inhabits small clear streams, and is esteemed a delicacy. It is also called beardy. The spinous loach or groundling is a smaller species, Cobitis tænia.

The miller's thombe, the hiding loach,
The perch, the ever-nibling roach.
W. Browne, Britannia's Pastorals, i. 1.

Scarcely a stone I left unturned, being thoroughly skilled in the tricks of the loach. . . . For being gray-spotted, and clear to see through, . . . he will stay quite still where a streak of weed is in the rapid water, hoping to be overlooked. R. D. Blackmore, Lorna Doone, vii.

2. A European fresh-water gadoid fish, the burbot or eel-pout, Lota maculosa. See cut under burbot.—3. A simpleton. Nares.

And George redeemed his cloake, rode merrily to Oxford, having coine in his pocket, where this loach spares not for any expence. Jests of George Peele.

load[1] (lōd), n. See lode[1].

load[2] (lōd), n. [< ME. lode, loode, a burden ★carried in a vehicle, lit. a carrying, a particular use of lode, a way, course, carrying: see lode[1]. In the orig. sense the word is more commonly spelled lode, while in the later senses the exclusive spelling is load, and the word is now associated with lade[1].] 1. That which is carried; a burden laid on or placed in anything, or taken up, for conveyance; specifically, a suitable or customary burden; the amount or quantity that can be or usually is carried: as, a ship's load; a cart-load; wood and hay are often sold by the load.

Of stree [straw] first ther was leyd ful many a loode.
Chaucer, Knight's Tale (ed. Morris), l. 2060.

Come, now towards Chertsey with your holy load.
Shak., Rich. III., i. 2. 29.

Later in the fall, certain of the Count's vassals came to the riva in one of the great boats of the Po, with a load of brush and corncobs for fuel. Howells, Venetian Life, vii.

2. That which is upborne or sustained; a burden; a weight resting on or in anything: as, a load of fruit on a tree; a load of learning in the mind.

What think you of a duchess? have you limbs
To bear that load of title?
Shak., Hen. VIII., ii. 3. 38.

From their foundations loosening to and fro,
They pluck'd the seated hills, with all their load.
Milton, P. L., vi. 644.

Earth, on whose wide-spreading Base
The wretched Load is laid of Human Race.
Congreve, Tears of Amaryllis.

And all that freedom's highest aims can reach
Is but to lay proportion'd loads on each.
Goldsmith, Traveller, l. 374.

Especially—3. That which is hard to be sustained or endured; an oppressive or grievous burden: as, a load of debt; a load of guilt.

Who hast of sorrow thy full load besides.
Milton, S. A., l. 214.

Sin doth not lie like a heavy weight upon their backs, so that they feel the load of it.
Stillingfleet, Sermons, II. iii.

Men who prefer any load of infamy, however great, to any pressure of taxation, however light.
Sydney Smith, American Debts. (Bartlett.)

4. The charge of a firearm: as, a load of buckshot.—5. A quantity of strong drink imbibed, or sometimes of food taken, that oppresses, or is more than can be borne comfortably or with propriety: as, he went home late with a load on. [Slang.]

There are those that can never sleep without their load, nor enjoy one easy thought till they have laid all their cares to rest with a bottle. Sir R. L'Estrange.

6. A unit of measure or weight. By the statute of Edward I., de ponderibus et mensuris, a load (carrus) of lead is 1,500 pounds, and sometimes 168 stone, and in the Peak, 30 fotmals or 2,100 pounds, and of wheat the same. By statutes of George I., a load of wood is 50 cubic feet, and a load of hay 2,016 pounds. By a statute of 27 George III., a load of bulrushes is 63 bundles. Other loads are merely customary. Dr. Young says a load of wheat is 40 bushels; of earth or gravel, 1 cubic yard; of lime, 32 bushels; of oak-bark, 5,040 pounds; of sand, 36 bushels. A load of lead ore in Derbyshire is 9 dishes of from 14 to 16 pints each.

7. In mech., the pressure upon any part or the whole of a structure. It consists of the internal load, or permanent load, the weight of the part itself and its fixed attachments, and the external load, arising from pressures of other bodies upon its surface. [The word is not properly used to signify a quantity of work.]

A structure has to support both its own weight and also any load that may be placed upon it. Thus a railway bridge must at all times sustain what is called the permanent load, and frequently, of course, the weight of one or more trains. R. S. Ball, Exper. Mechanics, p. 172.

To lay on load†. See *lay*1.—Syn. 1 and 2. Freight, ★cargo, lading.—3. Pressure, dead-weight, incubus, clog.

load[2] (lōd), v. [< load[2], n.; in part a var. of the original verb lade[1], in imitation of the noun load[2]: see lade[1].] I. trans. 1. To lay a burden on; charge with a load; furnish with lading or cargo; lade: as, to load a camel or a horse; to load a cart or wagon. [The past participle loaden is obsolete.]

Your carriages were heavy loaden; they are a burden to the weary beast. Isa. xlvi. 1.

By turns they ease the loaden swarms, or drive
The drone, a lazy insect, from their hive.
Addison, tr. of Virgil's Georgics, iv.

2. To lay as a burden; place upon or in something for conveyance: as, to load cotton on a lighter; to load cargo.

There was no talke, no hope, no worke, but dig gold, wash gold, refine gold, loade gold.
Quoted in Capt. John Smith's True Travels, I. 169.

3. To weigh down; impose something upon, either good or bad; pile; heap; encumber or oppress: with with: as, to load the stomach with sweets; to load the memory with details.

Those honours deep and broad, wherewith
Your majesty loads our house.
Shak., Macbeth, i. 6. 17.

Essex loaded Bacon with benefits, and never thought that he had done enough. Macaulay, Lord Bacon.

4. To make heavy by something added or appended; charge, as with something extraneous: as, to load a whip; to load dice.

He has a conscience,
A cruel stinging one, I warrant him,
A loaden one. Fletcher, Loyal Subject, v. 1.

At the ripe age of fourteen years I bought a certain cudgel, got a friend to load it.
R. L. Stevenson, A Penny Plain, 2*d* Coloured.

5. To make heavy, as a liquid; especially, to falsify, as wine, by mixing with it distilled liquor of some sort, usually accompanied with sugar and other ingredients, for the purpose of making a thin wine appear heavy and full-bodied; also, to increase the weight of, as paper, or textile fabrics, by the addition of clay, starch, or other extrinsic matter.

It is an intolerable nuisance to have to dress, and go out seven or eight miles to cold entrées, and loaded claret, and sweet port. Thackeray, Lovel the Widower, iii.

If the paper is to be loaded—that is, adulterated with clay or cheap fibres—these are added in the beater as the fibre swirls round and round. Harper's Mag., LXXV. 120.

6. To place a charge in; charge, as a gun with powder and shot.

Many a Whig that day loaded his musket with a dollar cut into slugs. Scott, Old Mortality, xvi.

The sportsman should be careful . . . to ascertain the charge best suited to his weapon, and to have his cartridges so loaded. Encyc. Brit., XXI. 835.

7. In painting: (a) To mix with white: said of a pigment which in this way is made more solid and opaque. (b) To paint heavily; apply (color) in solid opaque masses.

Masses of white enamel are loaded upon the surface, with a view to further treatment. Art Jour., N. S., XI. 10.

Deck-loading Act, a British statute of 1842 (5 Vict., sess. 2, c. 17) forbidding the loading of cargoes of timber on the decks of certain classes of ships.—Loaded dice. See die[3].—To load one's self, on the stock-exchange, to buy heavily of stock. See unload.

Steady they load, steady they fire, moving right onward still. T. O. Davis, Fontenoy.

3. To become loaded or burdened; clog up: as, oysters are apt to load with sand.

loaded[1]†, a. An obsolete variant of loded.

loaded[2] (lō'ded), p. a. 1. Coated with external ★growths, as shells; clogged up: said of oysters. [Rhode Island.]—2. Full of liquor; drunk. ★[Slang.]

loader (lō'dėr), n. 1. One who or that which loads: as, a truck-loader. Specifically—(a) A little machine for loading shells or cartridges for a breech-loading shot-gun; a loading-machine. (b) In agri., etc., any device for laying a load upon a wagon, sled, or cart: as, a hay-loader, a log-loader, etc.

2. A red-finned herring. [Prov. Eng.]—3†. A term in dicing, of uncertain meaning.

Every vice is a loader; but that [lust] is a ten.
Dryden, tr. of Juvenal's Satires, vi., Arg.

★loading (lō'ding), n. [Verbal n. of load[2], v.] 1. The act of putting on a load.—2. A cargo; a burden; lading; also, anything that makes part of a load.—3. Anything that is added to a substance or material in order to give it weight or body: as, the China clay or pearl-white used for loading note-paper.—4. In art, a heavy charge of opaque color. See load[2], v. t., 7.

Loading is the use of opaque colour in heavy masses which actually protrude from the canvas and themselves catch the light, as the mountains do on the moon.
P. G. Hamerton, Graphic Arts, p. 304.

5. In insurance, that part of the charge or premium on a policy which constitutes its share of the expenses of management.

The terms loading and "margin" have come to bear a somewhat extended meaning. They are now used to designate the difference between the premiums payable by the assured and the net premiums deduced from any table that may be employed for the time.
Encyc. Brit., XIII. 173.

loading (lō'ding), p. a. Made so as to be loaded (in the way specified): as, a breech-loading or a muzzle-loading gun.

loading-bar (lō'ding-bär), n. A bar of iron about two feet long, with a ring at one end and a screw at the other, for carrying and loading shells: used with smooth-bore mortars.

loading-funnel (lō'ding-fun″el), n. See funnel.

loading-machine (lō'ding-ma-shēn″), n. A machine for loading cartridge-shells. It has a revolving wheel on which the shells are fed in; the requisite amount of powder is admitted to each shell from the powder-can by means of a funnel above, and the bullet or charge of shot is forced into the neck of each shell as the wheel advances in its revolution.

loading-plug (lō'ding-plug), n. A rammer for loading shells and extracting primers from fired shells.

loading-tongs (lō'ding-tôngz), n. sing. and pl. In gun., a pair of tongs used to lift a projectile to the gun from the platform.

loading-tray (lō'ding-trā), n. In milit. engin., a stout iron support upon which a heavy shot or shell is placed, and by suitable mechanism brought into the opening in the breech of a large breech-loading gun, as an assistance in charging the gun.

load-line (lōd'līn), n. [Appar. < load[2] + line[2]; but perhaps < load[1] = lode[1] + line[2].] Naut., a line drawn on the side of a vessel to show the depth to which a suitable or allowable load will cause her to sink in the water. Among English seamen known as Plimsoll's mark. See mark.

There shall be a load-line or conspicuous mark on each vessel, showing the depth of loading and of surplus buoyancy. R. J. Hinton, Eng. Radical Leaders, p. 207.

Nor did it occur to the "practical" politicians who provided a compulsory load-line for merchant vessels, that the pressure of ship-owners' interests would habitually cause the putting of the load-line at the very highest limit, and that from precedent to precedent, tending ever in the same direction, the load-line would gradually rise in the better class of ships. H. Spencer, Man vs. State, p. 25.

loadman[1]†, n. See lodeman.

loadman[2]† (lōd'man), n. A carter. Halliwell.

loadmanage†, n. See lodemanage.

load-penny (lōd'pen″i), n. A market toll or tax anciently levied on loads in the towns of England for public revenue.

The gift of its [Worcester's] market-dues, wain-shilling and load-penny, was the costliest among the many boons which Æthelred and Æthelflæd showered on Bishop Werfrith. J. R. Green, Conq. of Eng., ix.

loadsman†, n. See lodesman.

loadstar, n. See lodestar.

loadstone, n. See lodestone.

loadum† (lō'dum), n. [Appar. for load 'em: see quot. from Florio.] An old game at cards.

Cárica l'asino [It., load the ass], a play at cardes which we call lodam. Florio.

For to converse with Scandal is to play Losing Loadum; you must lose a good Name to him, before you can win it for yourself. Congreve, Love for Love, i. 11.

loam-board (lōm′bōrd), n. A founders' tool and templet used in making cores of loam. It is a board cut to the shape of the core, and is used both to hold a supply of loam for the operation, and as an aid in turning the dried core down to the exact shape. Also called strickle.

loam-cake (lōm′kāk), n. In foundry-work, a cake, plate, or disk of compacted loam used to cover in a loam-mold. It is provided with holes or gates through which the molten metal enters the mold, and with other holes or vents for free exit of air from the mold.

loam-mold (lōm′mōld), n. A mold made from casting-loam. Such molds are used for castings of iron and brass.

loam-molding (lōm′mōl″ding), n. In foundry-work, the making of loam-molds in general. The term is used especially of the act of striking up the surfaces of molds by means of templets controlled by parallel guides, or, in case the surfaces are cylindrical, by a central pivot and radial arms, to which the templets are attached. Sometimes cores are formed on a barrel or central cylinder, and then turned on the barrel by means of a tool resting on the loam-board.

loam-plate (lōm′plāt), n. In foundry-work, a flat ring or plate of cast-iron, used in constructing a loam-mold, one or more of which are used to support and clamp together the brickwork which supports the softer parts of the mold.

loam-work (lōm′wėrk), n. In foundries, the processes of making loam-molds, and casting iron, brass, etc., in them. Very fine castings are obtained by these processes.

loamy (lō′mi), a. [< loam + -y[1].] 1. Consisting of loam; of the nature of or resembling loam: as, loamy soil.

. . . It was said that a Lob Lie-by-the-fire once haunted the little old Hall at Lingborough.
Mrs. J. H. Ewing, Lob Lie-by-the-Fire, Int.

★lob[1] (lob), v.; pret. and pp. lobbed, ppr. lobbing. [< lob[1], n.] I. trans. 1. To throw (a lump or ball, etc.); toss gently or with a slow movement; specifically, in lawn-tennis, to strike (the ball) over the head of one's opponent into the back part of the court.

Suppose . . . that firing with reduced charges is required, that shell are being lobbed from behind a parapet at high angles into a work. Encyc. Brit., XI. 313.

2. To kick. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

II. intrans. To be tossed with a slow movement, as a cricket-ball or a shot.

Great escapes and some wounds from lobbing round-shot already. W. H. Russell, Diary in India, I. 268.

lob[2] (lob), v.; pret. and pp. lobbed, ppr. lobbing. [Var. of lop[2].] I. intrans. To hang down; drop or droop.

II. trans. To hang wearily or languidly; allow to drop or droop.

And their poor jades Lob down their heads. Shak., Hen. V., iv. 2. 47.

lobar (lō'bär), a. [< lobe + -ar[2].] Of or pertaining to a lobe, as of the brain or lungs: as, lobar emphysema.

In the cases of lobar and of lobular pneumonia that I have examined, none of the arines have turned red.
Lancet, No. 3427, p. 880.

Lobar pneumonia. See pneumonia.

Lobata (lō-bā'tä), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of lobatus, lobed: see lobate.] A division, ordinal or subordinal, of the class or order Ctenophora, including those comb-bearing hydroids or ctenophorans which have a pair of oral lobes: distinguished from Tæniata and Saccata. The Lobata are composed of such forms as Eurhamphæa, Bolina, Mnemia, Calymma, and Ocyroë.

Lobate Ctenophoran (Eurhamphæa vexilligera).

lobate (lō'bāt), a. [< NL. lobatus, lobed, < lobus, a lobe: see lobe.] 1. Having a lobe or lobes; lobated; lobose; lobed; lobulate: as, a lobate leaf; a lobate fin or foot; a lobate rhizopod or ctenophoran.—2. Having the form of a lobe: as, a lobate part or process.—Lobate fin, in ichth. See the quotation.

The numerous dermal fin-rays [of Polypterus] . . . are connected with the rounded periphery of the broad and elongated disk formed by the skeleton of the fin; and the scaly integument is continued to the basis of the fin-rays, which thus seem to fringe a lobe of the integument. Hence the fin is said to be lobate.
Huxley, Anat. Vert., p. 126.

Lobate foot, in ornith., a bird's foot of which the toes are separately lobed, as in the coot, phalarope, or grebe.

lobated (lō'bā-ted), a. Same as lobate.

lobately (lō'bāt-li), adv. [< lobate + -ly[2].] In bot., in such a manner as to form lobes.—Lobately crenate, in bot., having crenatures or indentations so deep as to form a series of small lobes.

lobation (lō-bā'shon), n. [< lobate + -ion.] The formation of lobes; the act or process of forming or dividing into lobes; the state of being lobed.

Lobation is usually associated with semipalmation, as is well seen in the grebes. In the snipe-like phalaropes, lobation is present as a modification of a foot otherwise quite cursorial. The most emphatic cases of lobation are those in which each joint of the toes has its own flap.
Coues, Key to N. A. Birds, p. 181.

lobb (lob), n. See lob[1].

lobber (lob'ėr), v. i. Same as lopper[2]. [Local, U. S.]

lobbing† (lob'ing), n. [Verbal n. of lob[1], v.] Tumult; uproar.

What a lobbing makest thou,
With a twenty Devill!
Marriage of Witt and Wisdome (1579). (Halliwell.) lobbish†, a. [< lob[1] + -ish[1].] Clownish; lubberish.

Their lobbish guard, who all night had kept themselves awake with prating how valiant deeds they had done when they ran away, . . . awaked them.
Sir P. Sidney, Arcadia, iv.

lobby (lob'i), n.; pl. lobbies (-iz). [< OF. lobie,* < ML. lobia, lobium, laubia, a portico, covered way, gallery, < OHG. loubā, loupā, MHG. loube, G. laube, an arbor, < OHG. loub, MHG. loup, G. laub = E. leaf, q.v. Cf. lodge and louver, from the same source.] 1. An inclosed space surrounding or communicating with one or more apartments. (a) A small hall or waiting-room serving as the entrance into a principal apartment, where there is a considerable space between such apartment and a portico or vestibule; especially, such a hall or anteroom in a theater or adjacent to a legislative or audience chamber.

If you find him not within this month, you shall nose him as you go up the stairs into the lobby.
Shak., Hamlet, iv. 3. 39.

Go, busk about, and run thyself into the next great man's lobby. Wycherley, Plain Dealer, iii. 1.

(b) Naut., an apartment immediately before the captain's cabin.

2. Persons who occupy or resort to the lobby or the approaches to a legislative chamber for the purpose of transacting business with the members, and especially of influencing their official action or votes. [U. S.]

lobby (lob'i), v.; pret. and pp. lobbied, ppr. lobbying. [< lobby, n.] I. intrans. To frequent the lobby of a legislature or other deliberative body for the purpose of influencing the official action of members; solicit votes from members, whether in the lobby or elsewhere. [U. S.]

Lobbying should be made the object of incessant war and corrective enactment, until it is driven from legislative halls. N. A. Rev., CXL. 311.

II. trans. To promote or carry by solicitation of legislative favor or votes: as, to lobby a measure through Congress. [U. S.]

lobbyist (lob'i-ist), n. [< lobby + -ist.] One who frequents the lobby or the precincts of a legislature or other deliberative assembly, with the view of influencing the votes of members. [U. S.]

But the arrangements of the committee system have produced and sustain the class of professional lobbyists, men, and women too, who make it their business to "see" members and procure, by persuasion, importunity, or the use of inducements, the passing of bills, public as well as private, which involve gain to their promoters.
J. Bryce, American Commonwealth, I. 156.

lobby-member (lob'i-mem″bėr), n. A lobbyist; one who makes a business of influencing the action or votes of a legislature. [U. S.]

lob-coat†, n. Same as lobcock.

Cares not a groate
For such a lob-coate.
The Wit of a Woman (1604). (Nares.)

lobcock† (lob'kok), n. [< lob[1] + cock[1], used as a diminutive.] A stupid, sluggish, inactive person; a lob.

Such a calfe, such an asse, such a blocke, . . . such a lobcocke. Udall, Roister Doister, iii. 3.

lob-dotterel† (lob'dot″ėr-el), n. A loutish fool.

Grouthead gnat-snappers, lob-dotterels, gaping changelings. Urquhart, tr. of Rabelais, i. 25.

★lobe (lōb), n. [< F. lobe = Sp. Pg. It. lobo, < NL. lobus, a lobe, < Gr. λοβός, the lobe of the ear or of the liver, the pod of a leguminous plant; prob. also λεπίς, a scale, husk, peel, λέπειν, peel: see lepis.] A rounded and more or less globular projection or part. (a) In anat., a large natural division of an organ, as of the liver, lungs, brain, etc.; also, the lower soft part of the ear; the lobule. Especially—(1) One of several definite and considerable parts of each half of the cerebrum, or each hemisphere of the brain, separated superficially by certain well-marked fissures or sulci. In ordinary language these lobes or major divisions are the frontal, parietal, and occipital, or the fore, middle, and hind divisions. But by carefully considering the course of the three great fissures of each hemisphere, namely the Sylvian, the Rolandic, and the parieto-occipital, we find these to demarcate four cerebral lobes, named frontal, parietal, temporosphenoidal, and occipital; and by considering the two main forks of the Sylvian fissure, a fifth lobe is recognizable, called the central lobe, insula, or island of Reil. Again, the frontal lobe is sometimes regarded as two; then six lobes are recognized by name, called prefrontal, postfrontal, parietal, temporal, occipital, and central (the last being the insula). These lobes only concern the topography of the surface of the cerebrum, and are in no way related to the fundamental segments or primitive divisions of the brain as a whole, being all of them parts of the prosencephalon alone. Lesser divisions of the lobes are called convolutions, gyres, or gyri. (2) In the cerebellum, a group or cluster of folia demarcated by unusually deep rimulæ or fissures.

Certain of the interfoliar crevices are so deep or so distinct as to warrant the recognition of the intervening groups of folia or lobes.

Buck's Handbook of Med. Sciences, p. 125.

(b) In bot., a rounded projection or division of a leaf, fruit, or other organ of a plant. (c) In zoöl., a projection or part which is imperfectly separated from another part: as, the lobes of the maxillæ in insects. (d) In mach., the larger or more prominent part of a cam-wheel.—Anterior lobe of the cerebellum, the anterosuperior lobe.—Anterior superior lobe of the cerebellum, the anterosuperior lobe.—Anterosuperior lobe of the cerebellum, the anterior portion of the upper surface of one or the other cerebellar hemisphere, divided into the anterior and posterior crescentic lobes. Also called quadrate or square lobe and lobus or lobulus quadrangularis.—Biventral lobe. Same as digastric lobe of the cerebellum.—Caudate lobe of the liver. See caudate.—Central lobe of the cerebellum, the anterior division of the superior vermis, behind the lingula and in front of the monticulus. Also called lobulus centralis.—Central lobe of the cerebrum. Same as insula.—Crescentic anterior and posterior lobe, the two divisions of the centerosuperior lobe of the cerebellum. Also called lobus or lobulus lunatus anterior and lobus or lobulus lunatus posterior.—Cuneate lobe, the cuneate gyrus, the triangular tract on the median surface of the occipital lobe of the cerebrum bounded by the parieto-occipital and calcarine fissures.—Digastric lobe of the cerebellum. See cerebellum.—Epigastric lobes. See epigastric.—Falciform lobe, the limbic lobe together with the lamina septilucidi; dentate convolution and fornix.—Frontal lobe of the carapace. See frontal.—Frontal lobe of the cerebrum, the anterior lobe of the cerebrum separated from the parietal by the fissure of Rolando, or central fissure.—Gastric, genital, hepatic, hypogastric, intermaxillary lobe. See the adjectives.—Inferior posterior lobe of the cerebellum. (a) The lobus semilunaris inferior. (b) The lobus semilunaris inferior together with the slender lobe.—Lateral lobes. See lateral.—Limbic lobe, the gyrus fornicatus and gyrus hippocampi taken together.—Marginal lobe, lobule, or gyrus, the convolution on the median surface of the cerebrum bounded below by the callosomarginal fissure. It is the median portion of the superior frontal convolution with the paracentral lobule.—Occipital lobe, the posterior portion of the cerebrum marked off from the parietal lobe by the parieto-occipital fissure.—Olfactory lobe, that process of the cerebral hemispheres which consists of the olfactory tract, and the olfactory bulb in which it ends.—Orbital, procephalic, etc., lobe. See the adjectives.—Parietal lobe of the cerebrum, the middle lobe of the vault of the cerebrum, separated from the frontal by the central fissure and marked off from the occipital by the parieto-occipital fissure. It is divided by the intraparietal fissure into a superior and an inferior parietal lobe.—Posterior superior lobe of the cerebellum, the posterosuperior lobe.—Posterosuperior lobe of the cerebellum, the posterior lobe of the upper surface of the cerebellum. Also called semilunar lobe or lobus semilunaris superior.—Quadrate lobe, the anterosuperior lobe of the cerebellum.—Quadrate lobe of the cerebrum, that part of the median surface of the cerebrum which lies between the parieto-occipital fissure and the posterior part of the callosomarginal fissure. Also called quadrate lobule and præcuneus.—Semilunar lobe, the posterosuperior lobe of the cerebellum.—Slender lobe, the lobe of the under surface of the cerebellar hemisphere which lies between the biventral lobe in front and the inferior semilunar lobe behind. Also called lobus or lobulus gracilis.—Square lobe, the anterosuperior lobe of the cerebellum.—Subpeduncular lobe. Same as flocculus, 2.—Temporosphenoidal lobe, the lobe of the cerebrum which occupies the middle cerebral fossa of the skull: it is separated from the frontal and parietal lobes by the fissure of Sylvius. Also called temporal lobe.—Uncinate lobe, the uncinate gyrus, the anterior hooked extremity of the hippocampal gyrus.

lobe-berry (lōb′ber″i), n. The fruit of the seaside grape, Coccolobis uvifera, of the West Indies.

lobed (lōbd), a. [< lobe + *-ed*².] Having a lobe or lobes; lobate; lobose; specifically, in bot., said of a leaf when the division extends not more than half-way to the middle, and either the sinuses or lobes are rounded; in entom., having a single lobe or lobe-like projection. Sometimes used, like lobate, to indicate a division into two or more lobes.—Lobed joint of an antenna, a joint expanded laterally at the apex into a lobe.—Lobed prosternum, a prosternum having an anterior rounded projection over the mouth.—Lobed prothorax, a prothorax having a posterior projection of the upper surface, between the elytra, often concealing the scutellum.

lobefoot (lōb′fůt), n.; pl. lobefoots or lobefeet (-fůts or -fēt). A lobe-footed bird or lobiped: as, the northern lobefoot, Lobipes hyperboreus. See Lobipes.

lobe-footed (lōb′fůt″ed), a. Having lobate feet; lobiped, as a coot, grebe, or phalarope.

lobelet (lōb′let), n. [< lobe + -let.] In anat., ★zoöl., and bot., a little lobe; a lobule.

Lobelia (lō-bē′liạ), n. [NL., named after Mathias de Lobel, a Fleming, botanist and physician to James I. of England.] 1. A genus of sympetalous plants, belonging to the family Goodeniaceæ, improperly called Scævola by many authors. See Scævola.—2. An untenable name for Rapuntium, a genus of plants of the family Campanulaceæ, distinguished by having the corolla-tube split down almost to the base, without a spur, and with a capsule which is two-valved at the summit. The plants are herbs, rarely shrubby, with alternate leaves, and irregular five-parted flowers either axillary or in racemes. There are about 225 species, widely distributed in warm and temperate regions. Numerous species are cultivated Cardinal-flower (Rapuntium cardinale).

1. Inflorescence. 2. Lower part of stem. a, flower; b, stamen-tube inclosing the pistil; c, pistil; d, upper part of the pistil and stamen-tube; e, transverse section of the fruit.

for the beauty of their flowers, which are usually blue, scarlet, or purple. Rapuntium cardinale is the cardinal-flower, and R. siphiliticum is sometimes called the blue cardinal-flower. (See cardinal-flower.) R. Dortmanna grows in the water of shallow lakes in northern Europe and America, and is called water-lobelia. R. coronopifolium is called buck's-horn on account of its forked leaves. R. Erinus of the Cape of Good Hope is the common little spreading lobelia of conservatories and gardens. R. splendens from Mexico is a conspicuous cultivated species. The officinal lobelia employed as an emetic is R. inflatum.

Lobeliaceæ (lō-bē-li-ā′sē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (A. L. de Jussieu, 1811), < Lobelia + -aceæ.] A group of dicotyledonous sympetalous plants, based on the Linnean aggregate Lobelia, usually given family rank, but regarded by Engler as a subfamily of the Campanulaceæ. In his system it includes 18 genera growing in nearly all but the frigid regions of the globe. Seven of the genera occur in North America. The plants of this group differ from those of the rest of the Campanulaceæ chiefly in their syngenesious flowers, which ally them to the Asteraceæ.

lobeliaceous (lō-bē-li-ā′shius), a. Pertaining to or resembling the Lobeliaceæ.

lobeliad (lō-bē′li-ad), n. [< Lobelia + -ad.] A plant of the family Lobeliaceæ. Lindley.

Lobelieæ (lō-bē-lī′ē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Presl, 1836), < Lobelia + -eæ.] A tribe of the Lobeliaceæ, characterized by an irregular corolla, and having the anthers joined in a tube about the style. They are principally herbs with alternate leaves and the flowers axillary or growing in racemes. In the system of Bentham and Hooker it includes 24 genera, found principally in tropical or subtropical climates. It is based on the Linnean aggregate Lobelia.

lobeline (lō′bē-lin), n. [< Lobelia + *-ine*².] A liquid poisonous alkaloid ($C_{18}H_{23}NO_2$) from Lobelia inflata (Rapuntium inflatum).

lobe-plate (lōb′plāt), n. Same as sole-plate.

lobi, n. Plural of lobus.

lobiole (lō′bi-ōl), n. [< NL. lobiolus, dim. of lobus, lobe: see lobe.] In bot., one of the small lobes into which the thallus of some lichens is divided.

lobiped (lō′bi-ped), a. and n. [< NL. lobipes (-ped-), < lobus, a lobe (see lobe), + L. pes (ped-) = Gr. πούς (ποδ-) = E. foot.] I. a. Lobe-footed, as a bird; having lobate feet.

II. n. A lobe-footed bird.

Lobipes (lō′bi-pēz), n. [NL.: see lobiped.] 1. A genus of phalaropes of the family Scolopacidæ, whose type is the northern phalarope, Lobipes hyperboreus; the lobefoots. Cuvier.—2. A genus of reptiles. Fitzinger, 1843.

loblolly (lob′lol-i), n. [< *lob*¹ + *lolly*².] 1†. A loutish or foolish person.

This lob-lollie with slauering lips would be making loue.
Breton, Grimello's Fortunes, p. 9. (Davies.)

2. Naut.: (a) Water-gruel or spoon-meat.

Whole grits boyled in water till they burst, and then mixt with butter and so eaten with spoons, which . . . seamen call simply by the name of loblolly.
Markham. (Halliwell.)

(b) Medicines collectively. Also written, erroneously, loplolly.

The roughness of the language used on board a man of war where he [Dr. Johnson] passed a week on a visit to Captain Knight, disgusted him terribly. He asked an officer what some place was called, and received for answer that it was where the loplolly man kept his loplolly: a reply he considered as disrespectful, gross and ignorant.
Mrs. Piozzi, Anec., p. 285 (Boswell's Johnson, ed. Hill, [i. 378]).

loblolly-bay (lob′lol-i-bā), n. The popular name of Lasianthus Lasianthus, of the family Theaceæ, an elegant ornamental tree of the southern United States. Also called tan-bay.

loblolly-boy (lob′lol-i-boi), n. Naut., a ship-surgeon's attendant, who compounds the medicines and assists the surgeon in his duties. In the United States navy called bayman or nurse.

I . . . suffered from the rude insults of the sailors and petty officers, among whom I was known by the name of Loblolly Boy. Smollett, Roderick Random, xxvii.

loblolly-pine (lob′lol-i-pīn), n. A tree, Pinus Tæda, growing in sterile soil in the southern Atlantic and Gulf States of North America. It yields fuel and inferior lumber, and to a small extent turpentine. It is also called old-field pine, and a better variety rosemary-pine.

loblolly-sweetwood (lob′lol-i-swēt″wůd), n. A tree, Dendropanax arboreus. [West Indies.]

loblolly-tree (lob′lol-i-trē), n. A tree of the genus Cupania, of the family Sapindaceæ, especially C. glabra; also a tree, Pisonia subcordata, of the family Nyctaginaceæ.

lobo (lō′bō), n. [Sp., a wolf, < L. lupus, a wolf: see wolf.] A large gray wolf of the southwestern United States, Canis occidentalis.

loboite (lō′bō-īt), n. [Named by Berzelius after the Chevalier Lobo da Silveira.] In mineral., a magnesian variety of vesuvianite or idocrase occurring in Norway.

Lobophora (lō-bof′ō-rạ), n. pl. Same as Marsupialida.

Lobosa (lō-bō′sạ), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of lobosus, lobose: see lobose.] An order of the class Rhizopoda, characterized by their shapelessness and the constant protrusion of lobose processes called pseudopodia; the normal amœboids or lobose protozoans: contrasted with Filosa. The order distinguishes the amœbiform protozoans from the Radiolaria, Heliozoa, Foraminifera, etc.

lobose (lō′bōs), a. [< NL. lobosus, < lobus, a lobe: see lobe.] Having many or large lobes; specifically, of or pertaining to the Lobosa: as, the lobose protozoans.

We have left a certain small number of independent lobose Gymnomyxa which it is most convenient to associate in a separate group. Encyc. Brit., XIX. 842.

Lobostomatinæ, Lobostominæ (lō-bō-stō-mạ-tī′nē, lō″bō-stō-mī′nē), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. λοβός, lobe, + στόμα (στοματ-), mouth, + -inæ.] A subfamily of bats of the family Phyllostomatidæ, having simple nostrils without nose-leaf, but the chin with leaf-like appendages, and having 2 incisors in each upper and lower half-jaw, and 2 premolars above and 3 below on each side. There are two genera, Chilomycteris and Mormops.

Lobotes (lō-bō′tēz), n. [NL. (Cuvier, 1829), so called with ref. to the soft parts of the dorsal, anal, and caudal fins, likened to one 3-lobed fin; < Gr. λοβός, a lobe: see lobe.] The typical genus of Lobotinæ, having bands of villiform teeth on the jaws, and an anterior series of larger conical teeth. L. surinamensis is the flasher or tripletail, a large fish, 2 or 3 feet long, found in all warm seas, and north on the Atlantic coast of the United States to Cape Cod.

Lobotidæ (lō-bot′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Lobotes + -idæ.] A family of sparoid fishes, typified by the genus Lobotes, having the vomer, palatines, and tongue toothless, the profile concave, the caudal fin convex, and the dorsal fin continuous. Also Lobotinæ, as a subfamily of Sparidæ.

lobret†, n. A Middle English form of lubber.

lobscouse (lob'skous), n. [Also lobscourse, lapscourse (the form lobscourse simulating lob's course, 'a lubber's dish'); prob. < lob[1], n., 4, + scouse, a general name on shipboard for a stew. Cf. loblolly, 2.] A dish made of pilot-biscuit, stewed in water with pieces of salt meat.

This genial banquet was entirely composed of seadishes; . . . the sides being furnished with a mess of that savoury composition known by the name of lob's course, and a plate of salmagundy. Smollett, Peregrine Pickle, ix.

lobsided (lob'sī″ded), a. Same as lopsided.

lobspound, lob's pound (lobz' pound), n. A pound for lobs or louts; a prison. "The term is still in use, and is often applied to the juvenile prison made for a child between the feet of a grown-up person." Halliwell.

He was the party
Found in Lob's pound.
Massinger, Duke of Milan, iii. 2.

Crowdero, whom, in irons bound,
Thou basely threw'st into Lob's pound.
S. Butler, Hudibras, I. iii. 910.

★lobster (lob'stėr), n. [Early mod. E. also lobstar, lopster; < ME. lopstere, loppester, loppister, a lobster, a stoat, < AS. loppestre, lopustre, lopystre, a lobster; cf. lopust, a locust, for locust*, < L. locusta, a shell-fish, lobster, also a locust: see locust[1].] 1. A marine, stalk-eyed, long-tailed, ten-footed crustacean of the subclass Podophthalma or Thoracostraca, order Decapoda, suborder Macrura, family Homaridæ, and genus Homarus, such as H. vulgaris of Europe or H. americanus of the Atlantic coast of North America. The lobster has two pairs of feelers, one pair short, the other remarkably long. The mouth-parts are modified legs, as in all crustaceans and other arthropods. The first pair of ambulatory legs are enormously and unsymmetrically enlarged and chelate, being the great so-called "claws." The other four pairs of legs are smaller and more strictly ambulatorial, ending in simple pincers or single hooks. The cephalothorax is a large soldered carapace. The abdomen or tail is long, jointed, and flexible, consisting of hard rings or segments on top and at the sides, and of a soft but tough membrane underneath, which bears the pleiopods, swimmerets, or swimming-feet; it ends in a set of shelly plates, the telson, spreading like a fan, used in swimming. The hairy flaps or processes attached to the roots of the walking-legs are the gills or breathing-organs. The female carries masses of eggs (the coral or berry) under the abdomen. The most fleshy parts are the muscles of the great claws and of the tail. The eyes are mounted on short movable stalks, the ophthalmites. Lobsters are carnivorous and predatory. They live chiefly on rocky sea-coasts. They molt or cast their shell periodically. The natural color is variously greenish, bluish, livid, etc.; the familiar bright-red color is due to boiling. The flesh is savory, and the lobster-industry is one of high economic importance.

Finallie of the legged kinde we have not manie, neither haue I seene anie more of this sort than the Polypus called in English the lobstar, crafish or creuis, and the crab.
Harrison, quoted in Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), ii. 97.

2. One of several other crustaceans resembling the above. The Norway lobster is Nephrops norvegicus, of the family Homaridæ. Various crawfishes of the family Astacidæ are sometimes called fresh-water lobsters. A related marine crustacean of the family Palinuridæ, Palinurus vulgaris, the sea-crawfish, is known as the spring lobster, rock-lobster, and spiny lobster.

3. The common sole, Solea Solea. [Prov. Eng.]—4. A stoat. [Prov. Eng.]—5. A British soldier: probably so called originally in allusion to his cuirass, but the name is now generally supposed to refer to his red coat.

The women . . . exclaim against lobsters and tatterdemalions, and defy 'em to prove 'twas ever known in any age or country in the world that a red-coat died for religion.
Tom Brown, Works, I. 73. (Davies.)

Bermuda lobster, a kind of shrimp, Palinurus americanus. It is used for bait.—Berry lobster, a female lobster carrying spawn. Such lobsters are not legally marketable, and should be returned to the water when taken.—Black lobster, a lobster whose shell is black, or at least darker than usual. This animal is always in good condition, with a very hard shell, and is preferred to those lighter-colored ones which have more recently shed their shells.—Chicken or grasshopper lobster, an undersized lobster, too small to be legally marketable. The laws of some States prohibit the sale of lobsters under 10 inches long.—Norway lobster, the Nephrops norvegicus. See Nephrops.—Spanish lobster, Scyllarus æquinoctialis, used as bait in the Bermudas.—Spiny lobster. See def. 2.—Stone-lobster, the short-armed hermit-crab, Eupagurus pollicaris: so called by fishermen.

lobster-car (lob'stėr-kär), n. A box or frame in which lobsters are kept alive under water awaiting sale or transport.

lobster-chum (lob'stėr-chum), n. Refuse of lobsters, used for manure.

lobster-claws (lob'stėr-klâz), n. A common marine alga, Polysiphonia elongata: so called from the long, cartilaginous, nearly naked branches, which bear tufts of filaments at the apex somewhat resembling the claws of the lobster.

lobster-crawl (lob'stėr-krâl), n. A place where lobsters crawl and may be caught; a fishing-ground for lobsters.

lobstering (lob'stėr-ing), n. [< lobster + -ing.] The taking of lobsters.

In many regions the men engage in lobstering only when other fisheries, which are more profitable to them, cannot be carried on. Fisheries of U. S., V. ii. 663.

lobsterize†, v. i. [< lobster + -ize.] To move backward, as a lobster is popularly supposed to do; crawfish.

Thou [Joshua] makest Riuers the most deafly deep
To lobstarize (back to their source to creep);
Walls giue thee way.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, ii., The Captaines.

lobster-louse (lob'stėr-lous), n. A parasite of the lobster, Nicothoë astaci, a siphonostomous crustacean of the family Ergasilidæ. See Nicothoë.

lobsterman (lob'stėr-man), n.; pl. lobstermen (-men). One who catches lobsters.

Some of the lobstermen, who are also boat fishermen, save the heads of the fish in cleaning their catch to use as bait. Fisheries of U. S., V. ii. 675.

lobster-moth (lob'stėr-môth), n. A common European moth, Stauropus fagi: so called from the grotesque shape of the caterpillar. See Stauropus.

lobster-pot (lob'stėr-pot), n. A pot or trap for lobsters. There are many patterns. The common house-pot is made of laths. The hand-pot is a circular iron hoop, as large as a hogshead-hoop, having under it a net and over it wooden bows, with bait hung in the middle. It has often taken six or eight lobsters at once.

lobster-tail (lob'stėr-tāl), n. Any piece of armor made à queue d'écrevisse. See crevisse.

The long lobster-tails which replaced the waist-piece and the tassettes.
Demmin, Arms and Armor (tr. by C. C. Black), p. 219.

lobster-tailed (lob'stėr-tāld), a. Resembling the shell of the lobster's tail: applied especially to armor composed of overlapping and sliding plates.

lobtail (lob'tāl), v. i. [Also loptail; < lob[1] + tail.] To sport or play, as a whale, by raising the flukes out of water and bringing them down again flat. [Sailors' slang.]

It passes on into the alveolar passage. Also called respiratory bronchial tube.—Lobular pneumonia. Same as bronchopneumonia.

Lobularia (lob-ū-lā'ri-ą), n. [NL., < lobulus, a lobule: see lobule.] Same as Alcyonium. Lamarck, 1816.

lobulate (lob'ū-lāt), a. [< lobule + -ate[1].] Consisting of lobules or small lobes; having small lobed divisions.

lobulated (lob'ū-lā-ted), a. [< lobulate + -ed[2].] Same as lobulate.

lobulation (lob-ū-lā'shon), n. [< lobule + -ation.] The formation of lobules; division into ★lobules: as, lobulation of the kidneys.

lobule (lob'ūl), n. [= F. lobule = Sp. lóbulo = Pg. It. lobulo, < NL. lobulus, dim. of lobus, a lobe: see lobe.] A little lobe; especially, one of the lesser divisions of the surface of the brain; a gyrus or convolution of the cerebrum, or a cluster of such gyri, of which there are several in each lobe, separated from one another by those lesser sulci or fissures which are called intralobular.—Cuneate lobule, the cuneus.—Fusiform lobule of the cerebrum, the subcollateral gyre.—Lingual lobule of the cerebrum, the subcalcarine gyre.—Lobule of the corpus striatum, lobule of the Sylvian fissure. Same as insula.—Lobule of the ear, the soft fleshy flap or lobe depending from the lower part of the external ear, highly characteristic of the human species.—Paracentral lobule, the posterior part of the marginal gyrus about the upper extremity of the central fissure. It is more or less distinctly marked off from the parts in front by a slight fissure.—Pneumogastric lobule. Same as ★flocculus, 2.

lobulus (lob'ū-lus), n.; pl. lobuli (-lī). [NL., dim. of lobus, a lobe: see lobe. Cf. lobule.] 1. In anat., any small lobe or lobe-like structure; a lobule.—2. In entom., one of the rounded and quite distinct segments of the base of the wing in the dipterous family Muscidæ and in some hymenopterous insects.—Lobulus caudatus, the tailed lobe of the liver, connecting the right lobe with the Spigelian lobe.—Lobulus centralis, the central lobule or lobe. See central.—Lobulus cuneatus, the wedge-shaped lobule of the brain, a mass of convolutions between the calcarine fissure and the parieto-occipital fissure.—Lobulus cuneiformis, the digastric lobe.—Lobulus gracilis, the slender lobe.—Lobulus lunatus, the crescentic lobe.—Lobulus paracentralis. See paracentral lobule, under lobule.—Lobulus præcuneus. Same as lobulus quadratus (a).—Lobulus quadrangularis. See anterosuperior lobe, under lobe.—Lobulus quadratus. (a) Of the brain, a mass of cerebral convolutions, approaching a square form, between the callosomarginal and the parieto-occipital fissure. (b) See anterosuperior lobe of the cerebellum, under lobe. (c) Of the liver, the square lobe of the liver on the under surface, between the fissure for the gall-bladder and the umbilical fissure.—Lobulus semilunaris inferior. See lobus semilunaris inferior, under lobus.—Lobulus semilunaris superior. See posterosuperior lobe, under lobe.—Lobulus Spigelii, the Spigelian lobe of the liver, at the back part of the under surface of the right lobe, between the fissure for the vena cava and that for the ductus venosus.—Lobulus triangularis, the cuneus.

★—Lobulus vagi, the flocculus.

lobus (lō'bus), n.; pl. lobi (-bī). [NL., < Gr. λοβός, a lobe: see lobe.] In anat. and zoöl., a lobe. Lobus biventer, lobus cuneiformis. Same as digastric lobe of the cerebellum (which see, under cerebellum).—Lobus centralis. (a) The insula. (b) See central lobe of the cerebellum, under lobe.—Lobus falciformis. See falciform lobe, under lobe.—Lobus gracilis. See slender lobe, under lobe.—Lobus limbicus. See limbic lobe, under lobe.—Lobus lunatus anterior. See crescentic anterior and posterior lobe, under lobe.—Lobus lunatus posterior. See crescentic anterior and posterior lobe, under lobe.—Lobus olfactorius. See olfactory lobe, under lobe.—Lobus paracentralis. See paracentral lobule, under lobule.—Lobus parietalis superior and inferior. See parietal lobe, under lobe.—Lobus quadrangularis. See anterosuperior lobe, under lobe.—Lobus quadratus. See quadrate lobe, under lobe.—Lobus semilunaris inferior, the posterior lobe on the under surface of the cerebellar hemispheres, lying behind the slender lobe.—Lobus semilunaris superior. See posterosuperior lobe, under lobe.

lobworm (lob'wėrm), n. [< ME. lobwyrme* (see quot.); < lob[1] + worm.] The lugworm. Also lob.

Loburyone [read lobwyrme], blake or wyghte snayle, limax. Prompt. Parv., p. 310.

loby†, n. and a. A Middle English form of ★looby.

local (lō'kal), a. and n. [< F. local = Sp. Pg. local = It. locale, < LL. localis, belonging to a place, < L. locus, a place: see locus.] I. a. 1. Relating to place or position in space; of or pertaining to situation or locality in general.—2. Of or pertaining to a particular place; relating to a particular place or to particular places, generally implying more than mere position or situation: as, local considerations; local knowledge; a local newspaper; a local item in a newspaper; also, limited to a certain spot or region; circumscribed: as, local laws, customs, or prejudices; a local disease or remedy.

The poet's eye, in a fine frenzy rolling,
Doth glance from heaven to earth, from earth to heaven,
And as imagination bodies forth
The forms of things unknown, the poet's pen Turns them to shapes, and gives to airy nothing
A local habitation and a name. Shak., M. N. D., v. 1. 17.

The spiritual force of Protestantism was a mere local militia, which might be useful in case of an invasion, but could not be sent abroad.
Macaulay, Von Ranke's Hist. of Popes.

Plants with sweet-scented flowers are, for the most part, more intensely local, more fastidious and idiosyncratic, than those without perfume.
J. Burroughs, Notes of a Walker.

3. In gram., relating to place or situation: as, a local adverb (as here, there, etc.).—4. In math., relating to or concerning a locus.—Chose local. See chose[2].—Local action. (a) In elect., the electrical action which is set up between different parts of a non-homogeneous plate of conducting material when it is immersed in an electrolyte. (b) In law, an action which must be brought in the particular country where the cause of action arose, such as an action to recover lands.—Local affection, in med., a disease or ailment confined to a particular part or organ, and not directly affecting the system.—Local allegiance. See allegiance, 1.—Local anemia. See anemia.—Local asphyxia. Same as Raynaud's disease (which see, under disease).—Local attraction. (a) In magnetism, attraction causing a compass-needle to deviate from its proper direction, exerted by objects in its immediate neighborhood, especially on shipboard. (b) In astron., attraction due to irregularities in the density or form of the earth's crust, which causes gravity at a station to deviate from its normal direction.—Local authority, in the English law of municipal corporations, a class of boards of trustees, commissioners, etc., having the supervision of some distinct department of municipal regulation, such as burial, sanitation, police, etc.—Local board, a board of officers whose powers are local; more specifically, in Eng. law, a board of officers elected by the rate-payers of a district to administer some part of the local affairs therein.—Local chancre. Same as chancroid.—Local circuit, in teleg., a circuit in a telegraph-station containing the recording or other receiving instrument and a battery, and also a delicate relay operated by the line-current, by means of which the signals are repeated in the local circuit, the recorder or sounder being operated by the battery in that circuit.—Local-circuit battery, a battery used in a local circuit.—Local color. See color.—Local court, a court whose jurisdiction is territorially limited to a comparatively small district, such as a single county, city, or town.—Local currents, currents due to local action; also, in teleg., currents in a local circuit.—Local degree, equation. See the nouns.—Local government, the regulation and administration of the local affairs of a city or district by the people of it, as distinguished from such regulation and administration by authority of the state or nation at large.—Local Government Act. (a) An English statute of 1858 (21 and 22 Vict., c. 98), relating to the public health and sanitary control, whose provisions take effect in particular places only when the act is adopted by the local authorities. It has been frequently amended. (b) An English statute of 1888 (51 and 52 Vict., c. 41), initiating a system for the local self-government of the various counties of England and Wales (or in some cases divisions of a county), and of a large number of boroughs (and in the case of London of a district consisting of parts of three counties), and organizing in each a government under the control of its people, for municipal purposes. Its chief feature is the transfer from departments of the imperial government, to a county council in each, of the regulation of local affairs, such as highways, health, education, etc. The scheme of reform begun with the act of 1888 was completed by the Local Government Act of 1894.—Local Government Board, a department of the English government under the act of Parliament of August, 1871 (34 and 35 Vict., c. 70), having supervision of the laws relating to the public health, the relief of the poor, registration of births, etc., and other matters of local government, including (under 35 and 36 Vict., c. 79) highways and turnpikes.—Local immunity. See immunity, 3.—Local improvements, improvements by public works, such as bridges, parks, etc., which benefit chiefly a particular locality rather than the state at large.—Local law. See statute.—Local legislation, local statute, such legislation or statute as is in terms applicable not to the state at large, but only to some district or locality and to the people therein. See legislation.—Local motion, motion in the ordinary sense of change of place; locomotion, as opposed to augmentation, diminution, and deformation.—Local option, the determination by vote of the people of a town or other minor political community as to whether or not any licenses to sell intoxicating liquors shall be granted: a principle of law established in some of the United States and advocated in others. The principle has also obtained recognition in England.—Local preacher. (a) In the Meth. Epis. Ch., one who is licensed to preach within a certain district, generally as an assistant to the pastor and as a candidate for ordination. (b) In England, a dissenting clergyman who preaches at different places. Halliwell.—Local probability, a branch of mathematics which considers the mean values of geometrical magnitudes conforming to certain conditions, and the like. For example, it is a proposition in local probability that if three points are taken at random within a triangle, the mean of the small triangle will be one twelfth that of the large one.—Local problem, a problem in which the thing sought is a geometrical locus.—Local proposition, in logic, a proposition consisting of two clauses united by a local adverb: as, "Where there is smoke there is fire."—Local sign, in psychol., something which is supposed to distinguish the impressions made upon one nerve-termination from those made upon another, and which serves especially to render possible, or to facilitate, the perception of objects as disposed in space. The theory of local signs was propounded by H. Lotze. See the quotation.

> Every impression of color—for example, red—produces on all places of the retina which it reaches the same sensation of redness. In addition to this, however, it produces on each of these different places, A, B, C, a certain accessory impression, a, b, c, which is independent of the nature of the color seen, and dependent merely on the nature of the place excited. This second local impression would therefore be associated with every impression of color r, in such manner that ra signifies a red that acts on the point A, rb signifies the same red in case it acts on the point B. These associated accessory impressions would, accordingly, render for the soul the clue by following which it transposes the same red, now to one, now to another spot, or simultaneously to different spots in the space intuited by it. . . . The foregoing is the theory of local signs. Lotze, Short Psychology (trans.).

Local space, an extended volume: opposed to a space of time.—Local time, time reckoned from the instant of transit of the mean sun (or, in the case of sidereal time, of the first point of Aries) over the local meridian.—Local value, the value pertaining to the place of a digit in the ordinary system of arithmetic.

II. n. 1. A local item in a newspaper. [U. S.] —2. In teleg.: (a) A local-circuit battery. (b) The circuit itself, including everything belonging to the current in an office or station except the line-wire and the instruments included in the line-circuit.

locale (lō-kal′), n. [< F. local, a locality: see local. The spelling is false, appar. in simulation of morale.] A place, spot, or locality; specifically, a site or scene, considered with reference to circumstances connected with it.

> But no matter—lay
> The locale where you may.
> Barham, Ingoldsby Legends, II. 227.

localisation, localise. See localization, localize.

localism (lō′kal-izm), n. [< local + -ism.] 1. The state or condition of being local or localized; limitation to a place or to a locality; also, the influence exerted by a locality.

> Some occult law of localism by which associated forms often become impressed with mutual resemblances. Nature, XXX. 228.

2. Attachment to a locality, or a peculiar limited phase of thought or feeling growing out of such attachment; provincialism; in general, any product of local influences: as, the localism of one's views or affections.

> Congress is simply an aggregate seething and struggling of a great number of localisms—rarely or never losing themselves in the stream of national or patriotic feeling. S. Bowles, in Merriam, II. 428.

3. A mode of speaking or acting peculiar to a place; a local idiom, phrase, or custom.

localistic (lō-ka-lis′tik), a. [< local + -istic.] 1. Relating or pertaining to localization; of localized character or quality.

> The confirmation of the localistic theory of cholera . . . can no longer be put in question. Pop. Sci. Mo., XX. 336.

2. Having the character of localism or a local-★ism.

locality (lō-kal′i-ti), n.; pl. localities (-tiz). [= F. localité = Sp. localidad = Pg. localidade = It. località, < LL. localita(t-)s, locality (as a quality of bodies), < localis, belonging to a place: see local.] 1. The condition of being in a place; position or situation in general; the immediate relation of an object to a place.

> Fond Fancy's eye,
> That inly gives locality and form
> To what she prizes best.
> W. Mason, English Garden, iii.

2. Any part of space; a situation; position; particularly, a geographical place or situation: as, a healthy locality; the locality of a mineral, plant, or animal. Compare habitat, 2.

> My first rambles, moreover, had a peculiar charm, which knowledge of locality has since taken away. Howells, Venetian Life, ii.

3. Legal restriction as to place or location.—4. In phren., the faculty to which is ascribed the power of remembering the details of places and the location of objects.—Absolute locality, that which belongs to a body irrespective of the locality of any other body.—Decree of locality. See decree.—Locality of a widow, in Scots law, the lands life-rented by a widow under her contract of marriage.—Relative or respective locality, the spatial relations of a body to other bodies.

localizable (lō′ka-lī-za-bl), a. [< localize + -able.] Capable of being localized, located, or fixed in or referred to a place.

> The feelings classed as emotions, which are not localizable in the bodily framework. H. Spencer, Data of Ethics, p. 78.

localization (lō″ka-lī-zā′shon), n. [< localize + -ation.] 1. The act of localizing, or the state of being localized.

> The contrast as to the centralization or localization of administrative power . . . between England and other civilized countries. Sir E. Creasy, Eng. Const., p. 332.

Specifically—2. The reference, in perception, of a stimulus to some part of the body (as the place where it is applied), or to some point in space outside of the body (as the position or place of origin of a perceived object).

> Perception as a psychological term has received various, though related, meanings for different writers. It is sometimes used for the recognition of a sensation or movement as distinct from its mere presentation, and thus is said to imply the more or less definite revival of certain residua or re-presentations of past experience which resembled the present. More frequently it is used as the equivalent of what has been otherwise called the "localization and projection" of sensations—that is to say, a sensation presented either as an affection of some part of our own body regarded as extended or as a state of some foreign body beyond it. J. Ward, Encyc. Brit., XX. 52.

Also spelled localisation.

Localization of cerebral functions, the mapping out of certain functional areas or centers upon the cerebral cortex. These centers appear to be of two kinds, sensorimotor and associational. The visual center occupies the occipital lobe; the auditory center, a portion of the temporal lobe; the center for touch and organic sensation (also termed the motor center), the Rolandic area and the gyrus fornicatus; the center for smell (and taste?), the gyrus uncinatus. The remaining areas (including the insula Reili) are, apparently, integrating or coördinating ★in function.

localize (lō′ka-līz), v. t.; pret. and pp. localized, ppr. localizing. [< local + -ize.] 1. To make local; fix in, or assign to or restrict to, a particular place; determine the locality or limit the extent of.

> Thus everywhere to truth Tradition clings,
> Or Fancy localizes Powers we love.
> Wordsworth, Fancy and Tradition.

Specifically—2. To refer (a stimulus) in perception to some point of the body or to some point in space outside of the body. See localization, 2.

> If we turn away our eyes, we cease to see the flame at which we have been looking, but the after-image remains and is projected upon the wall, and continues still localized in the dark field of sight even if we close our eyes altogether. J. Ward, Encyc. Brit., XX. 59.

Also spelled localise.

localizer (lō′ka-lī-zėr), n. [< localize + -er.] A small coil of definite resistance placed at each station of an electric fire-alarm system, which is brought into the circuit when the alarm is given, thus enabling the observer at the receiving-station to know the locality from which the alarm is sent.

locally (lō′ka-li), adv. With respect to place; ★in place: as, to be locally separated or distant.

locate (lō′kāt), v.; pret. and pp. located, ppr. locating. [< L. locatus, pp. of locare, place, put, set, let, etc., < locus, a place: see local. Cf. allocate, *allow*1, collocation, etc.] I. trans. 1. To fix in a place; establish in a particular spot or position; place; settle: as, to locate one's self in a certain town or street.

> She was already "of a certain age," and, despairing of a lover, accepted the good old country squire, and was located for the rest of her life as mistress of Lonstead Abbey. Farrar, Julian Home, p. 35.

2. To fix the place of; determine the situation or limits of: as, to locate the site of a building; to locate a tract of public land by surveying it and defining its boundaries; to locate a land-claim; to locate (lay out) the line of a railroad. [Chiefly U. S.]

> That your Majesty would grant to his petitioners, . . . by the name of the Mississippi Company, 2,500,000 acres of land . . . to be located between the thirty-eighth and forty-second degree of north latitude. Arthur Lee, Petition to King in Council (1768). (Bartlett.)

II. intrans. To reside; place one's self or be placed; adopt or form a fixed residence.

> Beneath whatever roof they locate, they disturb the peace of mind and happiness of some confiding female. Dickens, Pickwick, xviii.

★location (lō-kā′shon), n. [= F. location = Sp. locación = Pg. locação = It. locazione, < L. locatio(n-), a placing, < locare, pp. locatus, place: see locate.] 1. The act of placing or settling: as, the location of settlers in a new country.—2. Situation with respect to place; place.

> To say that the world is somewhere means no more than that it does exist; this, though a phrase borrowed from place, signifying only its existence, not location. Locke.

3. The act of fixing by survey, or otherwise determining, the site or bounds of a piece or tract of land (as under a claim for a specified quantity of public land), laying out the line of a railroad or canal, or the like. [Chiefly U. S.]—4. That which is located; a tract of land with boundaries designated or marked out. [U. S.]

> A location is held to be that quantity of mining ground which one person may legally acquire by location, in one body. Shinn, Land Laws of Mining Districts, p. 51.

> An odd corner of a great township such as they measure off in these wilds, where they take in, with some eligible locations of intervale land, miles also of pathless forest. Mrs. Whitney, Leslie Goldthwaite, vi.

5. In civil law, a leasing on rent.—Contract of location, a contract of hiring either of the use of a chattel or of services in respect to a chattel, the possession of the chattel being in either case transferred for the purpose. Where the possession and use of the thing is hired, the contract is called locatio rei or locatio-conductio rei. Where the possession is transferred to one whose service in respect to the thing is hired, as where goods are delivered to a carrier, the contract is called locatio operorum or locatio operis mercium vehendarum; or, if the service involves a resulting change in the thing, as where cloth is delivered to a tailor to make a garment, locatio operis faciendi.—De-★finitive location. See definitive.

locative (lok′a-tiv), a. and n. [= OF. locatif, < ML. locativus, < L. locare, place: see locate.] I. a. 1. In gram., indicating place, or the place where or wherein: as, a locative adjective; a locative case.—2. In anat. and zoöl., serving to locate or to indicate location or relative situation in a series. Thus, the name metencephalon or midbrain is locative of the part between extremes of a series.

> The advantages of locative names. Buck's Handbook of Med. Sciences, VIII. 517.

II. n. In gram., a case-form indicating location, as existing in the original Indo-European or Aryan language, and preserved in some of its descendants, especially the Sanskrit. In Latin and Greek it is not ordinarily recognized as a separate case, but is found in a number of isolated examples, and in the former language in the established use of certain case-forms (generally called genitives and ablatives) of names of places.—Locative absolute. See absolute, a., 11.

locator (lō′kā-tor), n. [< L. locator, one who lets, an undertaker, < locare, pp. locatus, place, let: see locate.] 1. One who locates land, or who settles upon land by claim of right or legal possession. [U. S.]

Here no locator encroaches upon his neighbor's claim.
The Century, XXV. 585.

2. In law, the hirer in a contract of location.

loc. cit. An abbreviation of the Latin loco citato, 'in the place (already) cited.' Sometimes further abbreviated l. c.

locellate (lō-sel'āt), a. [< locellus + -ate[1].] Divided into locelli.

locellus (lō-sel'us), n.; pl. locelli (-ī). [L., a little place, a compartment, dim. of loculus, a little place: see loculus.] In bot., a secondary cell, forming a subdivision of a loculus, whether in an anther or a seed-vessel.

loch[1] (loch), n. [< Gael. loch, a lake: see lake[1].] In Scotland, a lake in the general sense, or a lake-like body of water, as one of the narrow or partially landlocked arms of the sea, especially on the west coast, resembling the Norwegian fiords. In Ireland usually lough.

One burnish'd sheet of living gold,
Loch Katrine lay beneath him roll'd.
Scott, L. of the L., i. 14.

Kingsburgh conducted us in his boat across one of the lochs, as they call them, or arms of the sea, which flow in upon all the coasts of Sky. Boswell, Journal, p. 244.

loch[2] (lok), n. [Also lohoch; = F. lok, looch, look = Sp. loog = Pg. looch = It. loc, locco, < Ar. lo'oq, an electuary, a linctur, < la'aq, lick.] A linctur.

Lochaber ax. A battle-ax having a long handle or staff, used by the Scottish Highlanders. In the typical form the blade is narrow, but of great length in the direction of the shaft, and projects beyond the end of the shaft either in a long point or with a hook.

lochan (loch'an), n. [< Gael. lochan, dim. of loch, a lake: see loch[1].] A small loch; a pond. [Scotch.]

In Gr. myth., a surname of the goddess Artemis (Diana), as the protectress of women in childbirth.—2. [NL.] A genus of noctuid moths of the subfamily Cosmiinæ, based upon the Australian L. apicalis. Walker, 1865.

lochia[2] (lō'ki-ä), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. λόχια, evacuations following childbirth, neut. pl. of λόχιος, belonging to childbirth: see Lochia[1].] In med., the evacuations from the womb and vagina which follow childbirth.

lochial (lō'ki-al), a. [< lochia[2] + -al.] Of or pertaining to the lochia.

Lochites (lō-kī'tēz), n. [NL. (Foerster, 1856), < Gr. λοχίτης, a fellow-soldier, a comrade, one of the same company, < λόχος, a company, band of troops, prop. a party in ambush, lit. a lying in wait, an ambush: see Lochia[1].] 1. A genus of parasitic Hymenoptera, of the chalcid subfamily Toryminæ. The species are parasitic upon gall-making Cynipidæ. Only European species have been described, although the genus is also represented in North America.

2. A genus of South American thamnophiline birds. Cabanis and Heine, 1857. Also called Nisius.—3. A genus of robber-flies of the family Asilidæ. Schiner, 1866.

loch-moulinet (lok'mö-li-nā'), n. A form of electric log in which a telephone is substituted for the indicator, and a species of mill-wheel for the screw. See electric log, under log[2].

loci, n. Plural of locus.

lock[1] (lok), n. [< ME. lok (pl. lokkes), < AS. loc, ✱a bolt, bar, fastening, inclosure, fold, close, ending, = OFries. lok = MLG. lok = OHG. loh, MHG. loch, an inclosure, prison, dungeon, concealed place, hole, aperture, G. loch, a dungeon, a hole, aperture, = Icel. lok, a cover, lid, a locker, an end, conclusion, = Sw. lock = Dan. laag, a lid, = Goth. ✱luk, in comp. usluk, an opening; cf. ME. loke, < AS. loca, m., a bolt, bar, inclosure, = OD. loke = Icel. loka, a lock, latch, fastening; from the orig. strong verb, AS. lūcan (pp. locen), etc., close, lock: see lock[1], v.] 1. Anything that fastens something else; specifically, an appliance for securing in position a door, gate, window, drawer, lid, etc., when closed, by means of a key, or of some secret contrivance requiring manipulation by one to whom it is known; hence, any device that prevents movement. The essential parts of an ordinary lock are a bolt, wards, tumbler, and a spring. The bolt is a bar which slides or catches in an opening made to receive it. The spring serves to maintain the bolt in one of two positions—that is, either extended or retracted—corresponding to locking and unlocking. The wards are strips of metal placed within the lock and designed to obstruct the passage of all keys except the one fitted to them. The tumbler is a pivoted bar, or other device, used to hold the bolt in one position, and intended to render it difficult to operate the lock except by the right key. Locks are made in a great variety of styles and shapes, and for many different positions and uses. The security of locks in general depends on the number of impediments or wards that are interposed between the key and the bolt which secures the door.

Tumbler-lock.
The bolt has two square notches, a, a, in its upper edge; b, tumbler, pivoted at one end, and having a projecting stump, c, at the other, which falls into one of the notches, according to the position of the bolt.

A cap-case for your linnen and your plate,
With a strange lock, that opens with Amen.
Fletcher (and another), Noble Gentleman, v.

2. A forelock; a cotter or key. E. H. Knight.—3. In firearms, a piece of mechanism which explodes the charge. This is effected either by striking a sharp blow which explodes a fulminating powder or strikes sparks from a flint, etc., or by communicating fire directly to the priming, as in the old match-lock.

4. A form of brake or drag for the wheels of a vehicle, used to prevent them from turning in descending steep hills; a lock-chain or skid-chain.—5. The swerving to the right or left of the fore-carriage, deviating from the line of direction of the hind wheels and the trend of the carriages proper. It is called the haw or gee lock respectively, according as it is to the left or right of the driver. E. H. Knight.—6. In plastering, the projection of the plaster, cement, etc., behind the laths, which serves to prevent it from scaling off.—7. A place shut in or locked up; an inclosure; a lockup.

Shuts up th' unwieldy centaur in the lock. Dryden.

8. A barrier to confine the water of a stream or canal; an inclosure in a canal, with gates at each end, used in raising or lowering boats as they pass from one level to another. When a vessel is descending, water is let into the chamber of the lock till it is on a level with the higher water, and thus permits the vessel to enter; the upper gates are then closed, and, the lower gates being gradually opened, the water in the lock falls to the level of the low water, and the vessel passes out. In ascending, the operation is reversed. See cut under canal-lock.

9. A fastening together; a closing of one thing upon another; a state of being fixed or immovable; also, a grapple in wrestling; a hug.

All Albemarle Street closed by a lock of carriages.
De Quincey.

They must be practised in all the locks and gripes of wrestling, as need may often be in fight to tug or grapple, and to close. Milton, Education.

Bramah lock [named from its inventor, Joseph Bramah of London (1749–1814)], a form of bank-lock. Its chief characteristic is a series of sliding tumblers, notched at different parts of their length, the raising of which by a key having a bit shaped in correspondence with the notches releases the lock-bolt and leaves it free to move in locking or unlocking.—Burglar-alarm lock. See burglar-alarm.—Chain-lock, a form of seal-lock.—Chain of locks. See chain.—Combination-lock, a bank- or safe-lock, the principal features of which are the following: Two or more disks, each with a similar notch in its periphery, are mounted upon a spindle, which, in locking or unlocking the safe, is turned by a knob. One disk and an exterior dial-plate are fastened to the spindle; the other disks turn on the spindle. The disks are separated by intervening washers or collars, and each has a pin projecting from its flat face laterally toward the adjacent disk. The pins are arranged in relation with the dial and the peripheral notches in such manner that in turning the spindle, according to a given system or combination, first in one direction and then in the other, to make certain letters or numbers on the dial successively coincide with a mark on a ring which circumscribes the dial, the peripheral notches in the disks are, by the successive engagement with each other of the laterally projecting pins, brought into line with each other. When this is done, the obstructing mechanism which has previously held the bolt falls into the alined notches, and the bolt is left free to move as may be desired. The positions of the disks, and consequently of the pins, may be changed at will to correspond with the different figures or letters on the dial: this is called changing the combination. The number of such changes is only limited by the law of permutation as applied to the number of disks and the number of letters or figures on the dial. Such a lock may have two systems of dials, spindles, and disks, each controlling the one bolt of the lock, and each of which may be set on a different combination. In this way, as a measure of greater security, it may be arranged that the presence of two persons (each knowing only one combination) may be needed to operate the lock. Also called permutation-lock.—Dead lock. (a) A lock the bolt of which can be turned in either direction by a key, as distinguished from one in which the spring throws the bolt in one direction only, as in a spring-lock. (b) See dead-lock.—Dormant lock, a lock the bolt of which does not close automatically.—Double lock, in a canal, two single locks of equal capacity arranged side by side, and connected, one with the other, by a sluice with a gate. Water flowing from either, when full, may be made by the sluice to enter the other till the same level is reached in both. The sluice being then closed, and the lower lock-gates opened in the lock it is desired to empty, the remainder of the water flows out into the lower pound of the canal. Thus, while one lock is emptying, one half its water may be used to half fill the other. Therefore only one half the water taken from the upper pound of the canal, required in locking a given number of boats through a single lock, is needed when a double lock is used.—Draw-bolt lock, a lock the bolt of which can be drawn by means of a knob, except when it is locked with a key.—Lock of water, the measure equal to the contents of the chamber of the locks by which the consumption of water on a canal is estimated.—Lock, stock, and barrel, the whole gun; hence, the whole of anything.

Take it all in all, it is rotten; lock, stock, and barrel, there is not an inch of it sound.
T. Benton, Speech on the National Bank.

Permutation-lock, a lock in which the moving parts are capable of transposition, so that, being arranged in any concerted order, it becomes necessary before the bolt can be shot to bring the tumblers into that order. E. H. Knight.—Pin-tumbler lock, a lock in which the tumblers have the form of pins or short rods, which slide in one direction in holes or ways by their own gravity or by the action of springs, and in the opposite direction by the action of the key when the latter is pushed into the lock. The "Yale" lock is of this variety.—Puzzle-lock, a more or less simple form of lock constructed on the combination principle and used as a puzzle, the solution consisting in finding the combination which locks or unlocks it. The greater the complexity of the lock, the more difficult is the solution of the puzzle. See combination-lock.—Rebounding lock, a gun-lock provided with a device whereby the hammer of the lock, after striking the nipple, is immediately thrown back into the half-cock position.—Reversible lock, a lock of which the latch-bolt may be turned over, so as to cause the beveled side to face in either direction, thus allowing the application of the lock indifferently to either side of a door.—Roman lock, a lock having a simple bolt with a binder-spring to hold the bolt in any position in which it is placed, until a force is applied strong enough to overcome the spring.—Rural lock, a cheap kind of lock with a wooden case. E. H. Knight.—Scandinavian lock, a form of lock for fastening hasps upon staples. Both arms of the bow are withdrawn from the lock when it is opened.—Seal-lock, a lock which, when locked, cannot be opened without breaking a seal, thus indicating whether it has or has not been tampered with: used for freight-cars, mail-bags, express companies' inclosures, custom-house purposes, etc. One of the most effective seal-locks has means for attaching a small square of variegated glass over the keyhole in such a manner that the square cannot be removed except by breaking. A photograph of the glass seal previously taken is a complete check on any attempt to substitute another for it, as the pattern of streak and color in each seal is entirely fortuitous, and different from any other.—Time-lock, a lock in which, when locked, the bolt is held by a stop-plate or other detaining device so that it cannot be unlocked before the expiration of a given time. The stop is controlled by clockwork in such manner that it disengages the bolt only at the time for which it has been previously adjusted by mechanism analogous to that of an alarm-clock.—To be at lock, to be in a difficulty. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]—Yale lock, a safety-lock in which is used, in place of wards, a special form of pin tumbler admitting of a great variety of combinations, so that the chance of opening the lock except with the right key is rendered very small. The key is flat or corrugated in longitudinal lines, and the key-opening in the lock is very small, to guard against the use of false keys or the blowing in of powder for exploding the lock. (See also case-lock, check-lock.) lock[1] (lok), v. [< ME. locken, lokken (= Icel. loka, also lykja = Sw. lycka = Dan. lukke), lock; a secondary form, after the noun lock, taking the place, in mod. E., of the orig. strong verb remaining in the E. dial. louk, < ME. louken, lowken (pret. lec, pl. luken, pp. loken), < AS. lūcan (pret. leác, pl. lucon, pp. locen), shut, close, fasten (also in comp. a-lūcan, separate, belūcan, ge-lūcan, shut, fasten, onlūcan, unlūcan, unlock, tō-lūcan, unlock), = OS. lūkan (in comp. bi-lūkan, lock, ant-lūkan, unlock) = OFries. lūka, luika, lōka = D. luiken = OHG. lūkhan, MHG. lūchen = Icel. lūka, shut, close, = Goth. ✱lūkan, in comp. ga-lūkan, close, shut up, us-lūkan, unlock. Hence lock[1], n., locket, etc.] I. trans. 1. To close; shut; now, specifically, to close and fasten by means of a lock and key: as, to lock a door or a trunk.

They wanne with moche woo the walles withinne,
Mene lepen to anone and lokkeden the ȝates.
MS. Cott. Calig. A. ii., f. 115. (Halliwell.)

And went unto the dore
To enter in, but found it locked fast.
Spenser, F. Q., III. xii. 27.

Is there who, lock'd from ink and paper, scrawls
With desperate charcoal round his darken'd walls?
Pope, Prol. to Satires, l. 19.

10. To enable to pass through a lock, as in a canal. See lock[1], n., 8.

Vessels are locked down from the sea into the [North Holland] canal. Encyc. Brit., IV. 788.

Locked jaw. Same as lockjaw.—To lock out, to close the gates or doors against; specifically, in labor-disputes, to withdraw employment from (workmen or other employees in a body) as a means of coercion.—To lock up. (a) To close or fasten by or as if by locking: as, to lock up an empty or unoccupied house; to lock up a form of type (that is, to fasten it securely in a chase by driving up or tightening the quoins). (b) To confine; restrain or secure by locking or fastening in: as, to lock up a prisoner; to lock up silver. (c) To secure or place in such a position as not to be available for use: as, his money was locked up in unprofitable enterprises.

II. intrans. 1. To become fast; admit of being fastened or locked: as, the door will not lock.—2. To unite closely by mutual insertion of parts.

Either they lock into each other, or slip one upon another's surface. Boyle.

★lock[2] (lok), n. [< ME. lok (pl. lockes, lokkes), < AS. locc (pl. loccas), a lock of hair, = OS. locka = OFries. lok = D. lok = OHG. loc (pl. locchā), MHG. loc (pl. locke), G. locke, a curl or ringlet, = Icel. lokkr = Sw. lock = Dan. lok (not recorded in Goth.), a lock of hair; orig. perhaps 'a curl': cf. Icel. lykkr, a loop, bend, crook; Gr. λύγος, a pliant twig, λυγοῦν, λυγίζειν, bend, twist, λυγηρός, flexible.] 1. A tuft of hair or wool; anything resembling such a tuft; a tress; used absolutely in the plural, hair collectively.

With him ther was his sone, a yong Squyer, . . .
With lokkes crulle as they were leyd in presse.
Chaucer, Gen. Prol. to C. T., l. 81.

Chloe, those locks of raven hair—
Some people say you dye them black;
But that's a libel, I can swear,
For I know where you buy them black.
Greek Anthology, tr. by Lord Neaves.

Such long locks had she that with knee to chin
She might have wrapped and warmed her feet therein.
Swinburne, Two Dreams.

2. A tuft or small quantity, as of hay or some similar substance; a small quantity of anything; a handful; specifically, in Scots law, the perquisite of the servant in a mill, consisting of a quantity of meal, regulated by the custom of the mill.

For so good clothes ne're lay in stable
Upon a lock of hay.
Bp. Corbet, Journey into France.

I take it on me as a thing of mine office [of miller] to maintain my right of multure, lock, and goupen.
Scott Monastery, xiii.

What mean the gladness of the plain, lock-hook (lok'hůk), n. A metal hook to which a spring is attached to lock it so that it will not unfasten; a snap-hook. Lock-hooks are used on board vessels on the ends of the sheets of light sails, and for bending balloon-sails to stays in yachts.

Lock hospital. See hospital.

lock-house (lok'hous), n. A house in which a lock-keeper lives.

A red lock-house covered with creepers.
The Century, XXXVIII. 492.

Lockian (lok'i-an), a. and n. [< Locke (see def.) + -ian.] I. a. Of or pertaining to John Locke, one of the greatest of English metaphysicians (1632–1704). His chief work, the starting-point of modern philosophy, is "An Essay concerning Humane [Human] Understanding" (1690). He there takes the position—a novel one in his time, in the elaborate form in which he held it—that the theory of cognition must be the basis of philosophy; and he accordingly devotes this treatise to an inquiry "into the original, certainty, and extent of humane knowledge, together with the grounds and degrees of belief, opinion, and assent." In the first book he argues against the existence of innate ideas, and maintains that all knowledge is derived from experience, namely from sensation, the external, or reflection, the internal mode of experience. In the second book he undertakes a survey of all our elementary ideas, analyzing and criticizing each. He also treats of the origin of true and false ideas; and has an important chapter on the association of ideas, a phrase due to him. The third book analyzes the functions of language. The fourth treats of knowledge and probability. Every question of philosophy is touched upon in the course of the work. Leibnitz in 1704 wrote an extended running commentary of a hostile character on Locke's work, entitled "Nouveaux essais sur l'entendement humain."

II. n. A follower of John Locke. Also Lockist.

Lockianism (lok'i-an-izm), n. [< Lockian + -ism.] The philosophical doctrines of John Locke.

The Treatise is a reductio ad absurdum of the principles of Lockianism. Encyc. Brit., XXI. 383.

lockin gowan. See gowan.

locking-pallet (lok'ing-pal″et), n. In chronometers and watches having the detached escapement, a tooth, usually a jewel, of the detent which engages successively the teeth of the scape-wheel, the detent being caused to disengage by the action of the balance, and to reëngage the next tooth by the action of a spring.

locking-plate (lok'ing-plāt), n. 1. In a vehicle, the wear-iron or guard placed on the perch to prevent injury from the forward wheels in turning short; a rub-plate. In a gun-carriage it is a thin flat piece of iron nailed on the sides to prevent the wood from wearing away, and serving as a point of attachment for the locking-chain.
2. A nut-lock.—3. In a clock, the count-wheel or notched disk which controls the number of strokes of the striking mechanism.

Lockist (lok'ist), n. [< Locke (see def. of Lockian) + -ist.] Same as Lockian.

lockjaw (lok'jâ), n. In pathol., tetanus; trismus. See tetanus.

lock-keeper (lok'kē″pėr), n. 1. One who tends a lock on a canal or stream.—2. The box on a door-jamb into which the bolt of a lock protrudes when shot. Car-Builder's Dict.

lock-lanyard (lok'lan″yärd), n. See lanyard, 1 (b).

lockman (lok'man), n.; pl. lockmen (-men). 1†. A public executioner: so called because one of his dues was a lock or ladleful of meal from every caskful exposed for sale in the market. Imp. Dict.—2. An officer in the Isle of Man who executes the orders of the governor, much like an under-sheriff.

The Constable, Coroners, or Lockman [Guilley-gliash, an officer answering to a constable in England, whose business it is to serve summonses, etc.] of such other Parish is for the first Time to warne and require such Beggars back to their own Parish.
Statute of 1664, quoted in Ribton-Turner's Vagrants and Vagrancy, p. 446.

lock-nail (lok'nāl), n. Same as hammer-nail.

lock-nut (lok'nut), n. A supplementary nut screwed down upon another to prevent it from shaking loose; a jam-nut, check-nut, or pinch-nut. E. H. Knight. Compare nut-lock.

lockout (lok'out), n. The act of excluding a person or persons from a place by locking it up; the condition of such exclusion. Specifically—(a) The exclusion of a teacher by his pupils, in sport or rebellion, or of pupils by their teacher, by way of discipline. (b) A refusal on the part of an employer to furnish work to his employees in a body, intended as a means of coercion. See strike.

When capitalists refuse to grant so large a proportion of the product for labor as the laborers have heretofore received, and will not continue to supply capital on any terms which laborers will accept, the result is a lockout.
N. A. Rev., CXLIII. 319.

lock-paddle (lok'pad″l), n. A small sluice that serves to fill or empty a lock.

lock-piece (lok'pēs), n. 1. In mining, a piece of timber used in supporting the workings.—2. In gun., a lug for the attachment of a gun-lock, formed on the rear part of the barrel, near the vent, in guns of the older varieties.

lock-plate (lok'plāt), n. The metal plate on the side of a small-arm which supports the mechanism of the lock and protects it from dust and injury.

lock-pulley (lok′půl″i), n. A pair of pulleys so made that they can rotate separately or together, as desired, by means of a pin in one of them which locks into a hole in the face of the other.

lock-rail (lok′rāl), n. 1. The middle transverse rail of a door, at about the level of the hand, on or in which the lock is generally set. —2. In some door-frames, a crosspiece dividing the doorway from an open space above it in which a glazed sash is usually placed; a transom.

lockram (lok′ram), n. and a. [Also lockrum, formerly also lockeram, early mod. E. lokeram; < F. locrenan, a kind of unbleached linen, so called from the place where it was made, Locrenan, in Brittany, < Bret. Lok-Ronan, lit. cell of (St.) Ronan, < lok, cell, + Ronan, Ronan. For the sense 'nonsense,' cf. similar uses of buckram, bombast, fustian.] I. n. 1. A kind of linen, usually of a coarse and cheap sort.

Lokeram for shetes and smockes and shirtes.
Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, Appendix A.

Edge me the sleeves with Coventry blue, and let the linings be of ten-penny lockeram. Greene, James IV.

Why should I bend to her?—is it because her kirtle is of silk, and mine of blue lockeram? Scott, Abbot, ii.

2. Nonsense; gibberish. [Prov. Eng. and U. S.]

II. a. 1. Of lockram.

Thou thoughtst, because I did weare Lockram shirts Ide no wit. Glapthorne, Wit in a Constable, iv. 1.

2. Talking gibberish.

After he'd made a little Pause,
Again he stretch'd his Lockrum Jaws.
Edward Ward, Hudibras Redivivus (1707), I. ix.

lock-saw (lok′sâ), n. A compass-saw with a tapering flexible blade, used for cutting in doors the seats for locks.

lock-sill (lok′sil), n. In hydraul. engin., same as clap-sill.

locksman (loks′man), n.; pl. locksmen (-men). A person who has the care of locks and keys; a turnkey.

Who would have said the young sprightly George Douglas would have been contented to play the locksman here in Lochleven, with no gayer amusement than that of turning the key on two or three helpless women?
Scott, Abbot, xxiii.

locksmith (lok′smith), n. [< ME. loksmythe; < lock[1] + smith.] An artificer whose occupation is to make locks.

The king [Louis XVI.] worked at the locksmith's trade, designed maps, or passed whole days in hunting.
Duruy, History of France, p. 524.

locksmithery (lok′smith-ėr-i), n. The art or trade of lock-making.

lock-spit (lok′spit), n. A small cut with a spade, or a trench opened with a spade or a plow, to mark out a line of work, as in fencing, railway-engineering, or the like. [Eng.]

lock-spitting (lok′spit″ing), n. The act of making a lock-spit. [Eng.]

Sets out the circuit with a plough, which we call lock-spitting. Ogilby's Virgil (1668), p. 313. (Nares.) lock-step (lok′step), n. A marching-step, executed by several men arranged in as close file as possible, in which each person follows exactly the step of the person before him. When prisoners march in this manner the hands of every man after the first are placed on the shoulders of the one in front of him.

lock-stitch (lok′stich), n. and a. I. n. A stitch, made by some sewing-machines, in which a thread is passed, while in the fabric, through a loop formed in another thread and then drawn tight or locked.

II. a. 1. Produced by means of this stitch, as a seam.—2. Producing this stitch.

lock-string (lok′string), n. A cord so attached to the hammer of the lock of a cannon that by pulling it the hammer is made to strike on a percussion primer and so fire the gun.

lock-tool (lok′tōl), n. A cramp used in putting together the parts of a gun-lock.

lock-tortoise (lok′tôr″tis), n. Same as box-tortoise.

lockup (lok′up), n. 1. The act of locking up, or the state of being locked up. See to lock up, under lock[1], v. t.

To be indifferent in the presence of a lock-up of eight per cent. of the money in circulation within a year is simply a confession of ignorance of the principles of monetary science. New Princeton Rev., V. 86.

2. A room or place in which persons under arrest are temporarily confined.

Who oft, when we our house lock up, carouse
With tippling tipstaves in a lock-up house.
H. and J. Smith, Rejected Addresses, xvii.

lock-weir (lok′wār), n. See weir.

lockwork (lok′wėrk), n. The machinery or parts of a lock. [Rare.]

M. Francotte, of Liége, has recently manufactured the Martini breech-action in such a manner that the lockwork may be easily removed for cleaning without the use of any tools. W. W. Greener, The Gun, p. 144.

locky (lok′i), a. [< lock[2] + -y[1].] Having locks or tufts. Sherwood. [Rare.]

lockyer† (lok′yėr), n. [< ME. lokyer; < lock[1] + -yer, -ier[1]. The name remains in the surname ★Lockyer.] A locksmith.

loco (lō′kō), n. [Short for loco-weed.] 1. Same as loco-weed.—2. A disease of animals resulting from eating loco-weeds. The brain of the animal is affected; it commonly loses both flesh and strength, and ★death ensues, though not necessarily soon. See loco-weed.

loco (lō′kō), v. t. [< loco, n.] To poison with the loco-weed or crazy-weed. [Western U. S.]

We referred to a curious affection which exists among horses in north-western Texas, known as "grass-staggers," which is caused by eating the "loco-weed," which gives rise to the saying that the horses are locoed.
Science, XIII. 176.

lococession (lō-kō-sesh′on), n. [< L. locus, a place, + cessio(n-), a yielding: see locus and cession.] The act of giving place. [Rare.]

loco citato (lō′kō si-tā′tō). [L.: loco, abl. of locus, place; citato, abl. of citatus, pp. of citare, cite: see locus and cite.] In the place (previously) cited. Generally abbreviated loc. cit. or l. c.

locodescriptive (lō″kō-dē-skrip′tiv), a. [< L. locus, a place, + E. descriptive.] Describing a particular place or places. Maunder. [Rare.]

loco-disease (lō″kō-di-zēz′), n. A disease of horses resulting from eating the loco-weed or crazy-weed. Also called grass-staggers. See loco, v. t. [Western U. S.]

locofoco (lō-kō-fō′kō), n. [A manufactured term, ignorantly made in 1834 on the model of locomotive, a word just then becoming familiar, and supposed by the inventor of the word locofoco to mean 'self-moving,' whence locofoco, intended to mean 'self-lighting,' < L. locus, place, + focus, a hearth (ML. a fire): see locus and focus.] 1†. A kind of self-lighting cigar: so called in New York in 1834.—2†. A friction-match.—3. [cap.] In U. S. hist., one of the equal-rights or radical section of the Democratic party about 1835; by extension, in disparagement, any member of that party. The name was given in allusion to an incident which occurred at a tumultuous meeting of the Democratic party in Tammany Hall, New York, in 1835, when the radical faction, after their opponents had turned off the gas, relighted the room with candles by the aid of locofoco matches. The Locofoco faction soon disappeared, but the name was long used for the Democratic party in general by its opponents. Often in the abbreviated form Loco (pl. Locos).

Here's full particulars of the patriotic loco-foco movement yesterday, in which the whigs was so chawed up.
Dickens, Martin Chuzzlewit, xvi.

On the next day the "Courier and Enquirer" dubbed the equal rights party the loco-focos, and the name clung to them. W. G. Sumner, Andrew Jackson, p. 371.

locomotion (lō-kō-mō′shon), n. [= F. locomotion = Sp. locomoción = Pg. locomoção = It. locomozione, < L. locus, a place, + motio(n-), a moving: see locus and motion.] Movement from place to place; progressive motion, as of a living being or a vehicle; the act of moving from point to point; also, the capability of moving in this manner.

A clock, a mill, a lathe moves; but, as no change of the place of the machine is produced, such motion is not locomotion. Brand and Cox.

Every act of locomotion implies the expenditure of certain internal mechanical forces, adapted in amounts and directions to balance or out-balance certain external ones.
H. Spencer, Prin. of Biol., § 28.

The subjection of the whole civilized world to a single rule removed the chief obstacles to locomotion.
Lecky, European Morals, I. 247.

locomotive (lō-kō-mō′tiv), a. and n. [= D. lokomotief = G. locomotiv = Dan. Sw. lokomotiv = F. locomotif = Sp. Pg. It. locomotivo, a., locomotiva, n., < L. locus, a place, + ML. motivus, moving: see motive.] I. a. 1. Moving from place to place; changing place, or able to effect change of (its own) place: as, a locomotive animal.

The Spanish troops, . . . surrounded by their women and constantly increasing swarms of children, constituted a locomotive city of considerable population.
Motley, Dutch Republic, II. 543.

In one of the locomotive forms, as a medusa, the course taken, otherwise at random, can be described only as one which carries it towards the light, where degrees of light and darkness are present.
H. Spencer, Data of Ethics, § 26.

2. Having the power to produce motion, or to move (something else) from place to place: as, a locomotive organ of the body; a locomotive engine.—3. Of or pertaining to locomotion; locomotory.

I shall consider their motion, or locomotive faculty, whereby they convey themselves from place to place.
Derham, Physico-Theology, iv. 8.

Locomotive engine. See II.—Locomotive person, in zoöl., the nectocalyx of a hydroid polyp. Gegenbaur.—Locomotive power, any kind of moving power, but especially steam, applied to the transport of loads on land. See railway.—Locomotive pupa. See pupa.

II. n. A steam-engine which travels on wheels turned by its own power; specifically, an engine designed and adapted to travel on a railway; a railroad-engine. Locomotives designed to travel upon the ground or ordinary highways and to draw loads are more commonly called traction-engines; and those used upon common roads and designed to carry passengers are called steam-wagons or steam-carriages. (See traction-engine and steam-carriage.) American locomotives are distinguished from those constructed in other countries by the exterior position of the cylinders, the use of bar-frames, the use of bogies, a system of suspensions by means of equalizing levers, and certain minor features, such as the cow-catcher and single headlight. The essential parts of a locomotive are the boiler (usually long, horizontal, and of the "locomotive type" (see locomotive-boiler), with many tubes), the running-gear or wheel-system, and the engine proper, this being a double-cylinder, reversing, high-pressure motor, of which the exhaust-steam is thrown into the smoke-stack to urge the draft of the fire. The various wheel-systems employed have given rise to special types of locomotives. See passenger-locomotive, switching-locomotive, tank-locomotive, etc., below. See also cut under passenger-engine.—Back-truck locomotive, a locomotive having a truck with a pair of wheels under its rear end, as well as a truck in front of the driving-wheels. Such locomotives are used for sharp curves and steep grades.—Belgian-tank locomotive, a locomotive having a tank on each side of the boiler.—Compound locomotive, a form of locomotive in which is embodied the principle of the compound steam-engine.—Compressed-air locomotive, a locomotive which is driven by compressed air carried in strong tanks filled by compressors at stations. In some compressed-air locomotives the air is heated on its way to the cylinders, either by the direct application of heat or by the injection of steam. Such locomotives have not come into practical use.—Consolidation locomotive. See consolidation.—Double-ender locomotive, a locomotive which has the rear of the tender provided with a pilot, or cow-catcher, so that it may be run with either end in front. It has a two-wheel truck in front of the driving-wheels, the latter being usually two in number.—Double-piston locomotive, a locomotive each cylinder of which has two pistons with rods projecting from each end, and working on crank-pins set at 180 degrees from each other. Steam is admitted alternately to and exhausted from the space between the pistons and the spaces between the pistons and the cylinder-heads. The transmission of power from the piston-rods to the crank-pins is through cross-heads and connecting-rods, and, as the crank-pins are always moving and receiving their increments of power in opposite directions, a balancing of strains results. An attempt has been made to remove in this way some of the internal disturbing forces of the locomotive. The practical difficulties of the system have, however, been fatal to its extensive adoption. Also called double-cylinder locomotive.—Double-truck tank-locomotive, a locomotive which has two trucks, and carries boiler and tender on a single frame. The cylinders are attached to the truck that carries the boiler, the wheels of this truck being the driving-wheels. The other truck supports the tender. A common form has six coupled driving-wheels on the forward truck, and a six-wheeled truck at the rear under the tank. Called in the United States Mason's locomotive.—Fireless locomotive, a locomotive driven by steam generated from highly heated water carried in strongly constructed tanks. From such water, on a reduction of pressure upon it, saturated steam will be generated under the law of related pressure and temperature of saturated steam. The supply of heated water is provided and pumped into the tanks at stations, and the tanks are protected from rapid loss of heat by heat-insulating material.—Four-cylinder locomotive, a locomotive with four cylinders and two systems of driving-wheels. The four-cylinder locomotive known as Fairlie's has two boilers with a double fire-box between them, the two parts of the fire-box being separated by a water-leg, and the whole being carried on two center-pin trucks. Meyer's four-cylinder locomotive has a single boiler and fire-box, and the cylinders are located near the middle of the boiler.—Freight-locomotive, a locomotive for drawing freight-trains. Great tractive power at the sacrifice of speed is attained in freight-locomotives, through their adhesive weight, large cylinders, and driving-wheels small as compared with the driving-wheels of passenger-locomotives.—Geared locomotive, a locomotive in which the motion of the engine is conveyed by gearing to the traveling-wheels, as in many traction-engines and road-rollers. (E. H. Knight.) Geared locomotives having toothed driving-wheels, the teeth of which engage a rack, are used for steep grades in mountain railways.—Mine-locomotive, a locomotive for use in mines, and peculiarly constructed to adapt it to run successfully on slippery tracks. With great adhesive weight, it has also all its wheels coupled.—Mogul locomotive, a type of freight-engine with three coupled driving-wheels on each side, and a swinging two-wheeled truck in front. The front pair of drivers are made without a flange, to facilitate the passing of curves of short radius.—Passenger-locomotive, a locomotive for drawing passenger-cars. Speed is sought at the sacrifice of power in passenger-locomotives, the peculiar characteristics of which are large driving-wheels and engines having short strokes in comparison with the diameters of their pistons.—Saddle-tank locomotive, a locomotive which has its tank placed upon and extending downward over the sides of the boiler, after the manner of a saddle.—Street-locomotive, a locomotive adapted to use in public streets. It has a short wheel-base, powerful brakes, and mechanism for muffling the exhaust so as to render the latter noiseless. It is frequently combined with a passenger-car in one and the same vehicle.—Switching-locomotive, a freight-locomotive having the peculiarities of its class carried to an extreme point, to adapt it to the heavy work of starting and slowly moving heavy trains in switching at stations. Called in England shunting-engine.—Tank-locomotive, a locomotive permanently connected with its tender.—Ten-wheeled locomotive, a locomotive with six coupled driving-wheels ★and a four-wheeled truck in front of the driving-wheels.

locomotive-balance (lō-kō-mō′tiv-bal″ans), n. The spring used in place of a weight to control the safety-valve of a locomotive.

locomotive-boiler (lō-kō-mō′tiv-boi″lėr), n. A form of boiler in which the fire-box is surrounded by the water to be evaporated and is connected by a number of flues with the smoke-box under the chimney.

locomotive-car (lō-kō-mō′tiv-kär), n. A locomotive and a railway-carriage combined in one.

locomotiveness (lō-kō-mō′tiv-nes), n. Same as locomotivity.

locomotive-pump (lō-kō-mō′tiv-pump), n. The feed-pump which supplies water to the boiler of a locomotive.

locomotivity (lō″kō-mō-tiv′i-ti), n. [= F. locomotivité; as locomotive + -ity.] The power of locomotion; ability to change place. [Rare.]

> The most superb edifice that ever was conceived or constructed would not equal the smallest insect, blest with sight, feeling, and locomotivity. Bryan. (Latham.) locomotor (lō-kō-mō′tor), n. and a. [< NL. locomotor, < L. locus, place, + motor, a mover: see locus and motor. Cf. locomotion, locomotive.] I. n. One who or that which moves from place to place; anything that has or gives the power of locomotion. [Rare.]

> If the hue-and-cry were once up, they [kangaroos] would show as fair a pair of hind shifters as the expertest locomotors in the colony. Lamb, Elia, p. 182.

> The theory of compensation between electric locomotors working upon the same circuit was advanced several years ago by Werner Siemens. Elect. Rev. (Eng.), XXIV. 270.

II. a. In physiol., of or pertaining to locomotion; having the function of locomotion: as, a locomotor organ; a locomotor function.—Locomotor ataxia. See ataxia.

locomotorial (lō″kō-mō-tō′ri-al), a. [< locomotory, locomotorium, + -al.] Of or pertaining to the locomotorium, or to locomotion; locomotor. [Rare.]

locomotorium (lō″kō-mō-tō′ri-um), n.; pl. locomotoria (-ä). [NL., neut. of locomotorius, locomotory: see locomotor.] In biol., the motive apparatus or motor mechanism of the body, consisting of the muscles as the active agents of locomotion, and of the bones as the passive fulcrums and levers by which muscular power is applied.

locomotory (lō-kō-mō′tō-ri), a. [< NL. locomotorius, < locomotor, locomotor: see locomotor.] Pertaining to or concerned in locomotion; possessing the power of moving or of causing motion; locomotive.

loco-plant (lō′kō-plant), n. Same as loco-weed.

locorestive (lō-kō-res′tiv), a. [< L. locus, a place, + E. restive, q. v.] Staying in one place: a correlative of locomotive. [Humorous and rare.]

> Your locorestive and all your idle propensities, of course, have given way to the duties of providing for a family. Lamb, Correspondence (ed. 1870), p. 10. (Encyc. Dict.) loco-weed (lō′kō-wēd), n. [< Sp. loco, mad, crazy (of uncertain origin), + E. weed[1].] Any one of several leguminous plants reputed to produce loco-disease in animals. Among them are Astragalus mollissimus and A. Hornii, with several other species of the genus, and Aragallus Lambertii. No poisonous element has been satisfactorily determined. Also called crazy-weed.

Locrian (lō′kri-an), a. and n. [< L. Locri, < Gr. Λοκροί, a people in Greece, also a city, L. Locris, < Gr. Λοκρίς (> L. Locris), Locris, their country.] I. a. Pertaining to Locris in Greece, or to the city of Locri in Magna Græcia.—Locrian mode. See mode.

II. n. An inhabitant of Locris in Greece; specifically, one of those who occupied the three detached divisions of ancient Locris on the Malian and Eubœan gulfs and on the gulf of Corinth, called respectively the Epicnemidian and Opuntian Locrians and the Ozolian Locrians.

loculament (lok′ū-la-ment), n. [< L. loculamentum, a case, box, cell, < loculus, a cell: see loculus.] In bot., same as loculus.

loculamentum (lok″ū-la-men′tum), n.; pl. loculamenta (-tä). [L.: see loculament.] In bot., same as loculus.

locular (lok′ū-lär), a. [< LL. locularis, kept in boxes, < L. loculus, a box, cell: see loculus.] In bot., zoöl., and anat., having one or more loculi or cells: used chiefly in compounds, as unilocular, bilocular, etc.

loculate (lok′ū-lāt), a. [< loculus + -ate[1].] Having loculi or cells.

loculated (lok′ū-lā-ted), a. [< loculate + -ed[2].] Same as loculate.

locule (lok′ūl), n. [< L. loculus, a cell: see loculus.] A loculus or cell.

loculi, n. Plural of loculus.

loculicidal (lok′ū-li-sī″dal), a. [< L. loculus, a cell (see loculus), + cædere, cut.] In bot., dehiscing through the back of the loculus or cell of a seed-vessel—that is, by the dorsal suture of the carpel. Compare septicidal.

Loculicidal Dehiscence of the Fruit of Iris versicolor, showing the opening.

loculicidally (lok′ū-li-sī″dal-i), adv. In a loculicidal manner. Encyc. Brit., IV. 149.

loculose, loculous (lok′ū-lōs, -lus), a. [< L. loculosus, full of little cells, < loculus, a cell: see loculus.] In bot., zoöl., and anat., divided by internal partitions into loculi ★or cells.

loculus (lok′ū-lus), n.; pl. loculi (-lī). [L., a little place, a compartment, box, cell, dim. of locus, a place: see locus.] 1. A little place or space; a cell; a chamberlet; generally, in bot., anat., and zoöl., one of a number of small compartments or cells, separated from one another by septa, as in the tests of foraminifers; specifically, in corals, one of the spaces between the septa of the calcified cup or theca. Specifically, in bot.: (a) An anther-cell; the sac or theca containing the pollen. (b) The cell, or one of the cells, in a fruit, in which the seed is lodged. Compare locellus.

2. In ancient catacombs and tombs of some types, a small separate chamber or recess, for the reception of a body or of an urn, etc. When the body had been placed in the loculus the opening was closed with a slab of marble, or was otherwise built up. See cuts under cinerary and columbarium.—Archimedean loculus, a puzzle consisting of an ivory square cut into fourteen pieces, to be put together after having been taken apart.

locum-tenency (lō″kum-tē′nen-si), n. The office or employment of a locum-tenens; the holding of a place by temporary substitution. [Rare.]

> Wanted, by an M. B. and C. M., Edinburgh, an indoor assistancy or Locum Tenency. Lancet, No. 3410, p. 84 of Adv't's. locum-tenens (lō′kum-tē′nenz), n. [ML., < L. locum, acc. of locus, place, + tenens, ppr. of tenere, hold: see locus and tenant. Hence, through F., lieutenant.] One who holds the place of another; a deputy or temporary substitute.

locupletely† (lok′ū-plēt-li), adv. [< locuplete* (= OF. locuplet, < L. locuples (-plet-), rich in lands, rich, opulent, < locus, a place, + plere*, fill, plenus, full: see complete, etc.) + -ly[2].] Richly.

> Bedocumentized most locupleatly. ★ Nashe, Lenten Stuffe.

locus (lō′kus), n.; pl. loci (-sī). [< L. locus, OL. stlocus, a place. From L. locus are ult. E. local, locality, etc., lieu, lieutenant, etc., locate, allocate, allow[1], collocate, couch, dislocate, etc.] 1. A place; spot; locality.—2. In anat., some place, specifically named by a qualifying term.—3. In math., a curve considered as generated by a moving point, or a surface considered as generated by a moving line; the partly indeterminate position of a point subject to an equation or to two equations in analytical geometry; a curve considered as generated by its moving tangent or by a moving curve of which it is the envelop; any system of points, lines, or planes defined by general conditions, and, in general, partly indeterminate.—4. In optics, the figure formed by the foci of a set of pencils of converging or diverging rays; an optical image.—5. A place or passage in a writing; in the plural, a collection of passages, especially from the Scriptures or other ancient writings, methodically selected and arranged as bearing upon some special topic or topics of study; a catena; a book or work consisting of such a selection.—Congregation of loci. See congregation.—Cuspidal locus. See cuspidal.—Genius loci. See genius.—Geometric locus, a locus in sense 3, above.—Linear locus. See linear.—Locus cæruleus, a darkish tract extending upward from the fovea anterior on the floor of the fourth ventricle of the brain. It is caused by the substantia ferruginea.—Locus classicus (pl. loci classici), a standard passage, especially in an ancient author; a passage which exemplifies the meaning of a word or affords information with special clearness or fullness, or which is the principal or only original authority on a subject, and is accordingly regularly cited in books on that subject.—Locus delicti, in law, the place where an offense was committed.—Locus in quo, the place in which: a short phrase used in law, in actions of trespass, to designate the area of land upon which the trespass is alleged to have been committed: as, the locus in quo was part of an abandoned highway.—Locus niger, the substantia nigra (which see, under substantia).—Locus perforatus anticus, the anterior perforated space at the base of the brain, near the entrance of the Sylvian fissure.—Locus perforatus posticus, the postperforatus, or posterior brum, the posterior perforated space, or pons Tarini.—Locus pœnitentiæ, a point or space of time for repentance; in law, a point in a person's course at which it is not yet too late to change his legal position; the possibility of withdrawing from a contemplated obligation or wrong before being committed to it.—Locus sigilli, the place of the seal: a phrase (usually abbreviated to L. S.) used in making a copy of a sealed instrument, to indicate where a seal was affixed to the original, and in some of the United States allowed to be used as and instead of a common law-seal.—Locus standi (literally, place of standing), recognized place or position; specifically, in law, right of place in court; the right of a party to appear and be heard on a question before a tribunal.—Nodal locus, the locus of ★the nodes of a system of curves.

locust[1] (lō′kust), n. [< ME. locuste = F. locuste = Pg. It. locusta = AS. lopust, < L. locusta, a locust, a shell-fish. Cf. lobster, ult. from the same source.] 1. One of the orthopterous saltatorial insects of the family Acridiidæ, popularly known as grasshoppers, and more correctly called short-horned grasshoppers. Thus, Rocky Mountain locust is a common, popular, and book name of Caloptenus or Melanoplus spretus, also popularly known by its other name of the western or hateful grasshopper. Locusts, in this sense, are allied to the long-horned grasshoppers and the crickets, but differ from them in having shorter antennæ and bodies and limbs more robust. Their hind legs are large and strong, which gives them great power in leaping. Their mandibles and maxillæ are strong, sharp, and jagged, and their food consists of the leaves and green stalks of plants. They have colored elytra and large wings, disposed when at rest in straight folds. They fly well, but are often conveyed by winds to distances which they could not have attained by their own power. Their ravages are well known. Locusts are eaten in many countries, roasted or fried. They are often preserved in lime or dried in the sun. The most celebrated species is the migratory locust of the East, Pachytylus migratorius. It is about 2½ inches long, greenish, with brown wing-covers marked with black. Migratory locusts are most commonly found in Asia and Africa, where they frequently swarm in countless numbers, darkening the air in their excursions, and devouring every blade of the vegetation of the land they alight on.

Locust (Pachytylus migratorius), about half natural size.

2. An orthopterous saltatorial insect of the genus Locusta, family Locustidæ.—3. A homopterous insect of the genus Cicada, family Cicadidæ, such as the harvest-fly, Cicada tibicen, and the seventeen-year locust, or periodical cicada, Cicada septendecim. See cut under Cicadidæ. [U.S.]—4. A cockchafer; a beetle. [North. Eng.]—Bald locust, a locust of an undetermined species.

> And the bald locust after his kind. Lev. xi. 22.

Clumsy locust, Brachystola magna, a large flightless grasshopper, 2½ inches long, found in Kansas, Colorado, Wyoming, and other western parts of the United States. See Brachystola.—Green-striped locust, Tragocephala (or Chimærocephala) viridifasciata, a grasshopper of large size and showy coloration, occurring all through the United States and Canada.—Lobe-crested locust, an acridiid of the genus Tropidacris, which comprises some of the largest insects known, certain of the Central and South American forms having a wing-expanse of 8 or 9 inches. The only United States representative is T. dux, which occurs in Texas.—Red-thighed locust, Melanoplus femur-rubrum, a very common grasshopper in the United States, a near relative of the Rocky Mountain locust, but non-migratory, and slightly smaller and shorter-winged.—Rocky Mountain locust, Caloptenus (or Melanoplus) spretus, otherwise called hateful grasshopper, inhabiting permanently portions of Montana, Wyoming, and Idaho, and the adjoining British possessions, and migrating in immense swarms through several of the Western States and territories, doing incalculable damage. It is a little over an inch long, and of a grayish-green color, with wings which when closed reach some distance beyond the end of the abdomen. See cuts under Caloptenus.—Seventeen-year locust, the periodical cicada.

locust[1] (lō′kust), v. i. [< locust[1], n.] To devour and lay waste like locusts; ravage. [Rare.]

> This Philip and the black-faced swarms of Spain . . .
> Come locusting upon us, eat us up.
> Tennyson, Queen Mary, ii. 1.

locust[2] (lō′kust), n. ★1. A well-known tree of the United States, Robinia Pseudacacia, with thorny branches, delicate pinnate leaves, and dense clusters of white heavily scented flowers. The wood is heavy, hard, strong, and very durable, and useful for treenails, posts, turnery, etc. The tree is extensively planted for ornament, and also as a timber-tree. It suffers from attacks of the locust-borer. Also called black or yellow locust, and false or bastard acacia. The related R. Neo-Mexicana is also called locust. The locust-tree of Guiana and the West Indies is Hymenæa Courbaril. In the West Indies, Byrsonima coriacea and B. cinerea of the Malpighiaceæ are also called locust.

2. The carob-tree, Ceratonia Siliqua. See Ceratonia and carob.—3. The wood of the locust-tree.—4. A club or billy used by policemen: so called because commonly made of locust-wood. [Local, U. S.]—Bastard locust of the West Indies, Clethra tinifolia.—Bristly locust, or moss-locust, Robinia hispida, a shrub with pink flowers cultivated, from the Alleghanies.—Clammy locust, Robinia viscosa, a small tree with clammy branchlets and leaf-stalks, and larger flowers than the bristly locust, from the same region. (See also honey-locust and water-locust.)

Locusta (lō-kus'tạ), n. [L.: see locust[1].] 1. A genus of orthopterous insects founded by Linnæus (1748), made type of the Locustariæ of Latreille (1807). (a) The Locusta of Latreille is characterized by a slender form with long tegmina not ocellated in the male, the abdomen of the male ending in two long incurved processes, ample wings, and acuminate front. Locusta in this sense is strictly an Old World genus. (b) The Locusta of Leach (1817) corresponds to Latreille's Œdipoda, and belongs to the family Acrididæ—a circumstance which has led to great confusion, for the law of priority in zoological nomenclature prevents the adoption of Leach's use of the generic name Locusta, with the result that the true locusts are not Locustidæ, but Acrididæ.

2. [l. c.; pl. locustæ (-tē).] In bot., the spikelet of grasses.

Locustæ (lō-kus'tē), n. pl. [NL., pl. of L. locusta, a marine shell-fish, a lobster: see locust[1].] A division of macrurous decapod crustaceans, such as the Palinuridæ, or spiny lobsters.

Locustariæ (lō-kus-tā'ri-ē), n. pl. In Latreille's classification, a group of orthopterous insects; the locustarians, corresponding to the modern family Locustidæ (b).

locustarian (lō-kus-tā'ri-ạn), n. [< Locusta + -arian.] A locust-like insect; one of the Locustariæ, as sundry green or long-horned grasshoppers, katydids, etc.

locust-bean (lō'kust-bēn), n. The fruit of the carob-tree. See Ceratonia.

locust-berry (lō'kust-ber″i), n. The fruit of the West Indian locust, Byrsonima coriacea; ★also, the tree itself.

locust-bird (lō'kust-bėrd), n. The rose-colored starling, Pastor roseus: so called from its devouring locusts. H. B. Tristram.

locust-borer (lō'kust-bōr″ėr), n. A longicorn beetle, Cyllene robiniæ or C. picta, which bores the locust-tree. See cut under Cyllene.

locust-eater (lō'kust-ē″tėr), n. A book-name of birds of Swainson's genus Gryllivora, as G. gryllivora, the long-tailed locust-eater; a dayal. See Copsichus, Lalage.

Locustella (lō-kus-tel'ạ), n. [NL. (Kaup, 1829), < F. locustelle: see locustelle.] A genus of small sylviine birds, the locustelles.

locustelle (lō-kus-tel'), n. [< F. locustelle, so called with ref. to its note, which resembles that of the grasshopper, dim. of locuste, < L. locusta, grasshopper, locust: see locust[1].] A grasshopper-warbler; one of several small sylviine birds of Europe which make a chirring, sibilant, or stridulous noise like that made by a grasshopper. The term is indefinite, but specially applies to the little birds of a modern genus Locustella, including Potamodus, Sibilatrix, Lusciniopsis, etc. An early if not the original locustelle was the bird figured by Daubenton in "Planches enluminées" (1778), called la locustelle by Montbeillard (1778), the Motacilla nævia of Boddaert (1783), or Sylvia locustella of Latham (1790), now Locustella nævia or L. locustella. It inhabits temperate Europe and northern Africa. Another locustelle is L. luscinioides, or Savi's warbler. Both of these are British. L. certhiola, here figured, is Asiatic.

Grasshopper-warbler (Locustella certhiola).

Locustidæ (lō-kus'ti-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Locusta + -idæ.] A family of Orthoptera. (a) First used by Stephens in 1829, and applied to the family now called Acrididæ (which see). (b) Now identified with the Locustariæ of Latreille. In this sense it contains many winged and wingless genera, the former living on trees, bushes, and grass, the latter among stones and in dark places. The winged forms are known as green grasshoppers and katydids, and the wingless ones as stone-crickets. The antennæ are very long and thread-like; the tarsi are usually four-jointed. The female has a strong, exserted ovipositor, usually more or less curved and saber-shaped. The elytra of the male have a stridulating apparatus at the base. The species are found all over the world, attaining great size in the tropics. The European species usually oviposit in the ground, but in America many lay their eggs upon leaves and twigs, and sometimes penetrate the crevices of the soft parts and stems of plants for this purpose.

locust-shrimp (lō'kust-shrimp), n. Same as ★mantis-shrimp. See Squillidæ, Stomatopoda.

locust-tree (lō'kust-trē), n. [< locust[1] + tree.] See locust[2].

locution (lō-kū'shọn), n. [= F. locution = Pr. loqucio = Sp. locucion = Pg. locução = It. locuzione, < L. locutio(n-), a speaking, < locutus, pp. of loqui, speak. Cf. allocution, elocution.] 1. The act of speaking.

> Dentition and locution are for the most part contemporaries. Smith, Portraiture of Old Age.

2. Discourse; form or mode of speaking; phraseology; a phrase.

> I hate these figures in locution,
> These about phrases forc'd by ceremonie.
> ★ Marston, Sophonisba, i. 2.

locutory (lok'ū-tọ-ri), n.; pl. locutories (-riz). [= Sp. Pg. It. locutorio, < ML. locutorium, a room for conversation in a monastery, < LL. locutor, a speaker, < L. loqui, pp. locutus, speak: see locution.] A room for conversation; especially, a place in a monastery where the monks were allowed to converse with those who were not connected with the monastery, when silence was enjoined elsewhere.

> So came she to the grate that they cal
> (I trowe) locutorye. Sir T. More, Works, p. 1170.

lodam†, n. See loadum.

lodanum†, n. See ladanum, laudanum.

lode[1] (lōd), n. [Also less commonly load; < ★ME. lode, lod, a way, path, course, also a carrying, burden (whence E. load[2]), < AS. lād, a way, course, journey, carrying, carriage, sustenance (= OHG. leita, a procession, = Icel. leidh = Sw. led, a way, road, course), < līthan (pret. lāth) (= OS. līthan = OHG. līdan = Icel. līdha = Goth. leithan), go, travel: see lead[1]. Lode, in a deflected sense and var. spelling, appears as load, a burden (see load[2]); also in comp. lifelode, now livelihood[2], and in dial. form lade[2].] 1†. A way; path.—2. A reach of water; an open ditch for carrying off water from a fen.

> It was by a law of sewers decreed that a new drayn or lode should be made and maintained from the end of Chauncelors lode unto Tylney Smethe.
> Dugdale's Imbanking, p. 275. (Halliwell.)

> Down that dark long lode . . . he and his brother skated home in triumph. Kingsley.

3. A metalliferous deposit having more or less of a vein-like character—that is, having a certain degree of regularity, and being confined within walls. Lode is less definite than 'vein.' It means the thing which leads the miner or is followed by him, and is therefore a generalized expression for 'ore-body.' See vein and ore-deposit.—Champion lode, the most productive lode in a mining district. The term is Cornish in origin, and is little used in the United States. See mother-lode. Also called master-lode.—Scovan lode, a lode having no gossan on its back or outcrop. See vein.

lode[2]†, n. A Middle English form of load[2].

loded, loaded[1]† (lō'ded), a. [< lode(stone) + -ed[2].] Magnetized by being brought into contact with lodestone.

> Great Kings to Wars are pointed forth,
> Like loaded Needles to the North.
> Prior, Alma, ii.

lodeman†, loadman[1]† (lōd'mạn), n. [< ME. lodeman, < AS. lādman, a leader, a guide, < lād, a way, course, + man, man: see lode[1] and man.] Same as lodesman.

lodemanage, loadmanage† (lōd'mạn-āj), n. [< ME. lodemenage, < OF. lodmanage, usually lamanage, lamenage, pilotage, < laman, a pilot, from a LG. form cognate with ME. lodeman: see lodeman and -age.] Pilotage. Courts of lodemanage are held at Dover in England for the appointment of the Cinque Port pilots.

> His herbergh and his mone, his lodemenage.
> Chaucer, Gen. Prol. to C. T., l. 403.

lode-ship† (lōd'ship), n. A small fishing-vessel. Coles, 1717.

lodesman†, loadsman† (lōdz'mạn), n. [< ME. lodesman, lodesmon, lodysman; < lode's, poss. of lode[1], + man.] A pilot.

> Askyng hem anon
> If they were broken or aught woo-begon,
> Or hadde nede of lodesmen [var. lodman] or vitayle.
> Chaucer, Good Women, l. 1488.

> A lodesman [in Cowell] . . . being a pilot for harbour and river duty. Encyc. Brit., XIX. 96.

lodestar, loadstar (lōd'stär), n. [< ME. lodesterre (also lodsterne, ladesterne = Icel. leidharstjarna); < lode[1] + star. Cf. MD. leidesterre = MHG. leitsterne, G. leitstern = Dan. ledestjerne = Sw. ledstjerna, lodestar; as lead[1] + star.] A star that leads or serves to guide; especially, the pole-star: often used figuratively.

> Schipe-mene . . .
> Lukkes to the ladesterne whene the lyghte faillez.
> Morte Arthure (E. E. T. S.), l. 751.

> Loadstone to hearts, and loadstar to all eyes.
> Sir J. Davies, Immortal. of Soul, Ded.

> What lode-star's friendly ray,
> When thine is hid, shall guide the vessel's way?
> Bryant, The Ascension.

lodestone, loadstone (lōd'stōn), n. [< lode[1] + stone.] 1. A variety of magnetite, or the magnetic oxid of iron, which possesses polarity and has the power of attracting fragments of iron. See magnet.

> Renowned Load-stone, which on Iron acts,
> And by the touch the same aloofe attracts.
> Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, i. 3.

> They had also another tricke, by a Load-stone placed in the Roofe, to draw vp the yron Image of the Sunne, as if it did then bid Serapis farewell.
> Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 584.

2. A leading-stone for drains. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

lodestuff (lōd'stuf), n. In mining, vein-stuff; all the material which composes the mass of a lode or vein, including both gangue (or vein-stone) and the ore which is associated with it. ★See vein.

lodge (loj), n. [< ME. logge, loge, luge, < OF. loge, F. loge, a lodge, hut, cottage, = It. loggia, a gallery, < ML. lobia, laubia, a gallery, covered way: see lobby, from the same ML. source.] 1. A hut; a cottage; a house affording merely the simplest accommodations; a temporary habitation; with reference to the North American Indians, a hut constructed of poles and branches, skins, or rough boards.

> Thar loges & thare tentis vp thei gan bigge.
> Rob. of Brunne, p. 67.

> And he saw thame ga naked, and duelle in luges and in caves, and thaire wyfes and thaire childre away fra thame.
> MS. Lincoln A. i. 17, f. 30. (Halliwell.)

> The daughter of Zion is left as a cottage in a vineyard, as a lodge in a garden of cucumbers. Isa. i. 8.

> O for a lodge in some vast wilderness.
> Cowper, Task, ii. 1.

> There have been strange moccasins about my camp. They have been tracked into my lodges.
> J. F. Cooper, Last of Mohicans, xxviii.

2. A small house in a park, forest, or demesne; a gate-house; also, a small house or cottage connected with a larger house: as, a porter's lodge.

> Knight, you have beaten my men, killed my deer, and broke open my lodge. Shak., M. W. of W., i. 1. 115.

3. Any covered place of shelter, as a den or cave in which wild beasts lurk; in hunting, the shelter of the buck or doe.—4†. The place in which a body of workmen were employed; a working-place or workshop, especially one of masons or builders.

> For the lord that he ys bonde to,
> May fache the prentes whersever he go.
> gef yn the logge he were ytake, > Muche desese hyt mygth ther make.
> Quoted in English Gilds (E. E. T. S.), Int., p. cxxxix., note.

> The lodge [the German word is "Hütte." It meant as well the workshop as the place of meeting, which in those days were identical] itself of the architect was very similar to our factories; it consisted of one or more workshops in which the workmen worked tog ether.
> English Gilds (E. E. T. S.), Int., p. cxliv.

5. A place of meeting for members of a secret society, as that of the Freemasons or the Odd Fellows; hence, a body of members of such a society meeting in one place, in either an individual or a representative capacity, in the latter case constituting a district or a grand lodge; also, among the Freemasons, a meeting, session, or convention of such a body.—6†. A collection of similar objects situated close to one another.

> The Maldives, a famous lodge of islands. Defoe.

7. In mining, the bottom of a shaft or of any other cavity where the water of the mine has an opportunity to collect, so that it may be pumped out. The word sump is much more commonly used in the United States.—Grand lodge, the principal lodge or governing body of Freemasons. It is presided over by the grand master, and has the power of granting charters of affiliation, enforcing uniformity of ceremonial, and settling all disputes that may arise between lodges under its charge. The officers of the grand lodge are chiefly delegates from the respective lodges. A similar institution exists among the Good Templars.

lodge (loj), v.; pret. and pp. lodged, ppr. lodging. [< ME. loggen, logen, lugen, < OF. loger, F. loger, lodge, house, < loge, a lodge, hut, cottage: see lodge, n.] I. trans. 1. To furnish with a lodge or habitation, especially a temporary one; provide with a transient or temporary place of abode; harbor.

> Ye may sey to alle hem that yow aske who was loged with yow, that it was the kynge Looth and his foure sones.
> Merlin (E. E. T. S.), iii. 519.

Alexander and his oste had lugede thame appone the water of Strume. MS. Lincoln A. i. 17, f. 9. (Halliwell.)

My lord was lodged in the Duke's Castle.
Howell, Letters, I. vi. 2.

2. To set, lay, place, or deposit, as in a place of rest, or for preservation or future action: as, to lodge money in a bank; to lodge a complaint in court.

And that one talent which is death to hide Lodged with me useless.
Milton, Sonnet on his Blindness.

I lay all night in the cave where I had lodged my provisions. Swift, Gulliver's Travels, iii. 1.

3. To find an abode for; assign a residence to; put in possession.

Selden lodges the Civil Power of England in the King and the Parliament. Selden, Table-Talk, Int., p. 11.

4. To plant or implant; infix; fix or settle; place: as, to lodge an arrow in one's breast.

So can I give no reason, nor I will not,
More than a lodged hate, and a certain loathing.
Shak., M. of V., iv. 1. 60.

5. To bring to a lodgment; beat down; lay flat: said especially of vegetation.

Though bladed corn be lodged, and trees blown down;
Though castles topple on their warders' heads.
Shak., Macbeth, iv. 1. 55.

6†. To entrap, as in a place of lodgment.

Suet. Are those come in yet that pursu'd bold Caratach?
Pet. Not yet, sir, for I think they mean to lodge him;
Take him I know they dare not, 'twill be dangerous.
Fletcher, Bonduca, iv. 1.

The deer is lodged, I've track'd her to covert; . . .
Rush in at once. Addison, Cato, iv. 2.

II. intrans. 1. To have a lodge or an abode, especially a temporary one; be furnished with shelter and accommodation.

Than thei leged and pight teyntes and pavilouns, and hem rested, and lete the hoste be wacched.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), ii. 166.

He lodgeth with one Simon a tanner. Acts x. 6.

2. To have an abiding-place; dwell; have a fixed position.

And dwells such rage in softest bosoms then?
And lodge such daring souls in little men? Pope.

3. To be deposited or fixed; settle: as, a seed lodged in a crevice of a rock.

Nor let thy soul contrive Against thy mother aught: leave her to heaven,
And to those thorns that in her bosom lodge.
Shak., Hamlet, i. 5. 87.

4. To be beaten down or laid flat, as grain.

Its straw makes it not subject to lodge, or to be mildewed. Mortimer, Husbandry.

lodgeable (loj'a-bl), a. [Sometimes also lodgable; < lodge + -able.] Capable of affording a temporary abode. [Rare.]

At the furthest end of the Towne East-ward the Ambassadour's House was appointed, but not yet (by default of some of the King's Officers) Lodgable.
Sir J. Finett, Finetti Philoxenis (1656), p. 164.

lodged (lojd), p. a. In her., represented as lying at rest upon the ground, as a buck, hart, hind, etc. Also harbored and couchant.

lodge-gate (loj'gāt), n. A gate where there is a lodge or house for the porter or gate-keeper.

lodgement, n. See lodgment.

lodger (loj'ėr), n. One who lodges; especially, one who lives in a hired room or rooms in the house of another.

Call'st thou me host?
Now, by this hand, I swear, I scorn the term;
Nor shall my Nell keep lodgers.
Shak., Hen. V., ii. 1. 33.

Lodger franchise, in Eng. law, a right to vote conferred by statute in 1867 upon persons occupying lodgings in boroughs of an annual rental value of at least £10: extended to counties and assimilated to the household franchise in 1884.

lodging (loj'ing), n. [< ME. loggyng, logyng, lugyng; verbal n. of lodge, v.] 1. A place of temporary residence; especially, a room or rooms hired for residence in the house of another: often used in this sense in the plural with a singular meaning. In Great Britain persons "in lodgings" are charged for rooms and attendance, and sometimes purchase their own provisions, but far more frequently are served by the landlady in their own rooms with provisions purchased and cooked on their order.

And fourth withall to ther loggyng they went,
The best that they cowde fynde to ther entent.
Generydes (E. E. T. S.), l. 637.

I pray, as we walk, tell me freely, how do you like your lodging, and my host and the company?
I. Walton, Complete Angler, p. 61.

Life in lodgings, at the best of times, is not a peculiarly exhilarating state of existence.
Mrs. J. H. Riddell, City and Suburb, xxii.

2. Place of abode; harbor; cover.

Fayre bosomel fraught with vertues richest tresure,
The neast of love, the lodging of delight.
Spenser, Sonnets, lxxvi.

3. Place of rest. [Rare.]

Their feathers serve to stuff our beds and pillows, yielding us soft and warm lodging. Ray, Works of Creation.

lodging-car (loj'ing-kär), n. On a railroad, a car fitted with bunks, used as a sleeping- or dwelling-place for employees. [U. S.]

lodging-house (loj'ing-hous), n. A house in which lodgings are let; generally, a place other than an inn or hotel where travelers lodge.

lodging-knee (loj'ing-nē), n. See knee, 3 (a).

lodgment, lodgement (loj'mėnt), n. [< lodge + -ment.] 1. The act of lodging, or the state of being lodged: as, the lodgment of money in a bank; the lodgment of grass or grain by a storm.

There is a great lodgment of civilized men on this continent. Everett, Orations, I. 218.

It would have been a worthy exploit indeed, if the arms of Venice, by that time a great Italian power, had driven out the Turk from his first lodgement on Italian soil.
E. A. Freeman, Venice, p. 319.

2. A deposit, as of an accumulated mass; a settling: as, the lodgment of mud in a tank.—3†. A place where persons or things are lodged; a lodging.

Certain publick Lodgments founded in Charity for the use of Travellers. Maundrell, Aleppo to Jerusalem, p. 2.

4. Milit., a position or foothold gained from and held against an enemy, as by an invading or a besieging army: as, to effect a lodgment on the enemy's coast, or within the enemy's lines.

lodh-bark (lōd'bärk), n. [Hindi lōdh.] The bark of an East Indian shrub or tree, Symplocos racemosa, used in dyeing.

lodicle (lod'i-kl), n. Same as lodicule.

lodicula (lō-dik'ū-lą), n. Same as lodicule.

lodicule (lod'i-kūl), n. [< L. iodicula, dim. of lodix (lodic-), a coverlet.] In bot., one of the scales which occur in the flowers of some grasses, inserted on the receptacle just outside the stamens. Also called squamula and paleola.

Lodoicea (lod-ō-is'ē-ą), n. [NL. (Commerson, 1805), corruptly for Laodicea, named after Laodice, a daughter of Priam, king of Troy.] A genus of palms of the tribe Borasseæ. It is distinguished by numerous stamens and many flowers in each cavity of the spadix or fleshy spike. There is but one species, L. callipyge, a native of the Seychelles Islands, a magnificent palm, growing to a height of nearly 100 feet, and bearing at the summit a crown of fan-shaped leaves some of which are 20 feet long and 12 feet broad. At the age of 30 years the palm bears its first fruit, which reaches maturity 10 years later. See double cocoanut, under cocoanut.

lodomy†, n. [A corruption of lodanum, laudanum.] Laudanum.

A pox upo' their lodomy
On me had sic a sway;
Four o' their men, the bravest four,
They bore my blade away.
Lang Johnny Moir (Child's Ballads, IV. 277).

loellingite (lēl'ing-īt), n. [< Lölling (in Carinthia) + *-ite*2.] A native arsenide of iron, $FeAs_2$; a mineral closely related to arsenopyrite or mispickel.

lœmography (lē-mog'ra-fi), n. See loimography.

loess (lès or lō'es), n. [< G. löss, loess.] In geol., originally, a certain loamy deposit in the valley of the Rhine; now, by extension, any detrital accumulation more or less resembling the original loess occurring in other parts of the world. The loess is a very fine loam, very homogeneous in character, showing hardly any indication of stratification, and containing in numerous localities large quantities of land and fresh-water shells, as well as bones of land-animals. In northern China it covers a vast area and is developed to a great thickness, and, being deeply eroded by the rivers, has given rise to a very remarkable topography. In the regions where the loess occurs it is the most recent of the formations. The theories of its origin are numerous, and the subject is one of great complexity, so that "some skilful geologists, peculiarly well acquainted with the physical geography of Europe, have styled the loess the most difficult geological problem." (Lyell.) Much that is called loess by some geologists is certainly river-mud deposited in the ordinary manner. Lyell connects the loess of the Rhine valley with glacial action; and Richthofen considers it as beyond dispute that the loess of China is a subaërial deposit, borne by the wind to its present resting-place.

loffet, v. i. An obsolete form of laugh.

loft1 (lôft), n. [< ME. loft, the air (esp. in the phr. a loft, on loft), an upper room, < Icel. loft, now spelled lopt, the air, sky, an upper room, = Sw. Dan. loft, ceiling, loft, garret, = AS. lyft, the air: see *lift*1. Cf. aloft.] 1†. The air; the sky: same as *lift*1. See on loft (below), aloft.

Lyuond in the lofte with lordships in heuyn.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 3719.

2. A room or space between a ceiling or flooring and the roof immediately above it; the space below and between the rafters; a garret.

ȝe schal lenge in your lofte, & lyze in your ese.
Sir Gawayne and the Green Knight (E. E. T. S.), l. 1096.

3. A floor or room above another or others; an upper story; especially, in the United States, one of the upper stories of a warehouse or other mercantile building, or of a factory.

And hym she roggeth and awaketh softe,
And at the wyndow lep he fro the lofte.
Chaucer, Good Women, l. 2709.

Eutychus . . . fell down from the third loft and was taken up dead. Acts xx. 9.

4. A gallery or an elevated apartment within a larger apartment, as in a church, hall, barn, etc.: as, an organ-loft; a hay-loft.

I also to the ball, and with much ado got up to the loft, where with much trouble I could see very well.
Pepys, Diary, Nov. 15, 1666.

Cock of the loft. See cock of the walk, under *cock*1.—On loft†, on high; aloft. See aloft.

If thou be in place where good ale is on lofte, . . .

Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 39.

loft1 (lôft), v. t. [< *loft*1, n.] To furnish with a loft.—Lofted house, a house of more than one story. [Scotch.]

loft2 (lôft), v. t. To lift; in golf, to elevate (the ball). [Scotch.] lofter (lôf'tėr), n. A lofting-iron.

loftily (lôf'ti-li), adv. 1. In a lofty manner or position; in an elevated place; on high.—2. In a lofty spirit; with elevated feeling or purpose; eminently; arrogantly; haughtily.

loftiness (lôf'ti-nes), n. 1. The state or quality of being lofty or high; remarkable height or elevation.—2. Elevation of character, sentiment, or feeling; the state of being elevated, as by high thought, or puffed up, as by pride or vanity; grandeur; sublimity; haughtiness; arrogance.

We have heard the pride of Moab, . . . his loftiness, and his arrogancy. Jer. xlviii. 29.

Three poets in three distant ages born: . . .
The first in loftiness of thought surpass'd;
The next in majesty; in both the last.
Dryden, Lines under Milton's Picture in P. L. (fol. 1688).

There may be a Loftiness in Sentiments where there is no Passion. Addison, Spectator, No. 339.

★=Syn. 2. Pride, Presumption, etc. See arrogance.

lofting† (lôf'ting), n. [< loft + *-ing*1.] Upper part; ceiling.

As he is awakening him, the timber passage and lofting of the chamber hastily takes fire.
Quoted in Child's Ballads, VI. 175.

lofting-iron (lôf'ting-ī"ėrn), n. In golf, a form of club used in lofting a ball. See cut under golf-club.

lofty (lôf'ti), a. [< loft + *-y*1. Cf. G. lüftig, aërial.] 1. Raised in space or dimensions; lifted high up; elevated; very high.

Cities of men with lofty gates and towers.
Milton, P. L., xi. 640.

See lofty Lebanon his head advance.
Pope, Messiah, l. 25.

2. Elevated in condition, character, or quality; raised above the common level; characterized by eminence, dignity, sublimity, etc.; exalted; impressive.

Thus saith the high and lofty One that inhabiteth eternity. Isa. lvii. 15.

He knew
Himself to sing, and build the lofty rhyme.
Milton, Lycidas, l. 11.

A stern and lofty duty.
Whittier, Lines on the Death of S. O. Torrey.

3. Elevated in conceit; manifesting pride or arrogance; haughty; ostentatious.

The lofty looks of man shall be humbled. Isa. ii. 11.

Lofty and sour to them that loved him not.
Shak., Hen. VIII., iv. 2. 53.

★=Syn. 1. High, etc. See tall.—2. Sublime, exalted, stately, majestic. See grand.—3. Arrogant, magisterial.

log1 (log), n. and a. [Also logg†, logge†. ME. logge, prob. not, as commonly assumed, from Icel. lāg, Sw. dial. låga, a felled tree (from the root of *lie*1), but an imitative word, like clog of like meaning: see clog and compare loggy and logy. In the nautical sense the word has a special history. See *log*2, n.] I. n. 1. A bulky piece or stick of unhewn timber; a length of wood as cut from the trunk or a large limb of a tree; specifically, an unsplit stick of timber with butted ends ready for sawing.

So was he brought forth into the grene beside the chappell wᵗin the tower, & his head laid down vpon a long log of timbre, and there stricken of.
Sir T. More, Works, p. 54.

2. Figuratively, a dull, heavy, stolid, or stupid person.

What a log is this,
To sleep such music out!
Beau. and Fl., Captain, ii. 2.

Christmas log. See Christmas.

II. a. Constructed of logs; consisting of logs: as, a log cabin; a log fort or bridge.—Log cabin, a cabin or hut built of logs, unhewn or hewn, notched near the ends and laid one upon another, and having the interstices filled with mud or plaster. Log cabins are often used as dwellings in poor or thinly settled regions where timber abounds.—Log-cabin campaign, in U. S. hist., the electoral canvass for the presidency in 1840, in which representations of log cabins and barrels of hard cider were carried in the processions of the partizans of William Henry Harrison. One of his opponents, wrongly attributing to him a humble origin, had spoken of him as one who had lived in a log cabin and drunk hard cider, and the expression was caught up by his adherents and made a party cry.—Log-cabin quilt, a patchwork quilt of a particular design. [U. S.]

Log Cabin.

Reluctantly she slipped her book under the log-cabin quilt, and said "Come in." Harper's Mag., LXXVI. 36.

Log canoe, a canoe hollowed out of a single log.—Log house, a house built of logs fitted together, and smoothed on the inside, or on both sides. Log houses in new or thickly wooded regions of North America are often of considerable size and well finished.

log[1] (log), v.; pret. and pp. logged, ppr. logging. [< log[1], n.] I.† trans. To cut into logs.

When a Tree is so thick that after it is log'd it remains still too great a Burthen for one Man, we blow it up with Gunpowder. Dampier, Voyages, II. ii. 80.

II. intrans. To cut down trees and get out logs from the forest for sawing into boards, ★etc.: as, to engage in logging.

log[2] (log), n. [A modern use of log[1], first recorded in the latter half of the 16th century. The other European forms, D. log, G. log, Sw. logg, Dan. log, F. lok, later loch, Russ. lagŭ, etc., are all from E.] 1. Naut., an apparatus for measuring the rapidity of a ship's motion. The most common form consists of a log-chip, or thin quadrant of wood, of about five inches radius, fastened to a line wound on a reel. When the log-chip is thrown overboard, its motion is deadened on striking the water, and its distance from the ship, measured after a certain time on the line (which is allowed to run out), gives approximately the speed of the ship. The chip is loaded with lead on the arc side to make it float upright. At 12 or 15 fathoms from the chip a white rag marks off the stray-line, a quantity sufficient to let the log-chip get clear of the vessel before time is marked. The rest of the line, which is from 150 to 200 fathoms long, is divided into equal parts by bits of string stuck through the strands and distinguished by the number of knots made in each, or in some similar way, as by colored rags; hence these divisions are called knots. The length of a knot must bear the same proportion to the length of a nautical mile (see mile) that the time during which the line is allowed to run out bears to one hour. Thus, using a twenty-eight second glass, 28 : 3600 : : 47.3 feet (the usual length of a knot) : 6080 feet (the usually received length of a sea-mile). Many other devices have been invented to perform the functions of the log, which generally include a brass fly or rotator connected with mechanism acting as an index. In some cases the whole machine is towed astern of the ship, and must be hauled in to be examined; with the taffrail-log, the register is fastened to the taffrail and the fly is towed astern.

Log and Reel.

Hence—2. The record of a ship's progress, or a tabulated summary of the performance of the engines and boilers, etc.; a log-book.—Electric log, an apparatus devised for measuring the speed of water-currents, or the speed and distance traveled by ships at sea, with the aid of electricity. With the second kind mentioned under electric, the distance run is indicated by a pointer on a dial, which shows the number of turns made by a screw towed behind the vessel. Electrical conductors are incased in the tow-line, and the circuit is closed at intervals of a stated number of turns, thus operating an indicator on deck. Electric logs have not come into practical use.—Ground-log, a form of log adapted for showing the direction and speed of passage of a vessel over the ground in shoal water. It consists of an ordinary log-line, with a hand-lead of 7 or 9 pounds substituted for the log-chip. When used, the lead remains fixed at the bottom, and the line shows the path and speed of the ship and the effect of any current which may exist.—Rough log, in the United States navy, the original manuscript of a ship's log.—To heave the log. See heave.

log[2] (log), v. t.; pret. and pp. logged, ppr. logging. [< log[2], n.] 1. To record or enter in the log-book.—2. To exhibit by the indication of the log, as a rate of speed by the hour: as, the ship logs ten knots.

log[3]† (log), v. i. [The appar. orig. of the freq. form logger[3], q. v. Cf. also loggan.] To move to and fro; rock. See logging-rock.

log[4] (log), n. [Heb. lōgh.] A small liquid measure, the twelfth part of a hin, or about a pint. It seems to have been of Babylonian origin, being one sixtieth of a maxis.

He shall take . . . three tenth deals of fine flour for a meat offering, mingled with oil, and one log of oil. Lev. xiv. 10.

log. The abbreviation of logarithm. Thus, log. 3 = 0.4771213 is an equation giving the value of the logarithm of 3.

logan, n. See loggan.

Loganiaceæ (lō-gā-ni-ā′sē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Dumortier, 1829), < Logania, the typical genus, + -aceæ.] A family of dicotyledonous sympetalous plants, characterized by opposite, usually entire leaves, with stipules which adhere to the leaf-stalks or are combined in the form of interpetiolary sheaths. The flowers usually grow in terminal or axillary cymes, and are four- or five-parted, with an inferior calyx, the stamens inserted on the corolla-tube, and a fruit which is capsular, drupaceous, or a berry. The order includes 30 genera and about 350 species, either herbs, shrubs, or trees, which are dispersed throughout tropical and subtropical regions. The plants are bitter and highly poisonous; the poison-nut, Strychnos Nux-vomica, belongs to this family, and several other species are used in medicine. Since the genus name upon which this family was based is untenable, the name Spigeliaceæ, given to it by Martius in 1827, becomes its proper designation.

logaœdic (log-ą-ē′dik), a. and n. [< LL. logaœdicus, < LGr. λογαοιδικός, logaœdic, < Gr. λόγος, speech, prose (see Logos), + ἀοιδή, song: see ode.] I. a. Literally, prose-poetic; in anc. pros., noting a variety of trochaic or iambic verse in which dactyls are combined with trochees or anapests with iambi: so called because this apparent irregularity seems to approach the non-observance of metrical laws characteristic of prose. These dactyls and anapests are not, however, full dactyls or anapests of four times or moræ, but cyclic dactyls or anapests of only three times, equivalent therefore in measure to trochees or iambi. A single long syllable is also used in some places in several forms of logaœdic verse to represent a complete foot. This long is equal not to two but to three shorts, and is therefore equivalent to a trochee. Irrational longs—that is, longs reduced to the value of a short—also occur in the theses. A basis sometimes precedes the series. Recent metricians use the epithet logaœdic of mixed meters (see mixed) in general. Ancient writers classed many logaœdic meters as Ionic, epionic, choriambic, epichoriambic, or antispastic. Among the more familiar logaœdic meters are the Glyconic, Pherecratic, Asclepiadic, Sapphic, and Alcaic. See basis, 9, and cyclic, 3.

II. n. A verse of the character defined above.

logarithm (log′ą-rithm or -riŦHm), n. [Cf. F. logarithme = Sp. logaritmo = Pg. logarithmo = It. logaritmo = D. Second, in each system of logarithms, the logarithms corresponding to any geometrical progression of natural numbers are in arithmetical progression: that is, if each natural number of the series is obtained from the preceding one by multiplying a constant factor into this preceding one, then each logarithm may be obtained from the preceding one by adding a constant increment or subtracting a constant decrement. This is shown, for the system of Napier's logarithms, in the following table. It must be said that logarithms are, in general, irrational numbers, and their values can only be expressed approximately, being carried to some finite number of decimal places. Owing to the neglected places, it will often happen that the difference between two logarithms, obtained by subtracting the approximate value of one from that of the other, is in error by 1 in the last decimal place.

It will thus be seen that if four numbers, A, B, C, D, are in proportion, so that A : B = C : D, then their four logarithms satisfy the equation, log A − log B = log C − log D; so that, to work the rule of three with logarithms, we simply substitute for each number its logarithm and proceed as usual, only that in every case we perform addition instead of multiplication and subtraction instead of division; and the result is the logarithm of the answer. (b) As now understood, a system of logarithms, besides the two essential characters set forth above, has a third, namely that the logarithm of 1 is 0. This being admitted, a simpler definition can be given of the logarithm, viz.: a logarithm is the exponent of the power to which a number constant for each system, and called the base of the system, must be raised in order to produce the natural number, or antilogarithm. Thus $(\text{base})^{\log x} = x$. At the time logarithms were invented fractional exponents had not been thought of, and even decimals, as we conceive them, were little used, the decimal point not having yet appeared; consequently, the last definition of the logarithm, which is now the usual one, was not at first possible. With logarithms in the modern sense, the rule for solving proportions still holds, but is secondary to the following fundamental rule: The sum of the logarithms of several numbers is the logarithm of the continued product of those numbers. For example, let it be required to determine the circumference of the earth in inches, knowing that its radius is 3958 miles. We take out from a table of logarithms the logarithms of all the numbers which have to be multiplied together, as follows:

Names of quantities.	Natural numbers.	Common logarithms.
Radius of the earth in miles.....	3958	3.5974858
Ratio of diameter to radius.....	2	0.3010300
Ratio of circumference to diameter	3.1415927	0.4971499
One mile in feet.....	5280	3.7226339
One foot in inches.....	12	1.0791812

The sum of these logarithms is 9.1974808, which we find by the table to be the logarithm of a number comprised between 1575690000 and 1575691000. To obtain a closer approximation, we should have to carry the logarithms to more places of decimals; but this would be useless, since the radius of the earth is only given to the nearest mile. From this fundamental rule several subsidiary rules follow as corollaries. Thus, to divide one number by another, subtract the logarithm of the divisor from that of the dividend, and the antilogarithm of the remainder is the quotient; to take the reciprocal of a number, change the sign of the logarithm, and the antilogarithm of the result is the reciprocal; to raise a number to any power, multiply the logarithm of the base by the exponent of the power, and the antilogarithm of the product is the power sought; to extract any root of a number, divide the logarithm of that number by the index of the root, and the antilogarithm of the quotient is the root sought. For example, what is the amount of $1 at interest at 6 per cent. compounding yearly for 1,000 years? We must here raise 1.06 to the thousandth power. The common logarithm of 1.06 is 0.0253058653; 1,000 times this is 25.3058653, which is the logarithm of 2022384 followed by 19 ciphers, or say 20 quadrillions 223840 trillions, in the English numeration. To give an idea of the advantage of logarithms in trigonometrical calculations, it may be mentioned that to find the altitude of the sun from its hour-angle and declination with logarithms requires seven numbers to be taken out of the tables and two additions to be performed, while the solution of the same problem with a table of natural sines requires, as before, the taking out of seven numbers from the tables, and besides eight additions and two halvings. There are two systems of logarithms in common use, the hyperbolic, natural, or Napierian or Neperian (not Napier's own) logarithms in analysis, and common, decimal, or Briggsian logarithms in ordinary computations. The base of the system of hyperbolic logarithms is 2.718281828459. This kind of logarithm derives its name from its measuring the area between the equilateral hyperbola, an ordinate, and the axes of coördinates when these are the asymptotes; but the chief characteristic of the system is that, x being any number less than unity,

$$\log(1+x) = x - \tfrac{1}{2}x^2 + \tfrac{1}{3}x^3 - \tfrac{1}{4}x^4 + \text{etc.}$$

Thus, the hyperbolic logarithm of 1.1 is calculated as follows:

x	0.100000000	$\frac{1}{2}x^2$	0.005000000
$\frac{1}{3}x^3$	0.000333333	$\frac{1}{4}x^4$	0.000025000
$\frac{1}{5}x^5$	0.000002000	$\frac{1}{6}x^6$	0.000000167
$\frac{1}{7}x^7$	0.000000014	$\frac{1}{8}x^8$	0.000000001
	0.100335347		0.005025168
	0.005025168
log 1.1	0.095310179

By the skilful application of this principle, with some others of subsidiary importance, the whole table of natural logarithms has been calculated. The logarithms of any other system, in the modern sense, are simply the products of the hyperbolic logarithms into a factor constant for that system, called the modulus of the system of logarithms; and each system in the old sense is derivable from a system in the modern sense by adding a constant to every logarithm. The base of the common system of logarithms is 10, and its modulus is 0.4342944819. A common logarithm consists of an integer part and a decimal: the former is called the index or characteristic, the latter the mantissa. The characteristic depends only upon the position of the decimal point, and not at all upon the succession of significant figures; the mantissa depends entirely upon the succession of figures, and not at all upon the position of the decimal point. Thus,

log 12345	4.0914911
log 123.45	2.0914911

The characteristic of a logarithm is equal to the number of places between the decimal point and the first significant figure. Logarithms of numbers less than unity are negative; but, negative numbers not being convenient in computation, such logarithms are usually written in one or other of two ways, as follows: The first and perhaps the best way is to make the mantissa positive and take the characteristic only as negative, increasing, for this purpose, its absolute value by 1, and writing the minus sign over it. Thus, in place of writing −0.3010300, which is the logarithm of $\frac{1}{2}$, we may write $\bar{1}.6989700$. The second and most usual way is to augment the logarithm by 10 or by 100, thus forming a logarithm in the original sense of the word. Thus, −0.3010300 would be written 9.6989700, the characteristic in this case being 9 less the number of places between the decimal point and the first significant figure. Logarithms were invented and a table published in 1614 by John Napier of Scotland; but the kind now chiefly in use were proposed by his contemporary Henry Briggs, professor of geometry in Gresham College in London. The first extended table of common logarithms, by Adrian Vlacq, 1628, has been the basis of every one since published. Abbreviated l. or log.—Arithmetical complement of a logarithm. See arithmetical.—Binary logarithms. See binary.—Briggsian, common, or decimal logarithm. See above.—Circular logarithm, an imaginary logarithm.—Division by logarithms. See division.—Gaussian logarithms. See Gaussian.—Logistic logarithm, the logarithm of a number of seconds subtracted from the logarithm of 3600, the number of seconds in an hour.—Natural, hyperbolic, Neperian, or Napierian logarithm. See above.—Negative index of a logarithm, one that is affected with the negative sign. Such are the indices of the logarithms of all numbers less than unity.—Parabolic logarithm, a real logarithm.—Quadratic logarithm, the exponent of a power of 2 which power of 2 is itself the exponent of a power of the decimal antilogarithm of $2-10$, the power being the number of which the first exponent is the quadratic logarithm. That is, if $a = 10^{2 \cdot 10}$ and $a^{2x} = N$, then x is the quadratic logarithm of N, written LqN.

logarithmetic (log″a-rith-met′ik), a. [< logarithm + -et-ic, after arithmetic.] Same as logarithmic. [Rare.]

logarithmetical (log″a-rith-met′i-kal), a. [★ logarithmetic + -al.] Same as logarithmic.

logarithmic (log-a-rith′mik), a. [< logarithm + -ic.] Of or pertaining to logarithms; consisting of logarithms.—Logarithmic curvature, the ratio of the distances from the points of contact of two infinitely neighboring tangents to their point of intersection. This ratio is unity at an ordinary point, and on an algebraic curve is always rational.—Logarithmic curve. See logistic curve, under logistic.—Logarithmic ellipse, hyperbola, etc. See the nouns.—Logarithmic plus and minus, two algebraic signs, $\perp$ and $\top$, such that $\alpha = \beta \perp \gamma$ and $\alpha = \beta \top \gamma$ signify that $\log \tan (\frac{1}{2}\alpha + 45°) = \log \tan (\frac{1}{2}\beta + 45°) \pm \log \tan (\frac{1}{2}\gamma + 45°)$, the upper sign for $\perp$, and the lower for $\top$.—Logarithmic spiral, a curve-line somewhat analogous to the common logarithmic curve. It intersects all its radiants at the same angle, and the tangent of this angle is the modulus of the system of logarithms which the particular spiral represents. Its involute and evolute are also logarithmic spirals. Also called logistic spiral.

logarithmical (log-a-rith′mi-kal), a. [< logarithmic + -al.] Same as logarithmic.

logarithmically (log-a-rith′mi-kal-i), adv. By the use or aid of logarithms.

logarithmotechny (log-a-rith′mō-tek-ni), n. [< E. logarithm (NGr. λογάριθμος) + Gr. τέχνη, art.] The art of calculating logarithms.

logat†, n. See logget.

log-beam (log′bēm), n. In a sawmill, the traveling frame which supports the log and feeds it to the saws.

log-board (log′bōrd), n. [< log[2] + board.] A pair of boards shutting together like a book, formerly used instead of a log-slate.

log-book (log′bůk), n. [= Sw. logbok = Dan. logbog; as log[2] + book.] 1. The official record of proceedings on board ship: so called from the register which it includes of the indications of the log. It is a journal of all important items happening on shipboard, contains the data from which the navigator determines his position by dead-reckoning (which see), and is, when properly kept, a complete meteorological journal. On board merchant ships the log is kept by the first officer; on board men-of-war, by the navigator.

2. In the board schools of Great Britain, a book for memoranda kept by the principal of the school, in accordance with the requirements of the Education Act.

log-butter (log′but″ėr), n. A heavy drag-saw ★used in squaring or butting the ends of logs.

log-cabin (log′kab′in), n. See log cabin, under log[1], a.

log-chip (log′chip), n. The board, in the form of a quadrant, attached to a log-line. See log[2]. Also, erroneously, log-ship.

log-cock (log′kok), n. The pileated woodpecker of North America, Hylotomus or Ceophlœus pileatus, more fully called black log-cock.

loget, n. and v. A Middle English form of lodge.

log-fish (log′fish), n. The barrel-fish, Palinurichthys perciformis. Also called rudder-fish.

log-frame (log′frām), n. A sawmill machine for cutting timber into planks; a deal-frame.

loggan (log′an), n. [Also logan; < log[3].] A logging-rock or rocking-stone.

loggat†, n. See logget.

logget, n. and v. A Middle English form of lodge.

logger[1] (log′ėr), n. [< log[1] + -er[1].] A man ★employed in getting out logs or timber from the forest, and sometimes in getting them down rivers to market. [U. S. and Canada.]

There were a couple of loggers on board, in red flannel shirts, and with rifles. Lowell, Fireside Travels, p. 110.

logger[2]† (log′ėr), a. [< log[1] + -er, here used adjectively. Cf. loggy, logy.] Heavy; stupid. Compare loggerhead.

My head too heavy was and logger
Even to make a Pettifogger.
Cotton, Burlesque upon Burlesque.

logger[3] (log′ėr), v. i. [Freq. of log[3]. Cf. Dan. logre, wag the tail.] To move irregularly, as ★a wheel that is loose on its axle. [Prov. Eng.]

loggerhead (log′ėr-hed), n. [< logger[2] + head.] 1. A blockhead; a dunce; a dolt; a thickskull.

Now wae be to you, loggerheads,
That dwell near Castlecarry,
To let awa' sic a bonny lass,
A Highlandman to marry.
Lizae Baillie (Child's Ballads, IV. 75).

You in the mean time, you silly Logerhead, deserve to have your Bones well-thrash'd with a Fool's staff, for thinking to stir up Kings and Princes to War by such Childish Arguments. Milton, Ans. to Salmasius, Pref., p. 17.

2. A spherical mass of iron with a long handle, used after being heated for various purposes, as to liquefy tar, to ignite the priming of a cannon, etc. Also called loggerheat.

Here dozed a fire of beechen logs, that bred Strange fancies in its embers golden-red,
And nursed the loggerhead whose hissing dip,
Timed by nice instinct, creamed the mug of flip.
Lowell, Fitz Adam's Story.

3. A post in the stern of a whale-boat, with a bell-shaped head, around which the harpoon-line passes; a snubbing-post.—4. A large-headed marine turtle belonging to the genus Thalassochelys, as the American loggerhead, T. caouana or caretta, or the Indian, T. olivacea; also, the alligator-turtle of the southern United States, Macrochelys lacertina.—5. The small gray or Carolinian shrike, Lanius ludovicianus, a bird of the family Laniidæ, resident and abundant in the southern parts of the United States, and sometimes as far north as New England. It is about 8¼ inches long (the wing and tail each 4 inches), slate-colored above and white below, with the wings and tail black and white, the scapulars and upper tail-coverts bleached a little, and each side of the head marked by a black bar, the two bars meeting on the forehead. The bird is a geographical race of the common white-rumped shrike, L. excubitorides, and its habits are the same as those of other butcher-birds.

6. A flycatcher. [West Indies.]—7. The chub. [Local, Eng.]—8. A kind of sponge found in Florida.—9. pl. The knapweed, Centaurea nigra; also, the blue-bottle, C. Cyanus.—At loggerheads, engaged in bickerings or disputes; contending about differences of opinion or the like.

At last the divine and the poet, traditionally at loggerheads, have a common bond of suffering.
Stedman, Vict. Poets, p. 13.

To fall or go to loggerheads, to come to blows.

loggerheaded (log′ėr-hed″ed), a. [< loggerhead + -ed[2].] Dull; stupid; doltish.

You logger-headed and unpolish'd grooms!
What, no attendance? Shak., T. of the S., iv. 1. 128.

loggerheat (log′ėr-hēt), n. Same as loggerhead, 2.

loggett, n. [Also loggat, logat; dim. of log[1].] 1. A small log or piece of wood.

Now are they tossing of his legs and arms,
Like loggets at a pear-tree.
B. Jonson, Tale of a Tub, iv. 5.

2. pl. An old English game, played by fixing a stake in the ground and pitching small pieces of wood at it, the nearest thrower winning; skittle-pins. It was at one time prohibited by statute, under Henry VIII.

Did these bones cost no more the breeding, but to play at loggats with them? Shak., Hamlet, v. 1. 100.

[I have seen it [loggats] played in different counties, at their sheep-shearing feasts, where the winner was entitled to a black fleece, which he afterwards presented to the maid to spin, for the purpose of making a petticoat, and on condition that she knelt down on the fleece to be kissed by all the rustics present.
Steevens, note on the above passage.]

loggia (loj′ä), n.; pl. loggie (-e). [It., = E. lodge, q. v.] In Italian arch.: (a) A gallery or arcade in a building, properly at the height of one or more stories, running along the front or part of the front of the building, and open on at least one side to the air, on which side is a series of pillars or slender piers. Such galleries afford an airy and sheltered resting-place or outlook, and are very characteristic of Italian palaces. Among famous loggie are those of the Vatican, decorated by Raphael and his scholars. Compare belvedere. See cut in next column. (b) A large ornamental window in the middle of the chief story of a building, often projecting from the wall, as seen in old Venetian palaces.

logging[1] (log′ing), n. [Verbal n. of log[1], v.] The business of cutting and getting out logs or timber from a forest. [U. S. and Canada.]

logging[2]†, n. A Middle English form of lodging.

logging-ax (log′ing-aks), n. A heavy ax used in cutting off logs.

logging-bee (log′ing-bē), n. Same as log-rolling, 1.

Loggia, Ospedale Maggiore, Milan.

A logging-bee followed the burning of the fallow, as a matter of course. In the bush [Canada] where hands are few . . . these gatherings are considered indispensable [1832]. Susanna Moodie, Roughing it in the Bush, II. 58.

logging-camp (log′ing-kamp), n. An encampment of loggers or persons engaged in logging during winter. [U. S. and Canada.]

logging-head (log′ing-hed), n. In a steam-engine, the working-beam. E. H. Knight.

logging-rock (log′ing-rok), n. A rock so balanced on its base that it logs or rocks to and fro very easily, as by the force of the wind.

log-glass (log′glàs), n. A fourteen- or twenty-eight-second sand-glass, used with the log-line to ascertain the speed of a ship. See log[2].

logh†, n. An obsolete form of loch[1] or lough[1], and of low[3].

loghead (log′hed), n. A thick-headed or stupid person; a loggerhead. [Rare.]

Not being born purely a Loghead (Dummkopf), thou hadst no other outlook. Carlyle, Sartor Resartus, p. 113.

log-headed (log′hed″ed), a. Stupid. Davies.

For well I knewe it was some mad-heded chylde
That invented this name, that the log-headed knave might be begilde. R. Edwards, Damon and Pythias.

log-house (log′hous′), n. See log house, under ★log[1], a.

logic (loj′ik), n. and a. [Formerly logick, logique, < ME. logike, < OF. (and F.) logique = Sp. lógica = Pg. It. logica, < L. logica, logice, < Gr. λογική (occurring first in Cicero), logic; properly fem. of λογικός (> L. logicus), of or pertaining to speech or reason or reasoning, rational, reasonable, < λόγος, speech, reason: see Logos.] I. n. 1. The science of the distinction of true from false reasoning, with whatever is naturally treated in connection therewith. See the phrases below. The definition of logic has been much disputed, and many definitions of the word have been given. There was much discussion in ancient and medieval times of the questions whether logic was a mode of knowing, or an instrument of science, or an art, or a practical science, or a speculative science. There was also a great diversity of opinion as to the subject-matter of logic, some holding that it had to do with words, others that it treated of the ens rationis, or that which has its existence in thought, and still others that it related to argumentations or some instrument of knowing. In modern times, especially since Kant, the real divergence of conception has been very much greater, one party holding that the main business of logic consists in developing the true theory of the process of cognition, and a second that its chief work is to separate inferences into classes distinguished by their form, while a third maintains that the form and the matter of thought have to be evolved together.

Logike hath eke in his degree
Betwene the trouth and the falshede
The pleyne wordes for to shede.
Gower, Conf. Amant., vii.

He that knoweth reason to be in man, and the same geven by the greate might of God, must nedes confesse the Logique also is in man, and that onely by God. For there is none other difference betwixt the one and thother but that Logique is a Greke worde and Reason is an Englishe woorde. . . . Logique is an arte to reason probably on bothe partes of al matiers that be putte foorth, so ferre as the nature of every thing can beare.
Sir T. Wilson, Rule of Reason (1552).

[Dialectic and organon are generally synonyms of logic, though they have been variously distinguished at different times.]

2. Reasoning, or power of reasoning; ratiocination; argumentation; used absolutely, reason; sound sense.

Ignorance in stilts,
His cap well lined with logic not his own,
With parrot tongue perform'd the scholar's part.
Cowper, Task, ii. 737.

Abstract logic, the general theory of logic (also called logica docens, general and theoretical logic): opposed to concrete logic, or logic as an element of active thought in the prosecution of science (also called logica utens, special and practical logic). The terms logica utens and docens are derived from logicus utens, he who draws conclusions, and logicus docens, he who frames demonstrations. But the corresponding distinction of the branches of science is not very clear, and the terms are often used vaguely and incorrectly.—Acquired logic, or logica docens, the correct knowledge or strictly scientific part of the rules of reasoning, as opposed to logica utens, or the natural faculty of reasoning.—Applied logic, rules for the direction of the understanding under the psychological conditions to which it is subjected; that part of logic which shows how to avoid prejudice, how to escape various erroneous tendencies, etc.—Aristotelian logic. See Aristotelian.—Artificial logic. (a) The acquired habit of distinguishing truth from falsehood; the science, art, or organon of logic: also called acquired logic: opposed to natural logic (a). (b) The science of the necessary rules of thought: also called scientific logic: opposed to natural logic (c).—Calculus of logic. See calculus.—Concrete logic. See abstract logic.—Deductive logic, that branch of logic which takes no account of probability or other quantitative considerations.—Formal logic. See formal.—Habitual logic. See habitual.—Inductive logic, the logic of scientific reasoning.—Material logic, the logic which takes into account either the laws of the process of human cognition or the matter to which the thought is directed.—Natural logic. (a) The natural faculty of distinguishing truth from falsity: also called native logic. (b) The logical doctrine applicable to natural things: opposed to the logic of faith, which is applicable to supernatural things (a distinction used in discussions on the Trinity). (c) An anthropological science which treats of the rules of the natural use of the understanding.—Objective logic. (a) The body of doctrines of which logic is built up: also called systematic logic: opposed to habitual logic, which is any individual's knowledge of those doctrines. (b) The logic of objective thought, or thought as it exists in the external world. (c) The science which expounds the laws by which our scientific procedure should be governed, so far as these lie in the contents, materials, or objects about which our knowledge is conversant. Also called material logic.—Particular logic. See universal logic.—Pure logic, the general laws of thought: opposed to applied or modified logic, the laws of logic applicable to this or that kind of mind as shown in empirical anthropology, such as the doctrine of Bacon concerning idola.—Scientific logic. Same as artificial logic (b).—Subjective logic, the opposite of objective logic in any sense.—Subjectivist logic, or subjectivistically formal logic, a system of logic whose only aim is to give thought a subjective agreement with itself, such, for example, as the system of Mansell: opposed to objectivistic logic, which aims at rules for making or aiding thought to agree with the reality.—To chop logic. See chop[2].—Universal logic, the general logical doctrine applicable to all matter: opposed to particular logic, the doctrine of the application of the formulas of logic to particular cases—for example, to necessary, contingent, probable, and impossible matter.

II. a. Pertaining to God the Son as the Logos or Word of God. [Rare.]

The Fathers, rejecting all savour of a bloody sacrifice, have no scruple of speaking about the Eucharist as a sacrifice in the other sense; they call it a "logic sacrifice" (θυσία λογική), for the Logos is the Word of God, Jesus Christ. Baring-Gould, Our Inheritance, p. 382.

logical (loj'i-kal), a. and n. [< logic + -al.] I. a. 1. Of or pertaining to logic; used or taught in logic: as, logical subtleties.

They are put off by the names of vertues, and natures, and actions, and passions, and such other logicall words. Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 98.

2. According to the principles of logic; so stated or conceived, as an argument, that the form guarantees its validity; unobjectionable from the point of view of logic; consistent: as, logical reasoning; a logical division of a subject; a logical definition.—3. Skilled in logic; furnished with logic; given to considering the processes of reason as to their forms or genera, and critically as to their validity and cogency: applied especially to an analytical mind or a methodical habit.—Logical abecedarium. See abecedarium.—Logical abstraction. See abstraction.—Logical actuality, the satisfying of the principle of sufficient reason.—Logical addition. See addition, 1.—Logical algebra. See algebra.—Logical conviction, intellectual conviction; the settlement of individual belief by reason.—Logical distinctness, the accurate logical analysis of a conception.—Logical division. (a) See division. (b) The division of a genus into species.—Logical induction. See induction, 5.—Logical machine. See machine.—Logical medicine, dogmatic or methodic medicine: opposed to empiric medicine.—Logical moments of judgments, the different modes of uniting representations into one consciousness.—Logical necessity. See necessity.—Logical part†, a species considered relatively to its genus.—Logical perfection, the perspicuity, harmony, and completeness of a science: opposed to material perfection.—Logical possibility, the possibility of that which does not involve contradiction.—Logical presumption, ampliative inference; a scientific induction or hypothesis.—Logical privation, the absence of a form that ought to be in a subject: opposed to physical privation, or the absence of a form that is sometimes in a subject.—Logical reflection, the comparison of concepts.—Logical truth. (a) The truth of a proposition; the agreement of a judgment with the reality. (b) Self-consistency.—Logical whole, a genus considered as having its species as parts. =Syn. 1. Dialectic.—2. Coherent, consistent.—3. Analytical, methodical.

II. n. Used only in the phrase little (small) logicals. These are the logical doctrines of supposition, ampliation, restriction, distribution, the exponibles, consequences, obligations, insolubles, etc.

They [the Utopians] have not devised one of all those rules of restrictions, amplifications, very wittily invented in the small logicals which here our children in every place do learn. Sir T. More, Utopia (tr. by Robinson), ii. 7.

logicality (loj-i-kal'i-ti), n. [< logical + -ity.] The quality of being logical; correctness or consistency of reasoning; logicalness.

logicalization (loj"i-kal-i-zā'shon), n. [< logicalize + -ation.] The act of logicalizing or making logical. [Rare.]

The mere act of writing tends in a great measure to the logicalization of thought. Poe, Marginalia, xvi.

logicalize (loj'i-kal-īz), v. t.; pret. and pp. logicalized, ppr. logicalizing. [< logical + -ize.] To make logical. [Rare.]

Thought is logicalized by the effort at . . . expression. Poe, Marginalia, xvi.

logically (loj'i-kal-i), adv. According to logical principles, or by formally valid inference: as, to argue logically.

logicalness (loj'i-kal-nes), n. The quality of being logical.

logic-chopping (loj'ik-chop"ing), n. Quibbling or sophistical reasoning. See to chop logic, under chop[2], v. t.

logic-fisted†, a. Close-fisted. [Rare.]

One with an open-handed freedom spends all he lays his fingers on; another with a logic-fisted grippingness catches at and grasps all he can come within the reach of. Kennet, tr. of Erasmus's Praise of Folly, p. 87.

logician (lō-jish'an), n. [< logic + -ian.] 1. One who is skilled in logic or in argument; a teacher or professor of logic.

First, like a right cunning and sturdy logician, he denies my argument, not mattering whether in the major or minor. Milton, Colasterion.

Aristotle, who was the best Critick, was also one of the best Logicians that ever appeared in the World. Addison, Spectator, No. 291.

2. In medieval universities, a student of arts in the second class or lection; one who was preparing for the baccalaureate, being above the summulists and below the physicians.

logicianer† (lō-jish'an-ėr), n. [< logician + -er[1].] Same as logician, 1.

There is no good logicioner but would think, I think, that a syllogism thus formed of such a thieving major, a runaway minor, and a traiterous consequent must needs prove at the weakest to such a hanging argument. Patten (Arber's Eng. Garner, III. 137).

logicize (loj'i-sīz), v. i.; pret. and pp. logicized, ppr. logicizing. [< logic + -ize.] To exercise one's logical powers; argue. Also spelled logicise. [Rare.]

Intellect is not speaking and logicising; it is seeing and ascertaining. Carlyle.

logics† (loj'iks), n. [Pl. of logic: see -ics.] The science or principles of logic.

logie (lō'gi), n. [Said to be named from one Logie, its inventor.] An ornament made of zinc or pewter used as theatrical jewelry. [Theatrical slang.]

logist† (lō'jist), n. [< LL. logista, < Gr. λογιστής, a reckoner, an accountant, < λογίζεσθαι, reckon, < λόγος, an account: see Logos.] An expert accountant. Bailey, 1731.

logistic (lō-jis'tik), a. and n. [= F. logistique, < Gr. λογιστικός, skilled in calculating (fem. λογιστική, the art of calculation), < λογιστής, a calculator, < λογίζεσθαι, compute, < λόγος, calculation, proportion: see logic, Logos.] I. a. 1†. Logical. Berkeley.—2. Skilled in or pertaining to computation and calculation.

Plato's dislike of the Sophists extended to the subjects which they taught, and he is on many occasions careful to distinguish the vulgar logistic from the philosophical arithmetic. J. Gow, Hist. Greek Mathematics.

3. Proportional; pertaining to proportions.—Logistic arithmetic. See II.—Logistic line or curve, a curve whose ordinates increase arithmetically while its abscissas increase geometrically. Also called logarithmic curve. See the figure.—Logistic logarithm. See logarithm.—Logistic spiral. Same as logarithmic spiral. See logarithmic.

Logistic Curve.

II. n. (a) The art of calculation, with the fingers, with an abacus, with characters, or otherwise; practical or vulgar arithmetic. (b) Sexagesimal arithmetic.—Specious logistic, the art of calculating by means of geometrical constructions.

logistical (lō-jis'ti-kal), a. [< logistic + -al.] Same as logistic.

logistics (lō-jis'tiks), n. [Pl. of logistic: see -ics.] 1. Same as logistic, especially in sense (b).—2. That branch of military science which relates to the movement and supplying of armies, and all arrangements necessary for and matters connected with the carrying on of campaigns, including the study of present or possible fields of war in their topographical and other relations; according to some, the science of strategy and arms in general.

log-line (log'līn), n. [= Sw. loglina = Dan. logline; as log[2] + line[2].] Naut., a line or cord, from 150 to 200 fathoms in length, fastened to the log-chip by means of three legs of cord, and wound on a reel, called the log-reel. See log[2].

logman (log'man), n.; pl. logmen (-men). 1. A man who carries logs.

The very instant that I saw you, did
My heart fly to your service: . . . for your sake Am I this patient log-man. Shak., Tempest, iii. 1. 67.

2. One employed in cutting and conveying logs to a mill. [Local, U. S.]

log-measurer (log'mezh"ūr-ėr), n. An instrument for gaging logs and reducing the measure in the rough to board-measure, in running feet, after making due allowance for losses in squaring, etc.

logocracy (log-ok'rā-si), n. [< Gr. λόγος, word (see Logos), + κρατεῖν, govern, < κράτος, strength.] Government by the power of words. [Rare.]

In this country every man adopts some particular slang-whanger as the standard of his judgment, and reads everything he writes, if he reads nothing else: which is doubtless the reason why the people of this logocracy are so marvellously enlightened. Irving, Salmagundi, xiv.

logocyclic (log-ō-sik'lik), a. [< Gr. λόγος, ratio, proportion, + κύκλος, circle.] An epithet occurring only in the phrase logocyclic curve, a crunodal circular cubic. It may be constructed by increasing and diminishing the radius vector of a variable point on a straight line by the distance of that point from the point of the line nearest to the origin. The equation of the curve is Logocyclic Curve.

$$(x^2 + y^2)(2a - x) = a^2x.$$

It resembles the folium of Descartes, but has a rounder loop.

logodædaly (log-ō-ded'al-i), n. [< LL. logodædalia, < LGr. λογοδαιδαλία, < Gr. λογοδαίδαλος, skilled in tricking out a speech, < λόγος, word, + δαίδαλος, cunningly wrought: see dedal.] Verbal legerdemain; a playing with words, as by passing from one meaning of them to another. [Rare.]

For one instance of mere logomachy, I could bring ten instances of logodædaly or verbal legerdemain. Coleridge.

logogram (log'ō-gram), n. [< Gr. λόγος, word, + γράμμα, a letter: see grammar.] 1. A word-sign; a single written character, or a combination of characters regarded as a unit, representing a whole word. A logogram may be pictorial—that is, it may be an ideogram, such as the astronomical signs ☉ for the sun and ☾ for the moon; or it may be phonetic in its immediate origin—that is, it may be a single letter or set of letters standing as an abbreviation for the complete word, as c. for cent, s. for shilling; or, lastly, it may be such a letter or set of letters transferred from one language to another, losing its phonetic value, but still representing the same idea, as £ or lb. for the Latin libra, signifying and pronounced pound.

2. A versified puzzle containing synonyms of a number of words derived from a single word by recombining its letters, the solution depending upon the guessing of the derived words from the synonyms, and the discovery from the former of the original word. Thus, from curtain may be derived cur, curt, nut, etc., for which may be used in the puzzle dog, short, shell-fruit, etc.

logograph (log'ō-grāf), n. [< Gr. λόγος, word, + γράφειν, write.] 1. A written word; a character or series of characters representing a word. See logographic, 1, and logography, 1.—2. A word-writer; an instrument for recording spoken sounds.

Barlow has constructed an apparatus for recording the sounds of the human voice, which he calls a logograph. Smithsonian Report, 1880, p. 251.

logographer (lō-gog'ra-fėr), n. [< logography + -er[1].] 1. In anc. Gr. lit., a prose-writer; especially, a historian. Under the name of logographers are commonly classed the early Greek historians before Herodotus. This school of writers began with Cadmus of Miletus, about 550 B. C., and continued for over a century. They wrote in the Ionic dialect, and most of them were Ionians by birth.

2. One who is skilled in logography.

logographic (log-ō-graf'ik), a. [< Gr. λογογραφικός, concerning the writing of speeches, < λογογράφος, a writer of speeches: see logography.] 1. Pertaining to written words; consisting of characters or signs each of which singly represents a complete word.

English is, like Chinese, not alphabetic in its dress, but logographic; and there is no man living, in England or America, who has learned or can learn to read it: that is, to pronounce anything and everything written in it. T. Hill, True Order of Studies, p. 106.

2. Pertaining to logography.

logographical (log-ō-graf'i-kal), a. [< logographic + -al.] Same as logographic.

logographically (log-ō-graf′i-ka̤l-i), adv. In a logographic manner; by means of logography.

The Times is usually dated from the 1st of January 1788, but was really commenced on the 18th January 1785, under the title of The London Daily Universal Register, printed logographically. Encyc. Brit., XVII. 417.

logography (lō-gog′ra̤-fi), n. [= F. logographie, < Gr. λογογραφία, a writing of speeches, prose or historical writing, < λογογράφος, a writer of speeches, a historian or prose-writer, later a secretary or accountant, < λόγος, a speech, + γράφειν, write.] 1. A method of printing in which short words of frequent occurrence, roots, prefixes, suffixes, etc., are cast on single types, called logotypes. It was this system (then patented) that was originally used (from 1785) in printing the newspaper which afterward became the London "Times." Logography was soon abandoned, but there have been attempts to revive it.

2. A method of reporting speeches word for word without the use of stenography, tried in the French National Assembly for two years, 1790–92. It required the employment of twelve or fourteen reporters, each in succession taking down a few words on paper so marked as to show the proper sequence. It was abandoned as cumbrous and liable to great error.

logogriph (log′ō-grif), n. [Also logogriphe, and erroneously logogryph; = F. logogriphe = Sp. It. logografo = Pg. logogripho, < Gr. λόγος, word, + γρίφος, a fishing-basket, a riddle.] A riddle; specifically, a riddle formed by the arbitrary or confused mingling of parts or elements, which have to be recombined in proper order for the answer.

The charade is of recent birth, and I cannot discover the origin of this species of logogriphes.
I. D'Israeli, Curios. of Lit., I. 389.

logomachist (lō-gom′a̤-kist), n. [< logomach-y + -ist.] One who contends about words, or who uses words merely as weapons or instruments of contention.

Nor . . . was Protagoras a shallow logomachist, asserting the difficulties of human knowledge without a profound investigation. J. Owen, Evenings with Skeptics, I. 157.

logomachy (lō-gom′a̤-ki), n. [= F. logomachie = Sp. logomaquia = It. logomachia, < LGr. λογομαχία, war about words, < λογομάχος, a fighter about words, < Gr. λόγος, word (see Logos), + μάχεσθαι, fight, μάχη, a fight.] 1. Contention in words merely, or a contention about words; a war of words.

What terrible battles yclep'd logomachies have they occasioned and perpetuated with so much gall and ink-shed. Sterne, Tristram Shandy, ii. 2.

2. A game played with cards each bearing one letter, with which words are formed.

logomania (log-ō-mā′ni-ä̤), n. [NL., < Gr. λόγος, word (see Logos), + μανία, madness: see mania.] Aphasia in its most general sense.

logometer[1] (lō-gom′e-tėr), n. [NL., < Gr. λόγος, ratio, proportion (see Logos), + μέτρον, measure: see meter[2].] 1. A logarithmic scale. The natural numbers, generally from one power of 10 to another, are laid down at distances along the scale from a fixed point proportional to their logarithms. In Palmer's computing scale, made about 1845, there was a circle turning in its plane in a fixed circle, and the limbs of both were divided logarithmically, the numbers from 100 to 1000 occupying the circumference. It was a very useful instrument. Nystrom's calculator had curves engraved upon a metallic disk, and an arm with graduations on its edge turned about the center of the disk. The "magic square" sold in New York about 1883 was a square divided into square compartments, and was equivalent to a long scale cut up into many equal pieces placed side by side; and the measurement was made by the two edges of a square card or bit of paper. It was cheap and useful.

2. A scale for measuring chemical equivalents.

logometer[2] (log-om′e-tėr), n. [Irreg. < log[2] + Gr. μέτρον, measure: see meter[2].] A patent log for ships.

logometric (log-ō-met′rik), a. [As logometer[1] + -ic; cf. metric.] Of or pertaining to a logometer used in ascertaining or measuring chemical equivalents: as, a logometric scale.

logometrical (log-ō-met′ri-ka̤l), a. [< logometric + -al.] Same as logometric.

Logos (log′os), n. [< L. logos, < Gr. λόγος, that which is said or spoken, a word, saying, speech, also the power of the mind manifested in speech, reason, account, reference, analogy, proportion, ratio, condition, etc., in N. T. ὁ Λόγος, the Reason or Word (as a person) (see def.), < λέγειν, speak, say, tell, = L. legere, read: see legend, lecture. Hence logic, etc.] 1. In theol., the Divine Word; the transcendent Divine Reason as expressed in a distinct personality; the Second Person in the Trinity, both before and after the incarnation: so called as expressing God both to God himself and to his creatures, as language expresses reason and as reason is expressed by language. The word Logos (λόγος) is used by Plato of reason as a manifestation of or emanation from the Supreme Being. Philo Judæus, using ideas and language partly Platonic and partly scriptural, derived especially from the Sapiential books, developed these in a form that suggests the Christian doctrine of the Logos. St. John, especially in the first chapter of his Gospel, first distinctly gives the Christian doctrine, assigning distinct personality to the Logos. Some early Christian writers distinguish between the Logos as immanent (Λόγος ἐνδιάθετος), or the Divine Reason still remaining in the bosom of the Father, and the Logos as uttered (Λόγος προφορικός), or the Word sent forth to the world.

2. In the philosophy of Heraclitus and the Stoics, the rational principle that governs and develops the universe.

Taken broadly, the doctrine of the Logos may be said to have run in two parallel courses — the one philosophical, the other theological; the one the development of the Logos as reason, the other the development of the Logos as word; the one Hellenic, the other Hebrew.
Encyc. Brit., XIV. 803.

Spermatic logos, in the Stoic philos., a principle of generation resident in matter.

logothete (log′ō-thēt), n. [< MGr. λογοθέτης, one who audits accounts, < Gr. λόγος, account (see Logos), + θετός, verbal adj. of τιθέναι, put: see thesis.] 1. Properly, an accountant; hence, an officer of the Byzantine empire, who might be (a) the public treasurer, (b) the head of any administrative department, or (c) the chancellor of the empire. — 2. In the Gr. Ch., the chancellor or keeper of the patriarchal seal of the Patriarch of Constantinople.

logotype (log′ō-tīp), n. [< Gr. λόγος, word (see Logos), + τύπος, an impression: see type.] A type on which are cast the letters of a word or syllable; a single type used in place of several types. See logography, 1.

log-perch (log′pėrch), n. A percoid fish, Percina caprodes, the largest of the fresh-water fishes known in the United States as darters (Etheostominæ). It attains a length of from 6 to 8 inches, and is common in the Great Lakes and southwestern streams. Also called hogfish, hog-molly, and rockfish.

log-reel (log′rēl), n. Naut., a reel on which the log-line is wound. See log[2].

logroll (log′rōl), v. i. [< log-roll-er, log-roll-ing.] To engage in log-rolling in the political sense.

In the Greek epic, the gods are partisans, they hold caucuses, they lobby and log-roll for their candidates.
Lowell, Among my Books, 2d ser., p. 98.

log-roller (log′rō″lėr), n. 1. In a sawmill, a steam-power machine for loading logs upon the saw-carriage. — 2. One of a number of politicians in a legislative body, united by an agreement, implied or expressed, to further each the other's schemes in consideration of a return in kind; a person habitually addicted to political log-rolling. [U. S.]

log-rolling (log′rō″ling), n. 1. A joining of forces for the purpose of handling logs: (a) For rolling the logs into heaps for burning after the trees have been felled to clear the land. Sometimes many neighbors were invited to assist, and a merrymaking followed. (b) In lumbering, for rolling logs into a stream, where they are bound together and floated down to the mills. (c) For collecting logs for building purposes. [U. S. and Canada.]

Other rude pleasures were more truly characteristic of their [Kentuckians'] local environments — the log-rolling and the quilting, the social frolic of the harvesting, the merry parties of flax-pullers, and the corn-husking at nightfall. Harper's Mag., LXXIX. 554.

Hence — 2. Mutual aid given by persons to one another in carrying out their several schemes or gaining their individual ends: used especially of politicians and legislators. [U. S.]

As will be seen subsequently, I do not think that corruption, in its grosser forms, is rife at Washington. When it appears, it appears chiefly in the milder form of reciprocal jobbing or (as it is called) log-rolling.
J. Bryce, American Commonwealth, I. 156.

Another general delusion is the belief in log-rolling. The topic is well worn and needs few remarks. If by log-rolling is meant that reviewers praise people in hopes of being praised in turn, then the taunt is empty. Few people are quite so very mean or so ignorant of human nature as to log-roll in that sense. The American, XVII. 350.

log-scale (log′skāl), n. A table showing the quantity of lumber one inch thick, board-measure, obtainable from a round log, the length and the diameter beneath the bark being given. E. H. Knight.

log-slate (log′slāt), n. Naut., a double slate, marked and ruled on its inner side, like a log-book, on which the log is first recorded. The entries are daily copied from the slate into the log-book. In the United States navy the slate has been replaced by a paper book, so as to preserve the original record.

log-turner (log′tėr″nėr), n. In a sawmill, a machine for moving a log sidewise upon the saw-carriage. It consists of a steam-cylinder with a long piston-rod, the end of which engages and turns the logs.

logwood (log′wu̇d), n. [< log[1] + wood[1]: so called because imported in logs. Cf. barwood.] 1. A tree, Hæmatoxylum Campechianum, found in many parts of the West Indies, where it has been introduced from the adjoining continent, especially from Honduras, on which account it has been called Campeachy wood. It belongs to the family Cæsalpiniaceæ. This tree has a crooked, deformed stem, growing to the height of from 20 to 40 feet, with crooked, irregular branches armed with strong thorns.

2. The wood of this tree. It is of a firm texture and a red color, whence the name bloodwood, and so heavy as to sink in water. It is much used in dyeing, and its coloring matter is derived from a principle called hematoxylin. Logwood contains, besides, resin, oil, acetic acid, salts of potash, a little sulphate of lime, alumina, peroxid of iron, and manganese. It is employed in calico-printing to give a black or brown color, and also in the preparation of some lakes. An extract of logwood is used in medicine as an astringent.

3. The bluewood, Condaliopsis Mucronata. — Bastard logwood, Acacia Berteriana, a tree of Jamaica. — Campeachy logwood. See def. 1. — Logwood-black. See black. — Logwood-blue, a color produced by logwood-extract on wool mordanted with alum and cream of tartar. It is similar in tone to indigo-blue. The same color is produced on cotton mordanted with acetate of copper, but is now seldom used, on account of its fugitive character.

logy (lō′gi), a. [Prob. < D. log, heavy, unwieldy, slow, stupid, akin to E. log[1]. Cf. equiv. loggy.] Heavy; slow; stupid. Bartlett. [Local, U. S.]

lohoch (lō′hok), n. Same as loch[2].

loignet, n. [ME. loigne (also lune, lewne, E. lune, q. v.), < OF. loigne, longe, < ML. longia, longea, < L. longus, long: see long.] A length of cord; specifically, in falconry, a strip of leather attached to the foot of a bird of prey when not secure in its perch.

loimic (loi′mik), a. [Prop. lœmic*, < Gr. λοιμικός, pestilential, < λοιμός, plague.] Pertaining to the plague or to pestilential diseases. Thomas.

loimography (loi-mog′ra̤-fi), n. [Prop. lœmography, < Gr. λοιμός, plague, + -γραφία, < γράφειν, write.] A description or history of the plague or of pestilential diseases. Dunglison; Thomas.

loimology (loi-mol′ō-ji), n. [Prop. lœmology, < Gr. λοιμός, plague, + -λογία, < λέγειν, speak: see -ology.] The sum of human knowledge concerning the plague or concerning plagues or pestilential diseases. Dunglison; Thomas.

loin (loin), n. [Early mod. E. also loyne, Sc. lungie, lunyie; < ME. loine, < OF. logne, longe, loin, F. longe, a loin, as of veal, < LL. lumbea*, fem. (or neut. pl.?) of lumbeus*, adj., < L. lumbus (> It. lombo = Sp. lomo = Pg. lombo = F. lombes, pl.), loin; perhaps = AS. lenden, etc., loin: see lende[1].] The part of an animal which lies between the lowest of the false ribs on each side and the upper part of the ilium or haunch-bone; one of the lateral parts of the lumbar region: commonly used in the plural (often figuratively, with reference to this part of the body being the seat of the generative faculty and a symbol of strength), except as the name of a piece of meat from the lumbar region of an animal, as a loin of veal.

My little finger shall be thicker than my father's loins. . . . My father chastised you with whips, but I will chastise you with scorpions. 1 Ki. xii. 10, 11.

Brave son, derived from honourable loins!
Shak., J. C., ii. 1. 322.

loin-cloth (loin′klôth), n. A piece of stuff, skin, or other material worn as clothing about the loins, or more exactly about the hips.

Loiseleuria (loi-sē-lū'ri-ä), n. [NL. (Desvaux, 1813), named after Loiseleur Deslongchamps, a French botanist.] A genus of ericaceous plants, tribe Phyllodoceæ, characterized by a campanulate corolla, on which the five stamens are inserted, and by having the leaves opposite. There is but one species, L. procumbens, a small, depressed, evergreen, shrubby plant, much branched and tufted, bearing a small cluster of white or rose-colored flowers from a terminal scaly bud. The plant is found on the alpine summits of Europe and North America, and in the arctic regions. It is called alpine or trailing azalea. See azalea, 3.

loiter (loi'tėr), v. [< ME. loitren, < OD. D. leuteren, linger, loiter, trifle; cf. OD. loteren, delay; LG. luderen = G. dial. loddern, lottern, be sluggish; AS. loddere, a beggar, = MLG. lodder = Icel. loddari, a worthless fellow; AS. lodrung, trifling, nonsense, = OHG. lotar, empty, idle, MHG. loter, G. lotter, in comp., loose, worthless, lotter-bube, a worthless fellow; perhaps ult. connected with lout[1].] I. intrans. To linger; be unduly slow in moving; delay; be dilatory; spend time idly.

Where have you been these two days loitering?
Shak., T. G. of V., iv. 4. 48.

=Syn. To lag, tarry, saunter, dilly-dally.

II. trans. To consume or waste, as time, idly or carelessly: used with away: as, he loitered away most of his leisure.

loiterer (loi'tėr-ėr), n. One who loiters; an idler.

Ye lords, I say, that live like loiterers, look well to your office. Latimer, Sermon of the Plough.

loitering (loi'tėr-ing), p. a. 1. Delaying; idle. —2†. Causing delay; inducing idleness.

Let it [a set form of prayer] be granted to some people while they are babes in Christian guifts, were it not better to take it away soone after, as we do loitering books and interlineary translations from children?
Milton, Apology for Smectymnuus.

loiteringly (loi'tėr-ing-li), adv. In a loitering manner; as a loiterer.

loitersack†, n. A lazy loitering fellow.

If the loitersacke be gone springing into a taverne, Ile fetch him reeling out.
Lyly, Mother Bombie. (Halliwell.)

lolion† (lō'li-on), n. [< L. lolium, darnel: see Lolium.] A plant of the genus Lolium; darnel; tares.

They had no pleasure to hear the Scribes and the Pharisees; they stank in their nose; their doctrine was unsavory; it was of lolions, of decimations of aniseed, and cummin, and such gear. Latimer, Works, I. 200.

Lolium (lol'i-um), n. [NL. (Linnæus, 1737), < L. lolium, darnel, cockle, tares.] A genus of grasses of the tribe Hordeeæ, type of the subtribe Loliæ. It is characterized by the several-flowered spikelets, which are in two ranks, alternate sessile, and with their edges facing the axis of the spike. About six species are recognized by modern authors; they are native in Europe, the northern part of Africa, and temperate Asia, but they have been introduced in many other places. L. perenne, the ray- or rye-grass, is a good pasture- or meadow-grass. The best variety is called Italian rye-grass. L. temulentum, the darnel, or bearded darnel, has been supposed to have noxious properties, to which the name temulentum, drunken, alludes. See darnel.

loll (lol), v. [< ME. lollen, lounge, limp about, rest, also flap, wag, < MD. lollen, sit over the fire. Akin to lull: see lull.] I. intrans. 1. To lie or lean at ease; recline or lean idly, or in a careless or languid attitude.

He that lolleth is lame other his leg out of ioynte.
Piers Plowman (C), x. 215.

Folding our hands within our arms, we both lolled upon the counter. Sterne, Sentimental Journey, p. 55.

Fortune is . . . seen . . . as often trundling a wheelbarrow as lolling in a coach and six.
Goldsmith, Citizen of the World, lxx.

Rupert gave her a glance most bewitchingly tender, Loll'd back in his chair, put his toes on the fender.
Barham, Ingoldsby Legends, II. 38.

2. To hang loose and extended, as the tongue protruded from the mouth of a dog or a cow.

His chyn with a chol [jowl] lollede.
Piers Plowman's Crede (E. E. T. S.), l. 224.

He lull'd her on his breast.
North Country Ballads. (Halliwell.)

3. To box (one's ears). [Prov. Eng.]—4†. To utter unctuously.

The sun-shine of the Word, this he extoll'd;
The sun-shine of the Word, still this he loll'd.
Cotgrave, Wits Interpreter (1671), p. 288. (Nares.) loll† (lol), n. [< loll, v.] 1†. One who lounges and lolls about; a loafer.

Then let a knaue be known to be a knaue, . . .
A lobbe a loute, a heavy loll a logge.
Breton, Pasquil's Madcappe, p. 10. (Davies.)

2. A pet; a spoiled child; a child that is much fondled. [Prov. Eng.]

Lollard[1] (lol'ärd), n. [< ME. Lollard (ML. Lollardus), < MD. Lollaerd, one who mumbles prayers and hymns, whence a name applied to a semi-monastic sect in Brabant (see def.), this name being subsequently transferred in English to the followers of Wyclif; with suffix -aerd (E. -ard), < lollen, sing softly, hum: see lull. In form and sense it seems to have been confused in ME. with loller, an idler, a vagabond: see loller.] 1. One of a semi-monastic society for the care of the sick and the burial of the dead, which originated at Antwerp about 1300. Also called Cellite.—2. One of the English followers of Wyclif, adherents of a wide-spread movement, partly political and socialistic, and in some respects anticipating Protestantism and Puritanism, in the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries. They were also called Bible men, from their reverence for the Bible. They differed on some points both among themselves and from Wyclif, but in the main condemned the use of images in churches, pilgrimages to the tombs of saints, the temporal lordship of the clergy, the hierarchical organization, papal authority, religious orders, ecclesiastical decorations, the ceremony of the mass, the doctrine of transubstantiation, waging of wars, and capital punishment. Some of them engaged in seditious proceedings, and they were severely persecuted for more than a hundred years, especially after the adoption of a special statute ("De hæretico comburendo") against them in 1401. Lollards were very numerous at the close of the fourteenth century, and perhaps formed later part of the Lancastrian party in the Wars of the Roses.

lollard[2] (lol'ärd), n. [< loll + -ard, after Lollard[1] and loller.] One who lolls; an idler.

A lollard indeed over his elbow-cushion in almost the seventh part of forty or fifty years teaches them scarce the Principles of Religion. Milton, Touching Hirelings.

Lollardism (lol'ärd-dizm), n. [< Lollard[1] + -ism.] Same as Lollardy.

Lollardist (lol'ärd-dist), a. [< Lollard[1] + -ist.] Pertaining to or characteristic of the Lollards, or of their principles and doctrines.

Lord Salisbury, Sir Thomas Latimer of Braybrooke, and several others had chaplains who were Lollardist preachers. Encyc. Brit., XIV. 811.

Lollardry† (lol'ärd-ri), n. [< ME. lollardrie; < Lollard[1] + -ry.] Same as Lollardy.

I shall do my entier payne and diligence to put awey, cesse, and destruye, all maner heresies and errours, clepid openly lollardries, within my bailly.
English Gilds (E. E. T. S.), p. 417.

Lollardy (lol'ärd-di), n. [< ME. Lollardie; < Lollard[1] + -y[3].] The principles or doctrines of the Lollards.

Causeth for to bringe
This new secte of lollardie.
Gower, Conf. Amant., Prol.

Lollardy was smouldering in secret; the heavy burdens of the nation were wearily borne.
Stubbs, Const. Hist., § 335.

loller (lol'ėr), n. [< ME. loller, lollere; < loll + -er[1].] 1. One who lolls; an idler; a vagabond; a loafer.

For alle that han here hele and here eyen syghte,
And lymes to laborye with, and lolleres lyf vsen,
Lyuen a-gens godes lawe. Piers Plowman (C), x. 103.

One of the fashionable lollers by profession.
Miss Edgeworth, Griselda, xi. (Davies.)

2†. A Lollard. See Lollard[1], etymology and definition.

"I smelle a loller in the wynd," quod he.
Chaucer, Prol. to Shipman's Tale, l. 12.

lolling (lol'ing), p. a. Hanging down; leaning or lying at ease.

It is their common vse to shaue or els to sheare
Their heads, for none in all the land long lolling locks doth weare. Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 387.

lōllingite, n. See loellingite.

lollingly (lol'ing-li), adv. In a lolling manner.

She [Doorga] has four arms, with one of which she carries the skull of a giant; her tongue protrudes, and hangs lollingly from the mouth. Buckle, Civilization, I. ii.

lollipop, n. See lollypop.

lollock (lol'ok), n. [Cf. lolly[1].] A lump or large piece. [Prov. Eng.]

lollop (lol'op), v. i. [< loll, with term. appar. as in dallop, wallop.] To loll or lounge idly; move heavily or be tossed about. [Colloq., Eng.]

Next in lollop'd Sandwich, with negligent grace,
For the sake of a lounge, not for love of a place.
Sir C. H. Williams, Placebook for the Year 1745.

For four long hours, therefore, we lolloped about in the trough of a heavy sea, the sails flapping as the vessel rolled. Lady Brassey, Voyage of Sunbeam, I. i.

lollopy (lol'op-i), a. [< lollop + -y[1].] Given to lounging or lolling. [Colloq., Eng.]

loll-poop (lol'pöp), n. A lazy lounging fellow. [Prov. Eng.]

lollpoop† (lol'pöp), v. i. [< loll-poop, n.] To loll or lounge; act lazily.

And now to view the loggerhead, Cudgell'd and lolpooping in bed.
Homer's Ilias Burlesqu'd (1722). (Nares.)

lolly[1] (lol'i), n. [A dial. word of various trivial applications, esp. in comp., as in lollybanger, lollypop, loblolly, etc.] 1. A lump or lumpish mixture: a sense indicated by the compounds lollybanger, lollypop, loblolly, and the variant lollock.—2. Soft ice ground up by the rubbing of floes together.

lolly[2] (lol'i), n.; pl. lollies (-iz). [Cf. lolly[1].] A titmouse: as, the black-capped lolly, Parus major. [Local, Eng.]

lollybanger (lol'i-bang-ėr), n. Very thick gingerbread enriched with raisins. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

lollypop, lollipop (lol'i-pop), n. [< lolly[1] + pop.] 1. A coarse sweetmeat, made of sugar and treacle, usually with the addition of butter and flour; taffy. [Eng.]

The pallid countenance . . . indicated too surely the irreclaimable and hopeless votary of lollypop—the opium-eater of school-boys. Disraeli, Coningsby, ix.

I would . . . never give those children lollypop, nor pegtop, . . . nor the theatre characters, nor the paint-box to illuminate the same. Thackeray, Lovel the Widower, i.

2. pl. Sweets; bonbons; candies. [Eng.]

"Hard-bake," "almond toffy," "halfpenny lollipops," "black balls," the cheaper "bulls' eyes," and "squibs" are all made of treacle.
Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, I. 215.

Perambulating venders of lollypops and drinks jostled against each other, while gypsies were wending their way in and out telling fortunes.
T. C. Crawford, English Life, p. 163.

loma (lō′mä), n.; pl. lomata (-ma-tä). [NL., < LGr. λῶμα, hem, fringe.] In ornith., a lobe, flap, margin, or fringe bordering the toe of a bird. This membranous bordering may be continuous, constituting the loma continuum, or lobed or scalloped, the loma lobatum. A toe furnished with lomata is called digitus lomatinus.

Lomandra (lō-man′drä), n. [NL. (Labillardière, 1804), so called in allusion to the margins of the circular anthers; < LGr. λῶμα, hem, fringe, + Gr. ἀνήρ (ανδρ-), a male (mod. bot. a stamen).] A genus of monocotyledonous plants of the family Liliaceæ, the type of the tribe Lomandreæ. It is characterized by a very short or creeping rootstock, leafy stems, often branched, and dioecious flowers in paniculate heads or dense spikes, the pistillate with a three-celled ovary containing three ovules. There are 29 species, growing in Australia, one of which has been reported from New Caledonia; all are rush-like herbs, with rigid linear leaves and small flowers. The genus has long been known by the name Xerotes given to it by Robert Brown in 1810, which has to give way under the rule of priority.

Lomandreæ (lō-man′drē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Labillardière, 1804), < Lomandra + -eæ.] A tribe of monocotyledonous plants of the family Liliaceæ. It is characterized by having the segments of the perianth glume-like or membranous, or the inner set small and petaloid, and versatile anthers attached at the back. The tribe includes 4 genera, of which Lomandra is the type, and 43 species, all but one confined to Australia. This group was formerly placed in the family Juncaceæ, as allied to the rushes, but the latest revisions indicate a closer affinity with the lily family.

Lomaria (lō-mā′ri-ä), n. [NL. (Willdenow, 1809), < LGr. λῶμα, hem, fringe, + -aria.] A name given to certain polypodiaceous ferns, having the sori linear in a continuous band next the midrib of the pinnæ in the fertile frond, the indusium formed of the revolute margin of the frond, and the fronds dimorphous. They are to be referred for the most part to the genera Stegania and Struthiopteris. See hard-fern.

lomarioid (lō-mā′ri-oid), a. [< Lomaria + -oid.] Pertaining to or having the characteristics of Lomaria.

lomastome (lō′ma-stōm), n. and a. [< LGr. λῶμα, hem, fringe, + στόμα, mouth.] I. n. In conch., a member of any one of several different groups of Helicidæ, as Helix carascalensis, H. metaformis, etc., having the peristome reflected.

II. a. Having a reflected lip or border of the peristome, as a snail.

lomata, n. Plural of loma.

lomatine (lō′ma-tin), a. [< LGr. λῶμα, hem, fringe: see loma.] Margined, fringed, or lobate, as the toes of a bird. See loma. Coues.

Lombard[1] (lom′bärd, formerly lum′bärd), n. and a. [Early mod. E. also Lumbard; < ME. Lombard, Lumbard, < OF. Lombard, Lombart, F. Lombard = Sp. Pg. It. Lombardo (ML. Lombardus, after Rom.), a Lombard (in OF. and ME. usually a Lombard or any Italian trading in France or England), < L. Longobardus, Langobardus, usually in pl. Longobardi, Langobardi, Gr. Λαγγόβαρδοι, Λαγγίβαρδοι, Λογγίβαρδοι, a people of northern Germany west of the Elbe, who are mentioned by Tacitus, and who in later times established themselves in the northern part of Italy, called thence Lombardy; appar. 'Long-beards' (AS. Langbeardas, Icel. Langbardhar), < OTeut. (OHG.) lang, = E. long, + bart = E. beard. Some take the second element to be MHG. barte, an ax (the same as the second element of halberd, q. v.). See also quot. from Smith's Class. Dict. Hence Lombard[2].] I. n. A native or an inhabitant of Lombardy in Italy; more specifically, a member of the Germanic tribe (Longobards) who about A. D. 568, under Alboin, conquered the part of northern Italy still called Lombardy, and founded the kingdom of that name, which was afterward extended over a much larger territory, and was finally overthrown by Charlemagne in 774.

Paulus Diaconus, who was a Lombard by birth, derives their name of Longobardi from their long beards; but modern critics reject this etymology, and suppose the name to have reference to their dwelling on the banks of the Elbe, inasmuch as Börde signifies in Low German a fertile plain on the bank of a river, and there is still a district in Magdeburg called the lange Börde. Smith's Class. Dict.

II. a. Of or pertaining to Lombardy or the Lombards.

And stern and sad (so rare the smiles
Of sunlight) look'd the Lombard piles.
Tennyson, The Daisy.

Lombard as applied to any art is an absolute misnomer, if supposed to be derived from the barbarous tribes who crossed the Alps under Albonius, . . . since they, like the Goths, were ignorant and unlettered. It was not because the new style of architecture, which sprang up in Italy during their dominion, originated with them, that the name of Lombard was applied to the manner of building then prevalent, but because the greater part of the southern as well as the northern Italian provinces were comprehended under the name of Lombardy.
C. C. Perkins, Italian Sculpture, Int., p. x.

Lombard architecture, the local form which the Romanesque style of architecture assumed in the north of Italy, characteristic of the buildings erected from the end of the sixth to the beginning of the thirteenth century, and constituting a connecting-link between the Roman architecture of Italy and the medieval styles of more northern countries. The style was molded particularly by Byzantine influences, but was not unmodified by the northern intellectual element brought in by the Lombardic conquerors. A feature of the early Lombard architecture is the artistic development of the vault, that constructive member which was destined to become the formative principle of medieval styles in general. In Lombard monuments, pillars consisting of several shafts arranged round a central mass, and buttresses of small projection, appear to have been employed very early. The use of the dome to surmount the junction of the choir, nave, and transepts is frequent.

Lombard[2] (lom′bärd, formerly lum′bärd), n. [Early mod. E. also Lumbard (> lumber[3], q. v.); < ME. lumbard = OD. lombaerd, a broker, lombaerde, a broker's shop, < OF. lombard, a broker, lombarde, a broker's shop: so called from the numerous Lombards or Italians in England who were engaged in money-lending: see Lombard[1]. Cf. lumber[3].] 1†. A banker or money-broker or -lender. The Lombards were the original occupants of Lombard Street, now the financial center of London, the name of which is used to signify in general the London money-market. The bankers of London who were Lombards or Italians by race continued to be recruited by immigration till the time of Queen Elizabeth, when most of them returned to Italy.

This marchant, which that was ful war and wys,
Creanced hath and payd eek in Parys
To certein Lumbardes redy in hir hond
The somme of gold, and hadde of hem his bond.
Chaucer, Shipman's Tale, l. 367.

At an early period the leadership of the Lombards was for a while assumed by the Corsini, a noble family of Florence. F. Martin, Hist. of Lloyd's, p. 21.

2†. [l. c.] A bank for loans; a broker's shop; a pawnbroker's shop. See lumber[3].

A Lombard unto this day signifying a bank for usury or pawns. Fuller, Ch. Hist., III. v. 10. (Davies.)

The royal treasure he exhausts in pride and riot; the jewels of the Crown are in the Lumbard.
E. Fannant, Hist. Edw. II., p. 27.

This suit was made up for a noble lord on the last birthday, and conveyed thither (to a lombard) the very next morning after it had appeared at court.
The Connoisseur, No. 117.

Hence—3. [l. c.] A public institution for lending money to the poor at a moderate interest on articles deposited and pledged; a mont-de-piété.—Lombard Street to a China orange, very long odds, as in a wager.

"It is Lombard-Street to a China Orange," quoth Uncle Jack. "Are the odds in favour of fame against failure really so great?" . . . answered my father.
Bulwer, Caxtons, iv. 3.

lombard[3]†, n. [ML. lumbardus, prob. so called with reference to Lombardy (see Lombard[1]). It could be a "corruption" of bombard only by misprint.] Milit., a cannon of heavy caliber in the later middle ages and in the sixteenth century: probably derived from northern Italy.

Lombardeer† (lom-bär-dēr′), n. [< Lombard[2] + -eer.] A Lombard or broker.

They are tolerated for advantage of Commerce, wherein the Jews are wonderful dexterous, tho' most of them be only Brokers and Lombardeers. Howell, Letters, I. i. 38.

lombard-house† (lom′bärd-hous), n. Same as lombard[2], 3.

Lombardic (lom-bär′dik), a. and n. [= F. Lombardique = Sp. Lombárdico = Pg. It. Lombardico, < ML. Lombardicus, < Lombardus, Lombard: see Lombard[1].] I. a. Pertaining to or characteristic of Lombardy or of the Lombards; in art, of or pertaining to the school of Lombardy.

Correggio, uniting the sensual element of the Greek schools with their gloom, and their light with their beauty, and all these with the Lombardic colour, became . . . the captain of the painter's art as such.
Ruskin, Lectures on Art.

Lombardic architecture. See Lombard architecture, under Lombard[1], a.—Lombardic school, in painting, the school including the kindred styles of the cities of Lombardy, and chiefly of Milan, during the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries. The manner of the Lombard painters was, in general, somewhat cold; but they displayed great facility and much fertility and grace. The greatest names of the school are those of Andrea Mantegna (1431–1506), early established at Mantua, and Leonardo da Vinci (1452–1519), the universal genius; while Bernardino Luini (about 1465–1540), the delightful artist and follower of Leonardo, must not be forgotten. The famous Correggio (1494–1534) of Parma had not so wide a reputation during his lifetime, and may be regarded in some respects as an isolated genius.—Lombardic script. See II.

II. n. A particular type of writing derived from the Roman cursive, and retaining many of the features of the older majuscule and uncial. It is characteristic of the greater number of Italian manuscripts dating from the seventh to the thirteenth century.

Lombardy poplar. See poplar.

lome[1]†, n. An obsolete form of loom[1]. Palsgrave.

lome[2]† (lōm), adv. [ME., < AS. gelōme = OHG. gilōmo, often. Cf. loom[1].] Frequently.

For in here liknesse oure lorde lome hath be knowe;
Witnesse in the Paske-woke when he zeode to Emaus.
Piers Plowman (C), xiii. 121.

loment (lō′ment), n. [ME. loment, < L. lomentum, a mixture of bean-meal and rice used as a cosmetic, also a blue color (NL. a loment), < lavare, pp. lautus, lotus, wash: see lave[2].] 1†. A mash or mixture.

The wynes browne eschaungeth into white
Yf that me putte in it lomente of bene.
Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 200.

2. In bot., a legume which at maturity breaks up by transverse articulations into one-seeded indehiscent joints. See legume, 2.

Loment.—The Fruits of Meibomia canescens.

lomenta, n. Plural of lomentum.

Lomentaceæ (lō-men-tā′sē-ē), n. pl. [NL., fem. pl. of lomentaceus: see lomentaceous.] A former subfamily of the Brassicaceæ, the siliqua of which resembles a lomentum. These plants are now placed in the tribe Sinapeæ. Lomentaceæ was applied by Linnæus in 1792 to those leguminous plants which do not have papilionaceous flowers, equivalent to the families Mimosaceæ and Cæsalpiniaceæ.

lomentaceous (lō-men-tā′shius), a. [< NL. lomentaceus, resembling a loment, < lomentum, a loment: see loment.] Resembling or being a loment; bearing loments; belonging to the Lomentaceæ.

Lomentaria (lō-men-tā′ri-ä), n. [NL. (Lyngbye, 1819), < lomentum, a legume (with constricted joints), + -aria.] A small genus of red seaweeds, of the family Rhodymeniaceæ, having filamentous, branching, hollow fronds with constricted joints formed of one or more layers of roundish-angular cells, with a few longitudinal filaments in the center, tripartite tetraspores, and external sessile cystocarps.

Lomentariaceæ (lō-men-tā-ri-ā′sē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Payer, 1850), < Lomentaria + -aceæ.] The same, or nearly the same, as Lomentarieæ.

Lomentarieæ (lō″men-tā-rī′ē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Agardh, 1851), < Lomentaria + -eæ.] A former tribe of red seaweeds, placed by Farlow in the suborder Rhodymenieæ, and typified by the genus Lomentaria. The boundaries of this tribe, as in nearly all the Rhodymenieæ, were ill-defined, and further study has resulted in their separation. The genus Lomentaria is now included in the subfamily Rhodymenieæ, of the family Rhodymeniaceæ.

lomentum (lō-men′tum), n.; pl. lomenta (-tä). [NL.: see loment.] Same as loment, 2.

lomere†, v. i. Same as lumber[1].

lomi-lomi (lō′mi-lō-mi), n. [Hawaiian lomi-lomi, v., redupl. of lomi, rub with the hand.] The massage or shampooing process of the Sandwich Islanders.

lomonite (lō′mon-īt), n. See laumontite.

lompt, n. An obsolete form of lump[1].

lomper (lom′pėr), v. i. [Cf. lump[1], lumber[1].] 1. To idle. [Prov. Eng.]—2. To walk heavily. [Prov. Eng.] Halliwell.

lompish†, a. An obsolete form of lumpish.

Lomvia (lom′vi-ä), n. [NL., also Lomwia, from a Faroese form of loom[3].] 1. A genus of three-toed web-footed swimming and diving birds of the auk family, Alcidæ; the murres or foolish guillemots. There are several species; the best-known is L. troile, of which the spectacled guillemot, L. rhingvia, is a variety. The arc or arrie is a thick-billed guillemot of the North Pacific, L. arra. The corresponding form of the North Atlantic is Brünnich's guillemot, L. bruennichi. See Uria.

2. [l. c.] A species of the genus Lomvia; a murre or guillemot.

lon. An abbreviation of longitude.

Lonchæa (long-kē'ạ), n. [NL. (Fallen, 1820), < Gr. λόγχη, a spear-head, spear, lance: see lance[1].] The typical genus of Lonchæidæ. They are small, thick, metallic flies, with a strongly protruding ovipositor in the female. The larvæ feed under the bark of the stems and roots of small plants. More than 30 European and 6 North American species are known, L. polita being one of the latter.

Lonchæidæ (long-kē'i-dē), n. pl. [NL. (Osten-Sacken, 1878), < Lonchæa + -idæ.] A family of Diptera, allied to Ortalidæ, chiefly characterized by the wing-venation, and containing the genera Lonchæa and Palloptera.

Loncheres (long-kē'rēz), n. [NL., < Gr. λογχήρης, armed with a spear, < λόγχη, a spear (see lance[1]), + √ ἀρ, fit: see arm[1].] A South American genus of hystricomorphic rodents of the family Octodontidæ and subfamily Echinomyinæ, having the fur usually mixed with flattened spines. The spiny rats, L. cristata and L. picta, are two prettily marked species, the former with a snowy crest and tail-tip.

Lonchitideæ (long-ki-tid'ē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Lonchitis (Lonchitid-) + -eæ.] A section of ferns proposed by Presl in 1836, typified by the genus Lonchitis. It is now abandoned, and the genus is placed in the tribe Pterideæ.

Lonchitis (long-kī'tis), n. [NL., < L. lonchitis, a spear, < Gr. λογχῖτις, the tongue-shaped or lance-shaped stander-grass, < λόγχη, a spear, lance: see lance[1].] A small genus of polypodiaceous ferns, typifying the section Lonchitideæ of Presl, and closely allied to the genus Pteris. The fronds are strong, erect, deltoid, and tripinnatifid, and the sori are marginal and covered by an indusium as in Pteris.

Lonchocarpeæ (long-kō-kär'pē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Lonchocarpus + -eæ.] A subtribe of leguminous plants, typified by the genus Lonchocarpus, belonging to the tribe Dalbergieæ, and distinguished by the generally opposite leaves and the transversely or laterally affixed, not pendulous, seeds. It embraces 11 genera of tropical trees and shrubs.

Lonchocarpus (long-kō-kär'pus), n. [NL. (Humboldt, Bonpland, and Kunth, 1823), < Gr. λόγχη, a spear, lance, + καρπός, fruit.] A genus of leguminous plants of the tribe Dalbergieæ, the type of the subtribe Lonchocarpeæ. It is distinguished by having the wings adhering to the keel of the flowers, and by the flat membranaceous or coriaceous pod with the superior suture transversely nerved but not winged at the back. The species are about 100 in number, including trees and shrubs. Most of them are found in tropical America, a few in tropical Africa, and one in Australia. L. latifolius of tropical America is called bitchwood. L. Blackii, a tall woody climber of Queensland and New South Wales, is called lancepod. Some species are ornamental.

Lonchoptera (long-kop'tẹ-rạ), n. [NL. (Meigen, 1824), < Gr. λόγχη, a spear, lance, + πτερόν, a wing, = E. feather.] The typical genus of Lonchopteridæ. They are small delicate flies of yellow-brown or gray color, characterized by the lanceolation and venation of the wings, abounding on stones along shady watercourses. About 20 European species are known, two of which are also found in North America.

Lonchopteridæ (long-kop-ter'i-dē), n. pl. [NL. (Macquart, 1835), < Lonchoptera + -idæ.] A family of dichætous dipterous insects, typified by the only genus, Lonchoptera, having the wings acutely pointed and without a median cross-vein.

Lonchopteris (long-kop'tẹ-ris), n. [NL. (Brongniart, 1828), < Gr. λόγχη, a spear, lance, + πτερίς, a fern.] A genus of fossil ferns in which the pinnules have a very distinct median nerve and a reticulated lateral venation. It embraces about 30 species, found in the coal-measures of Europe, and in those of Cape Breton and of China, but is also found in the Wealden of England and Belgium and in the Cretaceous of Westphalia. The older Mesozoic (Rhetic) beds of Virginia and North Carolina also contain it. The Mesozoic species are probably distinct generically from the Paleozoic ones, and as the genus was founded on one of the former it should be restricted to them.

Londenoyst†, n. [ME., < OF. (AF.) Londenois; as London + -ese, the form Londonese being also in recent use.] A Londoner; one born in London. Chaucer.

London board. See board.

London clay. A geological formation of importance in southeastern England, and especially at and near London, whence the name. It belongs to the lower division of the Eocene Tertiary, being separated from the Cretaceous by the Woolwich, Reading, and Thanet beds. The London clay has a maximum thickness of about 500 feet, and seems to have been laid down near the mouth of a large estuary of the sea, into which relics of the vegetation and fauna of the adjacent land were swept. The thickness of the clay under the city of London varies with the amount of erosion which has taken place in the scooping out of the valley of the Thames. The full thickness of the formation is preserved under the outliers of the Bagshot sand which occurs in various places near the city, especially at Hampstead and Highgate.

Londoner (lun'dun-ėr), n. [< ME. Londonere (?), < London, < AS. Lunden, also Lundenburh (burh, > E. borough), Lundenceaster (ceaster, > E. chester), Lundenwīc (wīc, > E. wich), < L. Londinium, of Celtic origin.] A native or citizen of London in England.

The King by Proclamation calls the Londoners to Westminster, and there causeth the Bishops of Worcester and Chichester to declare his Intentions.
Baker, Chronicles, p. 83.

Londonese (lun-dun-ēs' or -ēz'), a. and n. [< London + -ese. Cf. Londenoys. The AS. form was Lundenisc.] I. a. Pertaining to London in England, or to its peculiarities of speech; cockney.

II. n. English as spoken in London; especially, cockney speech.

Londonism (lun'dun-izm), n. [< London + -ism.] A mode of speaking, acting, or behaving peculiar to London.

Londonize (lun'dun-īz), v.; pret. and pp. Londonized, ppr. Londonizing. [< London + -ize.] I. trans. To invest with some attribute characteristic of London or the people of London.

II. intrans. To adopt or imitate the manners or the fashions of Londoners.

London paste. See paste.

London-pride (lun'dun-prīd), n. 1. A British plant, Saxifraga umbrosa, common in cottage-gardens. Also called none-so-pretty and St. Patrick's cabbage.—2. The sweet-william, Dianthus barbatus. Also called London-tuft. [Old or local.]

London purple. See purple.

London-rocket (lun'dun-rok″et), n. A plant, Sisymbrium Irio, which grows in waste places throughout Europe, and was formerly common in the neighborhood of London, first appearing just after the great fire of 1666.

London smoke, sprat, white, etc. See smoke, etc.

London-tuft (lun'dun-tuft), n. Same as London-pride, 2.

lone[1] (lōn), a. [By apheresis from alone, as live[2] from alive; lone[1] and live[2] being used attributively, while the full form, orig. a prep. phr., is used in the predicate.] 1. Being unaccompanied; apart from any other; solitary; lonely; isolated: as, a lone traveler; a lone house.

Enid, the pilot star of my lone life. Tennyson, Geraint.

3. Lonely; secluded; unfrequented. [Rare or poetical.]

In some lone isle, or distant Northern land.
Pope, R. of the L., iv. 154.

Lone hand, in the game of euchre, one person playing against all the others, or against his opponents without aid from his own side.—Lone star. See star.

lone[2] (lōn), n. [< ME. lone, a var. of lane: see lane[1].] A lane. Also loan. [Prov. Eng.]

lone[3]†, n. A Middle English form of loan[1].

loneliness (lōn'li-nes), n. 1. The condition of being lonely; solitariness; want of society or human interest: as, the loneliness of a hermit's cave.

There's nothing left to fancy's guess,
You see that all is loneliness.
Scott, Marmion, ii., Int.

2. The sense of being alone or lonely; dejection from want of companionship or sympathy; forlornness.

Uphold me, Father, in my loneliness.
Tennyson, Enoch Arden.

A feeling of oppressive loneliness comes over the spirit as the eye ranges across that voiceless wilderness.
O'Donovan, Merv, xx.

3†. Love of retirement; preference for solitude.

Now I see
The mystery of your loneliness.
Shak., All's Well, i. 3. 177.

=Syn. Lonesomeness, Retirement, etc. See solitude.

lonely (lōn'li), a. [< lone[1] + -ly[1]; strictly, by apheresis from alonely.] 1. Unfrequented by men; solitary; desolate: as, a lonely situation.

So lonely 'twas, that God himself Scarce seemèd there to be.
Coleridge, Ancient Mariner, vii.

2. Lacking association or companionship; solitary; standing apart physically or mentally.

Or let my lamp, at midnight hour,
Be seen in some high lonely tower.
Milton, Il Penseroso, l. 86.

3. Sad or dejected from want of companionship or sympathy; forsaken; forlorn.

I never saw a more unforgetable face—pale, serious, lonely. Dr. J. Brown, Rab and his Friends.

Why should I feel lonely? . . . What sort of space is that which separates a man from his fellows?
Thoreau, Walden, p. 144.

Right thro' his manful breast darted the pang
That makes a man, in the sweet face of her Whom he loves most, lonely and miserable.
Tennyson, Geraint.

=Syn. 1. Lone, unfrequented, secluded, dreary.—2. Lonesome, companionless.

loneness (lōn'nes), n. The state of being single or alone; seclusion; solitariness.

Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 3805.

4. Having duration or extent in time; lasting in continuance: following a term of measurement or reckoning, or used relatively: as, a discourse an hour long; the longest day of the year.

It cannot be long before we lie down in darkness, and have our light in ashes. Sir T. Browne, Urn-burial, v.

5. Drawn out in duration; having unusual continuance; lasting; prolonged, as time, succession, etc.: as, long hours of labor; long illness; a long line of descendants; a long note.

When they make a long blast with the ram's horn, . . . all the people shall shout. Josh. vi. 5.

My Lord Chancellor Bacon is lately dead of a long languishing weakness. Howell, Letters, I. iv. 8.

Long health, long youth, long pleasure — and a friend.
Pope, To Mrs. Martha Blount.

Specifically — (a) In pros., greater in duration (technically called quantity) than the unit of time, or so regarded. A long vowel, or sometimes a vowel in a long syllable, is marked as such by a straight line above it, thus, ā. In ancient orthoëpy and prosody a long vowel is regarded as consisting regularly of the sum of two similar short vowels, thus, ā = ă + ă, and a diphthong is also necessarily long as the sum of two dissimilar short vowels, thus, au = ă + ŭ. In either case, if either element is already long, the excess is not counted. See the phrases long by nature and long by position, below, and II. (b) In Eng. orthoëpy, noting one of the two or more principal pronunciations of each of the five true vowels, a, e, i, o, u, exemplified in the words fate, mete, site, note, mute, usually marked for pronunciation, as in this work, ā, ē, ī, ō, ū: opposed to the short sounds of the same letters in fat, met, sit, not, nut, frequently marked as ă, ĕ, ĭ, ŏ, ŭ, but left unmarked in this work. The two sounds of the same letter now called long and short do not, for the most part, phonetically correspond to each other; but short is used specifically to note the more frequently employed of the shorter sounds of a certain letter, and long, by a similar limitation, for the more usual among the longer sounds of the same letter in our established orthography.

6. Far-reaching; far-seeing: as, a long look ahead.

Thus proving in his bud maturely sage,
And long in Wisdom, e'er in years of age.
J. Beaumont, Psyche, i. 82.

The perennial existence of bodies corporate and their fortunes are things particularly suited to a man who has long views. Burke.

7. Happening or occurring after a protracted interval; much delayed or postponed.

Death will not be long in coming. Ecclus. xiv. 12.

He stopped me, as I made for the staircase, to extort a promise that I would not be long: nor was I long: in five minutes I rejoined him. Charlotte Brontë, Jane Eyre, xxv.

8. Seeming prolonged; tedious; wearisome: as, long hours of waiting.

The weary night was longer yet
Than was the day, and harder to forget
The thoughts that come therewith.
William Morris, Earthly Paradise, III. 151.

A long bit, a long chalk. See the nouns. — A long day, a far-off time; extended postponement; long suspense or respite. — A long dozen, one more than a dozen; thirteen. See bakers' dozen, under baker. — A long face, a face wearing an expression of sadness or solemnity: so called from the drawing down of the facial lines. — A long figure, a high price; a large sum. [Colloq. or slang.] — A long head, a mind characterized by sagacity, foresight, and shrewdness with caution. — A long row to hoe. See *hoe*1. — A long tongue, a tongue given to tedious or mischievous loquacity.

Get you gone, sirrah;
And what you have seen be secret in; you are paid else;
No more of your long tongue.
Fletcher, Wildgoose Chase, v. 4.

As broad as long. See broad. — At the long last, in the end, however far off; finally.

Human nature, which, at the long last, is always to blame. Lowell, Study Windows, p. 131.

Before long, before a long time has elapsed; shortly; soon: as, I shall see him before long. — Common long meter. See common. — Cut and long tail†. See cut, p. a. — Ere long. Same as before long, but commonly used of a shorter interval: as, ere long the storm became furious. — For long, for or during a long time, absolutely or comparatively.

For long agone I have forgot to court;
Besides, the fashion of the time is changed.
Shak., T. G. of V., iii. 1. 85.

O love, I have not seen you for so long.
Tennyson, Lover's Tale, iv.

In the long run. See run. — Long appoggiatura. See appoggiatura. — Long bob, a kind of peruke worn about the middle of the eighteenth century. — Long bone, in anat., one of the elongated and cylindric bones of the limbs, as a humerus or femur. In a former classification bones were distinguished as long, short, flat, and irregular. — Long by nature, in anc. pros., noting a syllable long or prolonged in utterance by virtue of its containing a long vowel, or the equivalent of this in time, a diphthong, whether followed by two or more consonants or not. See nature. — Long by position, in anc. pros., noting a syllable containing a short vowel immediately followed by two or more consonants or by a double consonant. The vowel remains short in pronunciation, but the time of the syllable is prolonged by the delay occasioned by the enunciation of the consonants. See position. — Long chop. See *chop*1, 2. — Long clam. (a) The common clam, Mya arenaria, and related species: so called in distinction from round clams, as species of Venus, Mactra, etc. (b) The razorshell, Ensis americana. — Long clay, cloth, clothes, division. See the nouns. — Long dress, in female apparel, a skirt descending to the feet: as, a girl not yet in long dresses. — Long drum, an old name of the bass drum. See *drum*1. — Long feeler. See feeler. — Long flax. See flax. — Long float. See float, 9. — Long haul, short haul, phrases in railroad use to express the relative length of transportation, in connection with the amount of charges for the respective services. The long- and short-haul clause of the Interstate Commerce Act of the United States provides that "it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act to charge or receive any greater compensation in the aggregate for the transportation of passengers or of like kind of property, under substantially similar circumstances and conditions, for a shorter than for a longer distance over the same line, in the same direction, the shorter being included in the longer distance; but this shall not be construed as authorizing any common carrier within the terms of this act to charge and receive as great compensation for a shorter as for a longer distance." The Interstate Commerce Commission have power to grant relief from this restriction under circumstances which would make it unjust to the carrier. — Long home, hundred, isinglass. See the nouns. — Long lay, a small proportion in the profits of a whaling-voyage accruing to certain members of the crew, such as the foremast-hands, etc.: opposed to short lay. See *lay*1, 6. — Long measure, meter, mordent, odds. See the nouns. — Long of stock or of stocks, well supplied with a stock or stocks, as a broker or stock-speculator; holding a stock, or contracts for the purchase of a stock, for a rise, as a bull in the stock-market. — Long particular meter. See *meter*2. — Long pig, the literal rendering by English sailors of the term applied to a corpse by the Fiji cannibals.

The expression long pig is not a joke, nor a phrase invented by Europeans, but one frequently used by the Fijians, who looked upon a corpse as ordinary butcher meat, and called a human body puaka balava, long pig, in contradistinction to puaka dina, or real pig.
St. Johnston, Camping among Cannibals.

Long rest. See long-rest. — Long robe, roll, etc. See the nouns. — Long straight†, stretched out; at length.

He rist hym up and long streight he hire leide.

II. n. 1. Something that has length; also, the full extent: used in some elliptical expressions, as in English universities for the long vacation, and in the phrase the long and the short of it.

Six weeks were to elapse before the Long commenced.
F. W. Farrar, Julian Home, p. 184.

In the vacations, particularly the Long, there is every facility for reading.
C. A. Bristed, English University, p. 105.

2. In pros., a long time or syllable. In ancient prosody a long is a time greater than a short, or a syllable requiring a perceptibly greater time to pronounce than is required by a short. A short, comparable to an eighth-note in modern music, being assumed as the mora or unit of time, the regular or normal long is equivalent to two shorts, and is comparable to a quarter-note in music, consuming twice the time in pronunciation required by the regular or normal short, and resolvable under certain conditions into two shorts, just as two shorts may be contracted into one long. Thus, an iambus, or short followed by a long, may appear as a tribrach or three shorts; and a dactyl, or long followed by two shorts, is generally interchangeable with a spondee — that is, a long followed by another long. Besides the normal (dichronous or disemic) long, ancient writers also recognize longs equivalent to three, four, and five shorts, called trichronous (trisemic), tetrachronous (tetrasemic), and pentachronous (pentasemic) longs respectively, as well as others, called irrational, which can only be expressed fractionally: for instance, 1½ shorts. Such a long (one of 1½ more) could be used to represent a short. In ancient pronunciation the syllabic accent was a matter more of pitch or tone than of stress, and the metrical accent (ictus or beat) was independent of it, and regularly fell on a syllable long in time. In modern languages a difference between shorts and longs in actual time of utterance exists to a greater or less degree, but is partially or wholly subordinated to syllabic accent, which is principally or altogether a matter of stress. The ictus in modern poetry regularly coincides with this syllabic stress, and in this accordingly a long is a syllable taking the stress, or ictus, without regard to the time occupied in pronunciation.

"I have seen some longs and shorts [i. e. some verses] of Hittall's," said I, "about the Calydonian Boar, which were not bad." M. Arnold, Friendship's Garland, vi.

The average long would occupy rather less than twice the time of the average short. J. Hadley, Essays, p. 264.

3. In medieval musical notation, a note equivalent in time-value either to three or to two breves, according as the rhythm was "perfect" or "imperfect." Its form was  — Per long, in her., longer than usual: said generally of a part of a bearing: as, a label with lambeaux per long; a cross fitché per long, in which the sharpened point is prolonged. — The long and the short, or the short and the long, the sum of a matter in a few words; the length and the breadth; the whole: with of.

For I am small,
My wife is tall,
And that's the short and long of it!
Hood, Paired, not Matched.

Latreille included Tmesisternus in the latter, and also appended a third tribe, Lamiariæ (Lamia, Saperda, etc.), and a fourth, Lepturetæ (Leptura, etc.).

Longicornia (lon-ji-kôr'ni-ȧ), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of longicornis, long-horned: see longicorn.] A group of tetramerous Coleoptera, having long filiform antennæ, sometimes several times longer than the body; the longicorns or longicorn beetles. In a few forms the antennæ are pectinate, serrate, or flabelliform. More than 12,000 species are described, among them many large and beautiful beetles. They inhabit woods, where the females deposit their eggs beneath the bark of trees by means of a long, tubular, horny ovipositor, with which the abdomen ends. The larvæ are very destructive to wood, boring it deeply, and often making their burrows in every direction. Some of them attack the roots of plants. The longicorn beetles are very generally dispersed, but the greatest number of species and the largest forms are found in South America and western Africa. The leading families are the Lamiidæ, Cerambycidæ, Lepturidæ, and Prionidæ.

Longilingues (lon-ji-ling'gwēz), n. pl. [NL., < L. longus, long, + lingua, tongue.] In Sundevall's classification of birds, a synonym of Mellisugæ.

longimanous (lon-jim'a-nus), a. [< LL. longimanus (tr. Gr. μακρόχειρ, as an epithet of Artaxerxes), long-handed, < L. longus, long, + manus, hand.] In zoöl., having long hands; long-handed, as an ape.

longimetric (lon-ji-met'rik), a. [< longimetr-y + -ic.] Pertaining to measurement along a line.—Longimetric function, the function to which a goniometric function reduces when one of the angles of the triangle becomes zero or 180°.

longimetry (lon-jim'e-tri), n. [= F. longimétrie = Sp. longimetría = Pg. It. longimetria, < L. longus, long, + Gr. μέτρον, measure.] The art or practice of measuring distances or lengths, whether accessible or inaccessible.

longing (lông'ing), n. [Verbal n. of long[1], v.] 1. An eager desire; an earnest wish or craving.

Put on my crown; I have Immortal longings in me. Shak., A. and C., v. 2. 284.

I shall review Sicilia, for whose sight
I have a woman's longing. Shak., W. T., iv. 4. 681.

2. Specifically, in pathol., one of the peculiar and often whimsical desires experienced by pregnant women.=Syn. 1. Hankering, yearning, aspiration.

longingly (lông'ing-li), adv. With eager desire or craving.

longinquity (lon-jing'kwi-ti), n. [= It. longinquità, < L. longinquita(t-)s, length, < longinquus, remote, long, usually distant, < longus, long: see long[1].] Greatness of distance. [Rare.]

Pope Leo himself saw that longinquity of region doth cause the examination of truth to become over dilatory. Barrow, The Pope's Supremacy.

Inordinate unvaried length, sheer longinquity, staggers the heart, ages the very heart of us at a view. G. Meredith, The Egoist, Prel.

longipalp (lon'ji-palp), a. and n. [< NL. longipalpus, < L. longus, long, + NL. palpus, a feeler: see palp.] I. a. Having long maxillary palps; specifically, of or pertaining to the Longipalpi.

II. n. A member of the Longipalpi, as some of the rove-beetles.

Longipalpi (lon-ji-pal'pī), n. pl. [NL., pl. of longipalpus: see longipalp.] In Latreille's system of classification, a section of the Linnean genus Staphylinus, having long maxillary palps, as in the genera Pæderus, Procirrus, Stenus, and others. Also Longipalpati.

Longipennatæ (lon-ji-pe-nā'tē), n. pl. Same as Longipennes, 1.

longipennate (lon-ji-pen'āt), a. [< NL. longipennatus, long-winged, < L. longus, long, + pennatus, winged: see pennate.] Long-winged, as a bird; having long pennæ, remiges, or flight-feathers.

Longipennes (lon-ji-pen'ēz), n. pl. [NL., < L. longus, long, + penna, wing.] 1. A major group of birds, the long-winged natatorial birds, such as gulls, terns, and petrels; the Gaviæ and Tubinares together considered as an order. In Nitzsch's classification (1829) the term was applied only to the former, the Tubinares being separated under the name of Nasutæ.

2. In Sundevall's system, a synonym of Chelidonomorphæ.

longipennine (lon-ji-pen'in), a. [As Longipennes + -ine[1].] Longipennate; having the wings long enough to reach, when folded, beyond the end of the tail; specifically, of or pertaining to the Longipennes.

longiperoneus (lon-ji-per-ō-nē'us), n.; pl. longiperonei (-ī). [NL., < L. longus, long, + NL.

peroneus.] The long peroneal or fibular muscle, commonly called peroneus longus. Coues and Shute, 1887.

longiroster (lon-ji-ros'tėr), n. [< NL. longirostris, long-beaked, < L. longus, long, + rostrum, beak: see rostrum.] One of the Longirostres.

longirostral (lon-ji-ros'tral), a. [As longiroster + -al.] Having a long bill or beak: specifically applied to the Longirostres.

longirostrate (lon-ji-ros'trāt), a. [As longiroster + -ate[1].] Same as longirostral.

Longirostres (lon-ji-ros'trēz), n. pl. [NL., pl. of longirostris: see longiroster.] In Cuvier's system of classification, a family of Grallæ or wading birds, including the snipes and their allies, together with the ibises, ranged here on account of their superficial resemblance to curlews. With this exception, the group corresponds to the natural division of birds now called the snipe family, Scolopacidæ.

longisect (lon'ji-sekt), v. t. [< L. longus, long, + secare, pp. sectus, cut: see section.] To bisect lengthwise and horizontally; perform longisection. [Rare.]

longisection (lon-ji-sek'shọn), n. [< L. longus, long, + sectio(n-), a cutting: see section.] Division of the body in a plane parallel with the axis, and thus longitudinal, but from side to side, and thus at right angles to the meson and to hemisection-planes: correlated with transection and hemisection. N. Y. Med. Jour., XL. 114.

longissimus (lon-jis'i-mus), n.; pl. longissimi (-mī). [NL. (sc. musculus), superl. of L. longus, long: see long[1], a.] A muscle of the back, more fully called longissimus dorsi, notable in man for its great length, forming with the sacrolumbalis the erector spinæ, the muscle which assists in keeping the back straight or erect. It occurs under divers modifications in mammals, ★birds, etc.

longitude (lon'ji-tūd), n. [< F. longitude = Sp. longitud = Pg. longitude = It. longitudine, < L. longitudo (longitudin-), length, < longus, long: see long[1], a.] 1†. Length; measure along the longest line.

The ancients did determine the longitude of all rooms which were longer than broad by the double of their latitude. Sir H. Wotton, Elem. of Architecture.

2. In geog., the angle at the pole contained between two meridians, one of which, called the first or prime meridian, passes through some conventional point from which the angle is measured. Strictly speaking, the meridian here spoken of is a plane through the plumb-line at the station parallel to the earth's axis, but not necessarily passing through that axis, since it may be that the earth's axis and the plumb-line at the station do not lie in one plane. But this distinction is wholly without importance, except in higher geodesy. The longitude of the conventional point is 0°, and longitudes are reckoned east and west from it to 180° in arc, and to 12 hours in time, 15 degrees being equal to one hour. In Great Britain universally and in the United States generally geographers reckon from the meridian of the transit-circle at the Royal Observatory of Greenwich in England; the meridian of Washington is also used in the United States. Germans reckon generally from Ferro in the Canaries, as the dividing line between the eastern and western hemispheres, though modern German scientists employ the meridian of Greenwich. In other countries geographers often reckon from the meridian of their capital or other point within their limits, as the French from Paris (and formerly from Ferro), and the Russians from the observatory of Pulkowa. Mariners generally employ the meridian of Greenwich. There are various ways of finding longitude, the problem being that of comparing the time at the place in question with that of the prime meridian. On shore the most accurate method is to compare the time of the two places by means of the electric telegraph, while at sea, the local time being determined by observation of some celestial object, it is compared with Greenwich time, as shown by a chronometer carefully set and regulated before sailing. Abbreviated lon., long.

The ancients supposed the torrid and the frigid zones to be uninhabitable and even impenetrable by man; but while the earth, as known to them, was bounded westwardly by the Atlantic Ocean, it extended indefinitely towards the east. The dimensions of the habitable world, then (and ancient geography embraced only the home of man, ἡ οἰκουμένη), were much greater measured from west to east than from south to north. Accordingly, early geographers called the greater dimension, or the east and west line, the length, longitudo, of the earth; the shorter dimension, or the north and south line, they denominated its breadth, latitudo. G. P. Marsh, Lects. on Eng. Lang., ix.

3. In astron., the arc of the ecliptic measured eastward from the vernal equinoctial point to the foot of the circle of latitude drawn through the object, as a star or other point on the sphere whose position is in question. See circle of latitudes, under circle.—Celestial longitude. See def. 3.—Geocentric, heliocentric, heliographic longitude. See the adjectives.—Libration in longitude. ★See libration of the moon, under libration.

longitudinal (lon-ji-tū'di-nal), a. [= F. Sp. longitudinal = It. longitudinale, < NL. longitudinalis*, < L. longitudo (longitudin-), length, longitude: see longitude.] 1. Of or pertaining to longitude or length; relating to or consisting in length: as, longitudinal distance.—2. In the direction of the length; running lengthwise, as distinguished from transverse or across: as, the longitudinal diameter of a body.—3. In bot., in the direction of growth.—4. In zoöl., extended in the long axis of the body, as any articulate animal; articulated. [Rare.]

Von Baer . . . adopted Cuvier's divisions, speaking of them as the peripheric, the longitudinal, the massive, and the vertebrate types of structure.

Encyc. Brit., XXIV. 807.

Longitudinal elasticity, the ratio of stress to strain in the case of linear extension or compression.—Longitudinal sinus, in anat. See sinus.—Longitudinal strain, in ordnance, the strain on a cannon which tends to rupture it at right angles to the axis.—Longitudinal veins, in entom., veins of an insect's wing running lengthwise to the apical margin: specifically, in the Diptera, applied to several such veins which, counting from the costal or anterior side, are distinguished as first, second, etc., longitudinal.

longitudinally (lon-ji-tū'di-nal-i), adv. In a longitudinal manner; in the direction of length.

longitudinated (lon-ji-tū'di-nā-ted), a. [< L. longitudo (longitudin-), length, + -ate[1] + -ed[2].] Extended in length. Goldsmith. [Rare.]

long-leg (lông'leg), n. In cricket, same as leg, 6.

long-legged (lông'legd or -leg″ed), a. Having ★long legs or hind limbs.—Long-legged chatterers, Swainson's name of his Leiotrichanæ. See Liotrichinæ.—Long-legged hawk, a hawk of the subfamily Accipitrinæ, having the tarsi proportionally long, as the goshawk, the European sparrow-hawk, or the American sharp-shinned hawk.—Long-legged plover, a stilt. See Himantopus.—Long-legged thrush, Swainson's name for a bird of his family Crateropodinæ. See Crateropodidæ, and cut under ★Crateropus.

long-legs (lông'legz), n. An insect having long legs, such as the common crane-flies of the family Tipulidæ and the spiders of the family Phalangiidæ. See daddy-long-legs.

long-lived (lông'līvd), a. [< long[1] + life + -ed[2].] Having a long life or existence; living or lasting long.

A long-lived soap-bubble displays every color which can be produced by polarization.

O. N. Rood, Modern Chromatics, p. 50.

longlivedness (lông'līvd-nes), n. Longevity; unusual length of life. [Rare.]

If then . . . there can be discovered a reciprocating relation between want of gall in animals and longlivedness, . . . we have the basis for an inductive proof.

R. Adamson, Encyc. Brit., XIV. 789.

longly (lông'li), adv. [< ME. longly, langly*, < AS. langlīce, for a long time (= Icel. langliga, for a long time past), < lang, long: see long[1] and -ly[2].] 1. For a long time. [Rare.]

The horse strekede oute his nekke als ferre als he myghte, and likked Alexander hand; and he knelid doune on his kneesse, and bihelde Alexander in the vesage langly. MS. Lincoln A. i. 17, f. 1. (Halliwell.)

[In the following passage from Shakspere the word is commonly understood to imply also 'longingly.'

Master, you look'd so longly on the maid,
Perhaps you mark'd not what's the pith of all.

Shak., T. of the S., i. 1. 170.]

2. Lengthily in space.

Asci clavate, obtuse, longly pedicellate.

M. C. Cooke, Brit. Fungi, p. 761.

long-minded (lông'mīn″ded), a. Patient; longanimous. [Rare.]

[A judge must be] long-minded to endure the rusticity and homeliness of common people in giving evidence, after their plain fashion and faculty.

S. Ward, Sermons, p. 120. (Davies.)

long-moss (lông'môs), n. An epiphytic plant, Dendropogon usneoides, with gray filiform stems and leaves, forming dense pendulous tufts which drape the forests of the southern United States. See Tillandsia. Also called longbeard, and more rarely and less appropriately black-moss, Spanish moss, and barba Hispanica.

Longmynd group. [Named by Sedgwick from the Longmynd Hills in Shropshire.] In geol., an assemblage of strata which form a part of the middle or lower division of the Cambrian series. The series is of great thickness as developed in Wales, and contains Paradoxides and other distinguishing fossils.

longneck (lông'nek), n. 1†. An earthenware retort or still with a long neck. N. E. D.—2. The pintail duck, Dafila acuta. G. Trumbull, 1888. See cut under Dafila. [New Jersey.]

longness (lông'nes), n. Length. [Rare.]

longnose (lông'nōz), n. The garfish: so called ★from the elongated snout or jaws.

Longobardian (long-gō-bär'di-an), a. [< L. Longobardi, Langobardi, a people of northern Germany, subsequently established in northern Italy: see Lombard[1].] Pertaining or relating to the Longobards; Lombard or Lombardic.

long-off (lông'ôf), n. Same as long-field-off. See long-field.

long-on (lông'ôn), n. Same as long-field-on. See long-field.

long-primer (lông'prim'ėr), n. A size of type, measuring about ninety lines to the foot, next larger than bourgeois and smaller than small-pica. [Generally written by printers as two words, long primer.] long-purples (lông'pėr″plz), n. 1. The early orchis, Orchis mascula. Britten and Holland, Eng. Plant Names.

Long purples,
That liberal shepherds give a grosser name,
But our cold maids do dead-men's-fingers call them.

Shak., Hamlet, iv. 7. 170.

2. The purple loosestrife, Lythrum Salicaria. Britten and Holland, Eng. Plant Names.

Gay long-purples with its tufty spike:
She'd wade o'er shoes to reach it in the dyke.

Clare, Village Minstrel, ii. 90.

long-range (lông'rānj), a. Having a long range; capable of hitting at a long distance.

It would not be very difficult or very costly to strengthen Gibraltar by placing modern long-range guns high up on the rock, with mountings which would allow of an all-round fire. Fortnightly Rev., N. S., XLIII. 2.

long-rest (lông'rest), n. In medieval musical notation, a rest or sign for silence equal in time-value to a long. It was either "perfect" (equal to three breves: see a) or "imperfect" (equal to two breves: see b).

long-ruffer (lông'ruf″ėr), n. A coarse heckle.

long-run (lông'run), n. See in the long run, under run.

long-settle (lông'set″l), n. See settle.

longshanks (lông'shanks), n. 1. A long-legged person.—2. A bird of the genus Himantopus; a stilt.

long-shawl (lông'shâl), n. A shawl much longer than it is wide, the length being usually about twice the width.

longshore (lông'shōr), a. and n. [By apheresis from alongshore.] I. a. Existing or employed along the shore or coast: as, the longshore fisheries; a longshore boatman.

II. n. A longshoreman.

longshoreman (lông'shōr-man), n.; pl. longshoremen (-men). 1. A workman, as a stevedore or jobber, who is employed in loading and discharging the cargoes of vessels.—2. One who makes a living along shores by fishing for clams, oysters, etc.

long-short (lông'shôrt), n. A skirt somewhat shorter than a petticoat, worn by women when doing household work. Bartlett. [Local, U. S.]

Her dress was a blue-striped linen short-gown, wrapper, or long-short, a coarse yellow petticoat, and checked apron.

S. Judd, Margaret, i. 3.

long-sighted (lông'sī″ted), a. 1. Able to see objects at a great distance; hence, having foresight; of acute intellect; sagacious; far-seeing.—2. Able to see objects distinctly at a distance, but not close at hand; presbyopic or hypermetropic; far-sighted.

longsightedness (lông'sī″ted-nes), n. 1. The faculty of seeing objects at a great distance; hence, sagacity as regards the future; far-sighted discernment.—2. In pathol., a defect of sight owing to which objects near at hand are seen indistinctly, while those at remoter distances appear distinctly; hypermetropia or presbyopia.

long-slide (lông'slīd), n. In steam-engin., a slide-valve of sufficient length to admit steam through short passages and ports at the two ends of the cylinder, and having a hollow back which forms an eduction-passage: used in the Cornish type of engine.

long-slip (lông'slip), n. In cricket, a fielder whose position is some distance behind and on the right of the batter.

longsome (lông'sum), a. [< long[1] + -some.] Long and tedious: applied to persons and things. [Now rare.]

A lampe . . . made
With oyle and weecke to last the longsome night.

Gascoigne, Dan Bartholomew of Bath.

When chill'd by adverse Snows, and beating Rain,
We tread with weary Steps the longsome Plain.

Prior, Henry and Emma.

longsomeness (lông'sum-nes), n. The state of being longsome; tediousness. [Rare.]

long-spun (lông'spun), a. Spun or extended to a great length; long-drawn; tedious.

longspur (lông'spėr), n. In ornith., a bird of the genus Centrophanes (or Calcarius): same as lark-bunting, 1.—Bay-winged longspur. See bay-winged.

long-staple (lông'stā″pl), a. Having a long fiber: a commercial term applied to cotton of a superior grade, also called sea-island cotton. See cotton-plant.

long-stitch (lông'stich), n. Satin-stitch worked plain, without filling or raising.

long-stop (lông'stop), n. In cricket, a fielder who stands behind the wicket-keeper and stops balls that escape the latter.

longstop (lông'stop), v. i.; pret. and pp. longstopped, ppr. longstopping. [< long-stop, n.] To act as long-stop at cricket.

long-sufferance† (lông'suf″ėr-ans), n. Same as long-suffering.

God of his goodness, patience, and long-sufferance, gave them a time to repent.
Latimer, Sermon bef. Edw. VI., 1550.

long-suffering[1] (lông'suf″ėr-ing), n. Long endurance of injury or provocation; patience under offense.

Despisest thou the riches of his goodness and forbearance and longsuffering? Rom. ii. 4.

long-suffering[2] (lông'suf″ėr-ing), a. Bearing injuries or provocation with patience; not easily moved to retaliation.

The Lord God, merciful and gracious, longsuffering, and abundant in goodness. Ex. xxxiv. 6.

long-tail (lông'tāl), n. and a. I. n. 1. An animal, particularly a dog, having an uncut tail. Formerly, in England, a long-tail was a gentleman's dog, or a dog qualified to hunt, it being required that the tails of other dogs should be cut. Hence the phrase come cut and long-tail. See cut, p. a.

2. The long-tailed duck.—3†. An old nickname for a native of Kent. Halliwell.

II. a. Having the tail uncut, as a dog.

long-tailed (lông'tāld), a. 1. Having a long tail; hence, long-drawn; attenuated.

Monsieur Perrault . . . has endeavoured to turn into Ridicule several of Homer's Similitudes, which he calls "Comparaisons à longue queue," Long-tail'd Comparisons.
Addison, Spectator, No. 303.

2. In entom., having a long-exserted ovipositor, as many ichneumons; having a long terebra or borer. Westwood.—Japanese long-tailed fowls. See Japanese.—Long-tailed duck, finch, mouse, pangolin, tiger-cat, titmouse, trogon, etc. See the nouns.

long-take (lông'tāk), n. A certain number (132) of herrings. [Yarmouth, Eng.]

long-tongue (lông'tung), n. 1. A kind of woodpecker; the wryneck. Also called tongue-bird.—2. A tale-bearer; a gossip. [Prov. Eng.]

long-tongued (lông'tungd), a. 1. Having a long or large tongue; macroglossate. See Macroglossi.—2. Prating; babbling; loquacious.

A long-tongued knave, one that uttereth all he knowes.
Florio, p. 17. (Halliwell.)

The foul fa' ye . . . for a lang-tongued clavering wife! . . . Couldna ye let the leddy alane wi' your whiggery?
Scott, Old Mortality, vii.

longulite (long'gū-līt), n. [< L. longulus, rather long (dim. of longus, long), + -ite[2].] In petrog., a name proposed by Vogelsang for linear groups of the most elementary products of crystallization, called by him globulites. See margarite.

longus (long'gus), n.; pl. longi (lon'jī). [NL. (sc. musculus), < L. longus, long: see long[1].] A long, deep-seated muscle of the neck, more fully called longus colli, lying upon the front of several cervical and dorsal vertebræ, and serving to bend the neck forward or downward. It is less developed in man than in some other animals, as birds, particularly those which have a long sigmoid neck and capture their prey with a thrust of the beak.

long-visaged (lông'viz″ājd), a. Having a long face; hence, having a sober, sad, or rueful face or visage.

long-waisted (lông'wās″ted), a. 1. Having a long waist, as a person or a ship. See waist.—2. Long from the armpits to the waist or narrowest part, as a dress or coat.

long-wall (lông'wâl), a. Noting a method of working a coal-mine in which the whole seam is worked at one operation in long faces of attack, leaving no pillars except at the shafts and sometimes along the main roads. No attempt is made to support the roof of the working-places by pillars of coal, which is worked in a long face, the roof being allowed to settle down and fill the cavity left by the removal of the coal. Where the roof exhibits a tendency to break off close to the working-face, it is temporarily supported by cribs of timber or chocks, or by a double or triple line of props. Two kinds of long-wall working are in use: long-wall retreating or withdrawing and long-wall advancing. In the latter the roads or gangways are kept open, and the roof is supported by pack-walls built of the gob. In long-wall withdrawing the gangways are in the solid coal, and pack-walls are not needed. The long-wall system of working is chiefly applicable to thin beds of coal and those with much slaty waste, and is not applicable to very thick coal-seams. Where it can be advantageously used, it is admitted that a considerably larger percentage of the coal can be won by it than by any other system. Also long-work.

longways (lông'wāz), adv. [< long + -ways for -wise.] Longwise; lengthwise. [Obsolete or prov. Eng.]

A vast mole which lies longways, almost in a parallel line to Naples. Addison, Travels in Italy.

long-winded (lông'win″ded), a. 1. Long-breathed; using much breath by prolonged speech.

The long-winded old salts who come here to report their wrecks. The Century, XXVIII. 589.

2. Tedious from length; of a wearisome or burdensome length: said of speech or writing.

Long-winded exercises, singings, and catechisings.
B. Jonson, Epicœne, ii. 1.

And there he told a long long-winded tale.
Tennyson, The Brook.

long-windedness (lông'win″ded-nes), n. The character of being long-winded.

Richardson, the only author who ever made long-windedness seem a benefaction.
Lowell, New Princeton Rev., I. 160.

longwise (lông'wīz), adv. [< long[1] + -wise.] In the direction of length; lengthwise. [Rare.]

longworm (lông'wėrm), n. A marine rhynchocœlous turbellarian or nemertean worm of extreme length for its thickness. See Lineidæ, Lineus.

Lonicera (lon-i-sē'rą), n. [NL. (Linnæus, 1753), named after Adam Lonicer, a German botanist (died 1586).] A genus of caprifoliaceous plants, the honeysuckles, type of the tribe Loniceræ, characterized by an irregular tubular corolla (sometimes two-lipped), exstipulate leaves, and a two- or three-celled berry, almost always few-seeded. About 150 species are known, natives of the temperate and tropical regions of the northern hemisphere, ornamental shrubs, often climbing, with (often) fragrant, variously colored flowers, growing in cymes, in pedunculate heads, or sometimes in pairs. See honeysuckle.

Loniceræ (lon-i-sē'rē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (R. Brown, 1818), < Lonicera + -eæ.] A tribe of dicotyledonous sympetalous plants, based on the genus Lonicera, belonging to the family Caprifoliaceæ, distinguished by having a tubular or campanulate corolla (often with an irregular limb), an elongated style with usually a capitate stigma, and the cells of the ovary with from one to an indefinite number of ovules. In the system of Engler and Prantl this tribe includes only 4 genera.

lonk (longk), n. [Origin obscure.] A hollow; a small dingle. [Prov. Eng.]

loo[1] (lö), n. A dialectal (Scotch) form of love[1].

loo[2] (lö), n. [Also lu; abbr. of lanterloo.] 1. ★A game of cards. It is played by any number of persons up to seventeen with a full pack, the cards ranking as in whist. Each player deposits a certain number of chips (generally three) in the pool. When there is nothing in the pool but the dealer's chips, it is a simple, after chips have been added, a double pool. In simple pools no trump is turned and no widow dealt, each player receiving 3 cards, one at a time. Eldest hand leads and the others must follow suit and must head the trick if they can. The winners of the trick divide the pool accordingly. Those who fail to take a trick are looed and pay 3 counters to the next pool, making it a double.

2. The deposit, generally of three chips, which the players make in the pool in loo.

loo[2] (lö), v. t. [Also lu; < loo[2], n.] To beat in the game of loo, as a player that has declared.

loo[3] (lö), interj. [Cf. halloo.] Same as halloo.

'Loo, Paris, 'loo! The bull has the game.
Shak., T. and C., v. 7. 10.

loobily† (lö'bi-li), a. [< looby + -ly[1].] Looby-like; lubberly; awkward; clumsy.

A loobily country fellow. Sir R. L'Estrange.

loobily† (lö'bi-li), adv. [< loobily, a.] Like a looby; in an awkward, clumsy manner.

loobs (löbz), n. [Corn. loob, slime, sludge.] In mining, tin-slime or sludge of the after-leavings. Pryce. [Cornwall, Eng.]

He stod this woful Troylus biforn.
Chaucer, Troilus, iv. 358.

2†. Glance of the eye; regard.

Swich subtil lokyng and dissimulinges
For drede of jalouse mennes aperceyvinges.
Chaucer, Squire's Tale, l. 277.

3. Search or searching: as, a careful looking for names and dates.

looking-for (lůk'ing-fôr), n. Expectation; anticipation; foreboding.

★ A certain fearful looking for of judgment. Heb. x. 27.

looking-glass (lůk'ing-glȧs), n. A plate of glass silvered (coated with quicksilver) on the back, so as to show images by reflection; a plane mirror of glass. The metallic coating is generally an amalgam of tin. A sheet of tin-foil is laid first upon a table and the mercury poured upon it; the glass is then applied horizontally upon the amalgam, to which it readily adheres.

All this is very excellently contrived in a faire looking glasse that hangeth at the side of his bedde.
Coryat, Crudities, I. 187.

There is none so homely but loves a looking-glass.
South, Sermons.

Looking-glass plant or tree, an evergreen tree of the genus Heritiera.

★lookout (lůk′out), n. 1. A watching for the appearance or occurrence of anything, especially from without; vigilant observation or scrutiny; watch: as, to keep a good lookout at sea; to be on the lookout for an opportunity.

I think, if anything was to be foreseen, I have as sharp a look-out as another. Goldsmith, Good-natured Man, ii.

2. A place where a watch is kept; a post of external observation: as, the lookout on a ship's mast.—3. A person or party engaged in keeping watch, especially for things outside.

Even the lookouts were unaware of the proximity of the iceberg until it was actually upon them. Science, V. 460.

4. The subject of observation or vigilance; something to be watched for or guarded against: as, every man's interest is his own lookout.—5. A prospect or view; an outlook. [Rare.]

On this magnificent quay, with its glorious lookout over the lagoons. Howells, Venetian Life, xvii.

★loom[1] (löm), n. [< ME. lome, < AS. gelōma, also and-gelōma, andlōma, tool, instrument, implement; perhaps lit. 'a thing of frequent use': cf. gelōme, frequently, gelōmlīc, frequent.] 1†. A utensil; a tool; a weapon; an article in general: now used only in composition, as in heir-loom, work*loom*, etc. See heirloom.

He lyftes lyztly his lome, & let hit doun fayre,
With the barbe of the bitte bi the bare nek.
Sir Gawayne and the Green Knight (E. E. T. S.), l. 2309.

The lomes that ich laboure with and lyflode deserue Ys pater-nostre and my prymer.
Piers Plowman (C), vi. 45.

2. A machine for weaving any fabric from yarn or thread. The essential parts of a loom are: the frame, which supports the working parts; the yarn-beam, at the back part of the frame, upon which the warp-threads are wound; the cloth-beam, at the front part of the frame, upon which the cloth is wound as the weaving proceeds; the heddles and their mounting; the reed; and the batten (otherwise called lay and lathe), which carries the reed. The warp-threads extend in parallel relation from the yarn-beam to the cloth-beam, being also passed serially through the loops or eyes of the heddles, or harness, and through the interspaces of the reed. The operations of winding the warp-threads upon the yarn-beam, and passing them in due order through the loops or eyes of the heddles, and the interspaces of the reed, are collectively called "setting up the piece." The function of the heddles is to form the shed for the passage of the shuttle. The warp-threads are separated systematically by the heddles into two or more series, each controlled and alternately drawn upward and downward by the vertical motion of the heddles, thus leaving an opening or shed between the ranks of warp-threads, through which the shuttle is thrown or shot by the hand, or by pickers operated by the hand of the weaver in the hand-loom, or by picker-staff mechanism in the power-loom. (See heddle and picker.) The reed is carried by the batten, which swings radially on its bearings through an arc small in proportion to the radius. The reed is composed of a series of thin slats or wires arranged in parallel relation between two parallel bars placed at such distance asunder that the threads of the warp passing through the interspaces between the slats or wires may be serially opened or separated by the heddles, in forming the shed, without impinging upon these bars. The function of the reed is to force the thread of weft, woof, or filling, as passed between the warp-threads by the shuttle, as near as desirable to that part of the weft-thread which has just previously been embraced by the warp-threads. For this purpose the batten is swung so that the slats or wires of the reed drive the weft-thread against the previously woven part of the texture with a sharp blow. (See reed and batten.) The weft-thread is wound upon a bobbin or quill which turns upon a wire in the shuttle, and permits the thread to unwind when the shuttle passes to and fro through the sheds as the latter are successively formed by the action of the heddles. The shuttle is made of a piece of hard wood pointed at each end, and having a recess in the body for the reception of the bobbin or quill. Frequently the pointed ends are finished with metal. (See shuttle.) Narrow-fabric looms generally use a thread-carrier or eye-pointed needle as a substitute for the shuttle. (See positive-motion loom, below.) The Jacquard attachment is a device for forming sheds or openings for the passage of the shuttle between the warp-threads, invented by Joseph Marie Jacquard of Lyons, used as a substitute for the heddle or heald mechanism previously employed in the loom, and, by its introduction, marking an epoch in the manufacture of figured woven fabrics. It consists essentially of a series of perforated paper or metal cards which, one after another, are laid flat upon the faces of an intermittently revolving and perforated prism, in such manner that the perforations in the cards successively and exactly superimpose corresponding perforations in the prism. Wires, each separately controlling the engagement with a lifting-bar or griffe of a hooked wire connected with an individual warp-thread or set of warp-threads, are made by suitable mechanism to enter the holes of the cards when by the rotation of the prism each is successively brought to a special position, the wires so entering causing all the individual threads with which they are connected to be lifted above the common level of the warp-threads, thus forming a shed for the passage of the shuttle. Each card thus represents a different shed, and as there may be an indefinite number of cards joined together by flexible connections, which, like an endless chain, are carried upon the perforated revolving prism, and as there may be also a number of shuttles carrying woof-threads of different tints, there is no limit to variety of form and color in the figures that may be woven. The prism carrying the system of cards moves at each partial rotation through an arc the chord of which is equal to the width of one of the faces. The introduction of this method of weaving at once advanced the art of figure-weaving beyond the limit of mere geometrical patterns into the realm of fine-art industry, as even the finest tapestries may be successfully imitated by it. Looms are for the most part distinguished by the names of the material they weave, as ribbon-loom, figure-loom (figured-fabric loom), carpet-loom, etc., and also by the names of the inventors, as the Jacquard loom. They differ chiefly in the harness-system, or the manner in which the warp-threads are raised to form the shed and thus produce the figures in the finished fabric, and in the method of impelling the shuttle. There may be several shuttles in a loom, in order to introduce a variety of weft-threads, and thus produce more complicated patterns than can be formed by a single weft. Hand-looms are now almost wholly devoted to fine silks and carpets, nearly all other fabrics being woven on power-looms, either with or without the Jacquard attachment.

Unbred to spinning, in the loom unskill'd,
She chose the nobler Pallas of the field.
Dryden, Æneid, vii.

3. The part of an oar between the blade and the handle; the shaft.—4†. A vessel of any kind. Holinshed.—Chain-tappet loom, a loom for fancy weaving, in which the harnesses are operated by tappets upon a pattern-chain. E. H. Knight.—Circular loom. See circular.—Double-cloth loom, a loom in which two sets of webs are woven simultaneously, or in which two webs are knitted with their edges joined in such a way as to form a tube. E. H. Knight.—Double-piled-fabric loom, a loom which forms a pile on both sides of the foundation. The pile may be produced from either the warp or the weft. E. H. Knight.—Electric loom, a Jacquard loom in which the perforated cards were replaced by a band on which the pattern was marked in some insulating paint. Small electromagnets were arranged in such a way that, on the movement of the band under them, they were brought into action on passing the uninsulated parts and left at rest on the insulated parts, and they thus, by means of suitable mechanism, controlled the usual apparatus by which the warp-threads are controlled. It does not appear to have been a commercial success.—High-warp loom, in tapestry-weaving, a loom in which the warp is carried vertically, in distinction from a low-warp loom, in which the warp is carried horizontally.—Jacquard loom, a loom in which is comprised the Jacquard attachment for weaving figured fabrics. See above, 2.—Metallic-tissue loom, a loom for weaving with metallic threads alone, as in making gold and silver tissues such as lace or braid, or for weaving fabrics with a silk or thread warp and a weft of wire, or of silk thread covered with a flattened wire of silver-gilt.—Narrow-fabric loom, a loom designed especially for weaving tapes, ribbons, bindings, etc. It may be a shuttle-loom, but has generally an eye-pointed needle or thread-carrier which traverses the shed forward and back after each movement of the harness. Also called narrow-ware loom and needle-loom.—Positive-motion loom, a loom, invented by Lyall of New York, for weaving wide fabrics. It has a track or raceway on which the shuttle is drawn through the shed at a uniform velocity by a kind of roller-carriage, instead of being thrown through by the picker-staff mechanism or by hand.—Power-loom, a loom in which all the motions of the parts are accomplished by other power than the muscular power of the operator, as steam- or water-power.

★loom[1]† (löm), v. t. [< loom[1], n.] To weave. [Rare.]

Or with loomed wool the native robe supplies.
Savage, The Wanderer, i.

loom[2] (löm), v. i. [Early mod. E. lome; < ME. lumen, shine, prob. < OF. lumer, shine, < L. luminare, shine: see lumine, etc. Less prob. < Icel. ljōma, shine, gleam, dawn, = AS. leómian, lȳman, shine: see leam[1], v.] 1. To shine. Specifically—2. To appear indistinctly; come dimly into view, as from below the horizon or through a mist; rise up before the vision so as to give the impression of indistinct bulk or largeness; stand out prominently in the prospect: often used figuratively.

They stand far off in time; through perspective
Of clear wits yet they loom both great and near.
Fanshaw, tr. of Camoens's Lusiad, viii. 2.

Heer smokes a Castle, there a Citie fumes,
And heer a Ship vpon th' Ocean looms.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, i. 7.

The facts which loomed so large in the fogs of yesterday . . . have strangely changed their proportions.
Emerson, Essays, 1st ser., p. 282.

loom[2] (löm), n. [< loom[2], v.] 1. A coming indistinctly or vaguely into view; also, the indistinct or unnaturally enlarged appearance of anything, as land, seen at a distance or through a fog. See looming.

Our situation now became a very critical one, with the loom of a third berg on the other side of us.
R. M'Cormick, Arc. and Antarc. Voyages, I. 277.

2. The track of a fish. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

loom[3] (löm), n. [Also dial. lom, lomm, lomme, lome, lumme, etc. (NL. Lomvia, q. v.); = G. lohme, lomme; < Icel. lōmr = Dan. Sw. lom, a loom (a bird so called); perhaps ult. connected with loon[1]. The word in E. is now corrupted to loon: see loon[2].] 1†. A loon. See loon[2].

A loom is as big as a goose. N. Grew, Museum.

2. A guillemot.

On the face of these sea-ledges of Arveprins Island Bruennich's guillemots, or looms, gather in the breeding season. A. W. Greely, Arctic Service, p. 49.

The multitude of lomms frequenting it [Nova Zembla], a bird to which they gave the whimsical name of arctic parrots. Motley, United Netherlands, III. 563.

loo-mask (lö′mask), n. [< loo*, a corruption of loup, + mask[3].] A mask used to conceal the face or part of it.

loom-card (löm′kärd), n. A pierced pattern-card used in the Jacquard loom. E. H. Knight.

loom-comb (löm′kōm), n. The reed of a loom.

loomery (lö′mėr-i), n.; pl. loomeries (-iz). [< loom[3] + -ery.] A breeding-place of looms or guillemots. [Rare.]

I sent Lieutenant Lockwood with a boat's crew to the loomery on Arveprins Island for birds. They . . . brought back but sixty-five Bruennich's guillemots.
A. W. Greely, Arctic Service, p. 48.

loom-figured (löm′fig″ūrd), a. Having a pattern woven in: said of a textile material.

loom-gale† (löm′gāl), n. A gentle gale of wind.

loom-harness (löm′här″nes), n. That part of a loom which moves the warp-threads to make the crossing or decussation forming the shed in which the shuttle travels and leaves the weft-thread. The harness has heddles with loops for the warps, some of which are continually raised above the others and then depressed, either in regular alternation (for plain weaving) or in a different order, as the pattern requires.

looming (lö′ming), n. [Verbal n. of loom[2], v.] 1. A coming vaguely into view.—2. A form of mirage in which distant objects, usually across water, appear abnormally elevated above their true positions, this displacement being accompanied in many cases by a vertical magnification.

Its [Monticello's] elevation affords an opportunity of seeing a phenomenon which is rare at land though frequent at sea. The seamen call it looming. Philosophy is as yet in the rear of the seaman, for, so far from having accounted for it, she has not given it a name.
Jefferson, Notes on Virginia (1787), p. 135.

The inverted images which are often presented in looming are not beneath the object, as in the case of mirage on dry land, but above it, as if formed by reflection in the sky. Nature, XI. 49.

loom-picture (löm′pik″tūr), n. A piece of textile fabric so woven as to constitute a picture. The name has been given especially to monochromatic designs produced in silk, such as copies of engraved portraits.

loom-sheeting (löm′shē″ting), n. A variety of linen sheeting of good quality.

loon[1] (lön), n. [Also loun, lown, lowne; < ME. lowne (also in adj. lownishe: see loonish, lownish), appar. < OD. loen, a stupid fellow, possibly a var. or corruption of loem* (cf. ME. lowmyshe, for lownyshe), connected with lome, dull, slow, = OHG. luomi, luami, lōmi, MHG. lüeme, faint, weary, drooping, mild (MHG. luomen, lomen, droop), G. lumen, loose, lax, > D. lummel = G. lümmel = Dan. lömmel = Sw. lymmel, a loon, lubber (cf. E. lummox). These words are prob. from the same ult. source as lame.] A stupid fellow; a clown: with various shades of intensity as an opprobrious epithet, like fool, dolt, etc.

And take it backe with manlike cheere, not like a rusticke Lowne.
Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 291.

The devil damn thee black, thou cream-faced loon!
Where got'st thou that goose look?
Shak., Macbeth, v. 3. 11.

Hold off; unhand me, gray-haired loon!
Coleridge, Ancient Mariner, i.

★Kinless loons. See kinless.

loon[2] (lön), n. [A corruption of loom[3].] A three-toed diving bird of the genus Colymbus or Urinator. See Colymbidæ. There are several species, all inhabiting the northern hemisphere. The great northern diver, ring-necked loon, or ember-goose, C. torquatus or C. glacialis or Urinator imber, is from 30 to 36 inches long, and 4½ feet in stretch of wings; when adult Great Northern Diver (Colymbus torquatus or Urinator imber).

it is glossy-black with greenish and purplish metallic reflections on the head and neck, which, with the back, are marked regularly with white spots. The under parts are white, and the bill is black. C. adamsi, the yellow-billed loon, is somewhat larger. The black-throated loon or diver, C. arcticus, resembles the foregoing, but is smaller, with much of the head clear bluish-gray. The red-throated loon, C. septentrionalis, is much like C. arcticus, but is smaller still, and has a chestnut patch on the throat. Both the two smaller loons, the red- and the black-throated, are also called speckled loons, and a variety of the former, from the western coast of North America, is recognized as C. pacificus. (See diver, 1 (b).) The wild actions of the loon in escaping danger and its dismal cry (see looning) suggest the idea of insanity; whence the common (American) simile "as crazy as a loon."

loonghee, loonghie (lông'gē), n. [Hind. lungī.] A long scarf of silk or cotton stuff, usually of rich colors, used in the East Indies to wrap round the body as a waist- or loin-cloth. It is about 4 yards long and 2 feet wide.

looning (lö'ning), n. [< loon[2] + -ing[1].] The cry of a loon. It is a sort of wild moan somewhat resembling the howl of a wolf.

This was his [a loon's] looning — perhaps the wildest sound that is ever heard here. Thoreau, Walden, p. 254.

loony (lö'ni), a. and n. See luny.

loop[1] (löp), n. [< ME. lope, loupe, lowpe; prob. ★< Ir. Gael. lub, bend.] 1. A folding or doubling of a string, lace, cord, chain, etc., or a short piece doubled and secured to something at each end. By a loop is most commonly understood a part or piece of some material bent and secured in such a way as to form an eye or opening through which something can be passed; but it may be merely an unfastened returning curve in the material, the shape giving the name.

Buttons of orient pearle, . . .
Which loopes of azur'd silk did circulize.
Davies, An Extasie.

I sold my sheep, and lambkins too,
For silver loops and garment blue.
Gay, Shepherd's Week, Prol.

The female figure reclining on the lid [of a sarcophagus] wears a Greek chiton of a thin white material, with short sleeves fastened on the outside of the arm by means of buttons and loops. Encyc. Brit., VI. 455.

2. Something resembling a loop, as the bend of a river; a link; a crook.

At another lope of the wall, on a ladder, ther was the lorde of Sereell, and fought hands to hande with his enemyes. Berners, tr. of Froissart's Chron., I. cccxxi.

Specifically — (a) In crochet, knitting, and similar kinds of fancy work, same as stitch. (b) A hinge of a door. [Prov. Eng.] (c) In railroad and telegraph systems, a branch line leaving the main line at any point and joining it again at some other point; a looping line, as a branch wire carried over to a side station and back. (d) In the theory of Riemann's surfaces, a line running from any point to a branch-point, then around that branch-point in an infinitesimal circle, and back to the original point by the same path. (e) A part of a curve limited by a crunode. (f) The ear of a vessel, as a stoneware jar, when approximately of the form of a half-ring projecting from the side or lip.

It has on its central band four projecting handles or loops. Jewitt, Ceramic Art (1878), I. 15.

(g) In gun., a small iron ring in the barrel of a gun. (h) The small ring at the tip of a fishing-rod through which the line passes. (i) In anat., a looped vessel or fiber; especially, a nerve-loop. (j) In brachiopods, the folding of the brachial appendages.

3. In acoustics, the part of a vibrating musical string (see sonometer), or, as in an organ-pipe, of a column of air, where the amplitude of vibration is at its maximum. See node. — 4. In mech., a slotted bar or ring at the side of any piece of machinery, designed to limit or control the movement of another part. — 5. A knot or bur, often of great size, occurring on walnut, maple, oak, and some other trees. The wood of these knots is curled and waved in grain, and is used to make veneers for ornamental furniture.

6. A small magnifying-glass. — Crochet and loop†, an old term for hook and eye. See hook.

[Beds] that henget shalle be with hole sylour,
With crochettis and loupys sett on lyour.
Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 313.

Pressed loop, in harness, a leather strap or piece of which the outer surface is ornamented by impression with a stamp. — Prick at the loop. Same as fast and loose (a). ★See fast[1].

loop[1] (löp), v. [< loop[1], n.] I. trans. 1. To form into a loop or loops: as, to loop a cord. — 2. To fasten or secure with a loop or loops: as, to loop up a curtain. — 3. To furnish with a loop or loops: as, to loop a cloak.

II. intrans. 1. To form a loop.

The pathways wind and loop here and there among the ravines and around the mountain shoulders. The Century, XXXVII. 422.

2. To move, as the larvæ of certain moths, by forming loops.

They [leeches] move partly by looping with the help of their suckers, and partly by swimming. C. Claus, Zoölogy (trans.), p. 399.

loop[2] (löp), n. [Early mod. E. also lope; < ME. loupe, < OF. loup (dial. loup), a narrow window; appar. < D. luip, a peeping-place, ambush, < luipen, peep, lurk. Hence loophole.] 1. A narrow window; any small, narrow aperture; specifically, in medieval fort., a small aperture for observing the enemy, for the discharge of arrows or ordnance, or to admit light; a loophole.

That no light leope yn at louer ne at loupe.
Piers Plowman (C), xxi. 288.

They found the gates fast barred long ere night,
And every loup fast lockt, as fearing foes despight.
Spenser, F. Q., II. ix. 10.

Some at the loops durst scarce outpeep.
Fairfax, tr. of Tasso.

The same [wall] was very narrow in the top, not divided with lopes, . . . but inclosed with one whole and continual battilment round about. J. Brende, tr. of Quintus Curtius, ix.

2. A gap in the paling of a park, made for the convenience of the deer. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.] — 3. A removable fence-panel made of parallel wooden bars, generally united by transverse braces or crosspieces, used as a substitute for an ordinary fence-gate. Instead of being hinged, it is generally supported by notched brackets, or other supports adapted to receive the ends of the bars.

loop[3], n. See loupe.

loop-bolt (löp'bōlt), n. In a vehicle, a bolt with ★an ornamental head used to fasten the body-loop to the running-gear.

looper (lö'pėr), n. [< loop[1] + -er[1].] 1. In entom., a measuring-worm; a geometrid larva: same as geometer, 3. Hence — 2. pl. The adult geometrid moths, Geometridæ or Geometrina. Also called measure-moths and land-measurers. — 3. An implement used in uniting the ends of strips cut from rags for the woof or filling of rag carpets. It is a blade with a point and an eye, through which the end of a strip is passed. With the point of the blade the end of another strip is perforated; the end of the first strip, held by the eye, is then put through the perforation in the second, and the strips are looped together.

loop-head (löp'hed), n. In a vehicle, the swell and eye on the end of a body-loop. E. H. Knight.

loop-holder (löp'hōl″dėr), n. A carriage-iron by which the loop of a strap is attached to the running-gear or the bed. E. H. Knight.

loophole (löp'hōl), n. [< loop[2] + hole[1].] 1. A small aperture, narrow toward the outside and broader within, in the walls of a fortification or of any similar structure, through which small-arms may be fired at an enemy, or observations may be taken.

No stirring out, no peeping through a loop-hole,
But straight saluted with an armed dart.
Fletcher (and another), False One, iv. 2.

2. An opening into or out of anything; a hole or aperture that gives a passage or the means of escape: often used figuratively, and especially of an underhand or unfair method of escape or evasion.

Tends his pasturing herds
At loopholes cut through thickest shade.
Milton, P. L., ix. 1110.

He was only indignant that a few narrow and almost impossible loop-holes had been left, through which those who had offended might effect their escape. Motley, Dutch Republic, II. 97.

loopholed (löp'hōld), a. Furnished with loop-holes; having holes or openings for outlook, discharge of firearms, escape, etc.

But if those fail,
Yet this uneasy loop-holed gaol,
In which ye're hampered by the fetlock,
Cannot but put y' in mind of wedlock.
S. Butler, Hudibras, II. i. 608.

loopie, a. See loopy.

looping-snail (lö'ping-snāl), n. A snail of the genus Truncatella which walks by contracting and expanding the space between the lips and the foot, like a looping caterpillar.

looping-worm (lö'ping-wėrm), n. Same as loop-worm.

looplight (löp'līt), n. A small, narrow window in a wall, turret, or the like; a loophole, especially for the admission of light.

loop-shell guard (löp'shel gärd). A sword-guard of such form that a loop or ring attached to the cross-guard, through which the finger may be passed, is protected in its turn by a shell forming an additional or outer guard. Compare cup-guard.

loop-test (löp'test), n. A method of testing for the position of a fault or defect in the insulation of a telegraph-line or -cable. It consists in making the two parts of the faulty line two sides of the Wheatstone's bridge (see resistance), the fault, through the earth, being made one of the junctions of the bridge.

loopwork (löp'wėrk), n. Work consisting of loops or looped stitches.

By leaving portions of the silk loopwork uncut a less raised pile is produced. Art Journal, XLVIII. 379.

loopworm (löp'wėrm), n. A looper: same as geometer, 3. Also looping-worm.

loopy (lö'pi), a. [Also loopie; origin uncertain: cf. loop[2].] Deceitful; crafty.

loop-yoke (löp'yōk), n. In a vehicle, the loop for the strap by which the swaying of the body is limited. E. H. Knight.

loord†, n. See lourd[1].

loost, n. See lose[3].

loose (lös), a. and n. [< ME. loos, los, that is, ★lōs, a form of lous, < Icel. laus, below, the native form being ME. lees, les, < AS. leás, loose, false, = OS. lōs = OFries. las = MD. loos, loose, false, D. los, loose, loos, false, = MLG. lōs, los = OHG. Cowper, Task, i. 194.

Horses breaking loose in the compound outside.
W. H. Russell, Diary in India, II. 73.

2. Not tight or close; without close union or adjustment; slightly or slackly joined: as, a loose knot; loose garments; a loose league or confederation.

Now does he feel his title
Hang loose about him, like a giant's robe
Upon a dwarfish thief. Shak., Macbeth, v. 2. 21.

The light and lustrous curls . . . were parch'd with dust,
Or clotted into points and hanging loose.
Tennyson, Passing of Arthur.

3. Not dense or compact; having interstices or intervals; open or expanded: as, cloth of loose texture; a loose order of battle.

With horse and chariots rank'd in loose array.
Milton, P. L., ii. 887.

4. Not concise or condensed; wanting precision or connection of parts; diffuse; rambling: as, a loose style of writing; loose reasoning; a loose array of facts.

Both, hote, lustie, and plaine speakers, but colde, lowse, and rough writers. Ascham, The Scholemaster, p. 116.

He dodged me with a long and loose account.
Tennyson, Sea Dreams.

5. Not exact in meaning; indefinite; vague; uncertain.

It is scarcely possible that language so loose, in a matter requiring mathematical precision, should have been unintentional. Prescott, Ferd. and Isa., ii. 11.

The words in which the jurisdiction of these officers was described were loose, and might be stretched to almost any extent. Macaulay, Hist. Eng., vi.

6. Lax; relaxed; slack; wanting retentiveness or power of restraint: as, loose bowels; loose ties; a loose bond of union.

There are a kind of men so loose of soul
That in their sleeps will mutter their affairs.
Shak., Othello, iii. 3. 416.

7. Lax in character or quality; not strict or exact; careless; slovenly: as, a loose construction of the constitution; a loose mode of conducting business; loose morality.

It is an argument of a loose and ungoverned mind to be affected with the promiscuous approbation of the generality of mankind. Steele, Spectator, No. 188.

So loose was the practice in assessment for these taxes that a perusal of the various writs for the assessment and collection is like reading the programme for the course of a procession that went another way. S. Dowell, Taxes in England, III. 76.

8. Lax in principle or conduct; free from moral restraint; wanton; dissolute; unchaste: as, a loose woman; loose behavior.

I would prevent
The loose encounters of lascivious men.
Shak., T. G. of V., ii. 7. 41.

Her golden locks for haste were loosely shed
About her ears. Spenser, F. Q.

Hence—2. Freely; negligently; carelessly; without precision: as, to speak loosely; a loosely conducted enterprise.

Part loosely wing the region. Milton, P. L., vii. 425.

A prince should not be so loosely studied as to remember so weak a composition. Shak., 2 Hen. IV., ii. 2. 9.

I imagine our Bible is the most loosely read, least understood of any book in the English tongue. Alcott, Tablets, p. 142.

The importance of time, even in a war as loosely conducted . . . as that of the Rebellion, has no better illustration than in the case of the Monitor. J. R. Soley, Blockade and Cruisers, p. 236.

So, to speak loosely and generally, the Lancastrian rule was a direct continuity, and the Yorkist rule was a break in the continuity, of constitutional development. Stubbs, Const. Hist., § 373.

3. Immorally; wantonly; dissolutely.

A bishop, living loosely, was charged that his conversation was not according to the apostles' lives. Camden.

loosen (lö'sn), v. [= Dan. lösne; as loose, a., + -en[1]. Cf. loose, v.] I. trans. 1. To make loose; free from tightness, tension, firmness, or fixedness: as, to loosen a knot; to loosen a joint; to loosen a rock in the earth.—2. To render less dense or compact: as, to loosen the soil about the roots of a plant.

The cause of this was nothing but the loosening of the earth, which comforteth any tree. Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 435.

3. To let loose; free from restraint or confinement.

While you, with loosen'd sails and vows, prepare
To seek a land that flies the searcher's care.
Dryden, tr. of Ovid's Epistles, viii.

Breathe into the many-folded shell,
Loosening its mighty music.
Shelley, Prometheus Unbound, iii. 3.

From his girth
The dread scroll loosened fell to earth.
William Morris, Earthly Paradise, III. 203.

To loosen a cough, to relieve the affected parts from a sense of constriction; promote expectoration.—To loosen the bowels, to relieve them from costiveness.

II. intrans. To become loose; become less tight, firm, or compact.

loosener (lös'nėr), n. 1. One who loosens.—2. That which loosens; a laxative.

It wrought neither as an astringent or as a loosener; nor like opium, or bark, or mercury. Sterne, Tristram Shandy, IX. xxv. (19).

looseness (lös'nes), n. 1. The state of being loose or relaxed; laxness of attachment, adjustment, connection, or coherence: as, the looseness of a cord or a vein; looseness of the skin, of earth, or of the texture of cloth; looseness of expression or of reasoning.

To the conversational education of the Athenians I am inclined to attribute the great looseness of reasoning which is remarkable in most of their scientific writings. Macaulay, Athenian Orators.

2. Irregularity; instability; habitual deviation from rules; as applied to conduct, laxity; immorality; disorder.

When the people slacken, and fall to loosenes, and riot, then doe they as much as if they laid downe their necks for some wily Tyrant to get up and ride. Milton, Reformation in Eng., ii.

3. Flux from the bowels; diarrhea.

loosening-bar (lös'ning-bär), n. See bar[1].

loosestrife (lös'strīf), n. [< loose, v., + obj. ★strife; translating the Gr. name λυσιμαχία, λυσιμάχιον (> L. lysimachia), loosestrife: see Lysimachia.] In bot., the English popular name of several species of plants, chiefly of the genera Lysimachia and Lythrum.

Loosestrife (Lysimachia quadrifolia). 1, upper part of the stem with the flowers; 2, lower part, showing the rhizome; a, flower; b, fruit.

Along the Wallkill the spiked loosestrife, a tall, downy weed, with large, purple flowers, has long been common. J. Burroughs, [The Century, [XX. 99.

Common loosestrife, Lysimachia vulgaris or Lythrum Salicaria. [Great Britain.]—False loosestrife, a plant of the genus Ludwigia.—Golden or yellow loosestrife, Lysimachia vulgaris.—Purple or spiked loosestrife, Lythrum Salicaria.—Swamp-loosestrife, Decodon verticillatus.—Tufted loosestrife, Naumbergia thyrsiflora.—West Indian loosestrife, Jussiæa suffruticosa.

loose-work (lös'wėrk), n. An old style of embroidery in which parts were left free to move, as the leaves of a tree represented in the work, and attached by one side or one point only.

loot (löt), n. [< Hind. lūt (cerebral t), < Skt. lotra, loptra, plunder, booty, spoil, < √ lup, break: see rupture, and cf. rob, reave, from the same ult. root.] Booty; plunder, especially such as is taken in war. [Originally Anglo-Indian, but now in common English and American use.]

If his adherence was prompted by the pure love of loot, as he called plunder, . . . we were sure of his staunchness so long as our crop of loot throve better than our enemy's. J. W. Palmer, Up and Down the Irrawaddi, p. 136.

loot (löt), v. [< loot, n.] I. trans. To plunder, as a house or a city which has been taken by storm; pillage; sack; ransack in search of plunder; also, to seize and carry off as plunder.

A place of temporary security for the plunder looted by laundresses. Dickens, Uncommercial Traveller, xiv.

A body of soldiers . . . looted everything they could find. E. Sartorius, In the Soudan, p. 54.

II. intrans. To engage in pillage; take booty.

It was, of course, rather difficult to prevent our men from looting, and generally going on as natives, and, for the matter of that, white men too, are in the habit of doing after a victory. Harper's Mag., LXXVII. 361.

loo-table (lö'tā″bl), n. An ornamental round table for use in playing at loo.

"Augustus, my love," said Miss Pecksniff, "ask the price of the eight rosewood chairs and the loo-table." Dickens, Martin Chuzzlewit, xlvi.

looter (lö'tėr), n. One who loots; a plunderer.

Those insatiable looters, men, women, and children, all are at it. W. H. Russell, Diary in India, II. 340.

looty (lö'ti), n.; pl. looties (-tiz). [< Hind. lūtī, a plunderer, < lūt, plunder: see loot, n.] In the East Indies, a plunderer; a looter. See pindaree.

The looties indeed of Ispahán are proverbial as the most "rowdy" set of vagabonds in Persia. Encyc. Brit., XIII. 395.

loove†, v. t. See love[2].

loover†, looveredt. See louver, louvered.

loowarm, a. See lew-warm.

lop[1] (lop), v.; pret. and pp. lopped, ppr. lopping. [A var. of lap[2], q. v. Cf. lop[2], prob. the same word in another sense. For the variation of vowel, cf. flap and flop, strap and strop, knap and knop.] I. intrans. 1. To hang down loosely; droop: said especially of the pendulous ears of some animals, as dogs and rabbits.—2. To bend indolently sidewise or downward; loll; lounge. [Colloq.]

The señora . . . could only lop about in her saddle. The Century, XXIII. 652.

II. trans. To let droop; allow to hang down: as, a horse lops his ears.

lop[1] (lop), n. [< lop[1], v.] A hanging down; a drooping, as of the ears of rabbits.

lop[2] (lop), v. t.; pret. and pp. lopped, ppr. lopping. [< ME. loppen* (not recorded, but prob. the source of ML. loppare, lop); prob. = Norw.

loppa, pluck, snatch, a verb imitative of a quick stroke (cf. cop, clap, flop, snap, whop, etc.). In this view, the word may be related to MD. luppen, D. lubben, maim, castrate: see lib[1].] 1. To cut off, as the top or extreme part of anything; shorten or reduce by cutting off the extremities; cut off, as superfluous parts; trim by cutting: as, to lop a tree or its branches.

> Have I with this one rapier
> Pass'd through a field of pikes, whose heads I lopt
> As easily as the bloody-minded youth
> Lopt off the poppy-heads? Ford, Lady's Trial, iv. 2.

> D. Webster, Speech, Oct. 12, 1832.

2. To cut partly off and bend down: as, to lop the saplings of a hedge.=Syn. 1. To dock, crop, prune.

lop[2] (lop), n. [< lop[2], v.] That which is cut from trees; fagot-wood.

> We take
> From every tree lop, bark, and part o' the timber.
> Shak., Hen. VIII., i. 2. 96.
>
> It is usual to take the lop, or smaller branches [for distillation]. Spons' Encyc. Manuf., I. 8.

Lop and top. (a) The smaller branches and the tops of trees that are lopped off; fagot-wood.

> A very large fall of timber, . . . one fifth of which . . . belongs to the grantee, Lord Stawel. He lays claim also to the lop and top: but the poor . . . have taken it all away. Gilbert White, Nat. Hist. of Selborne, ix.

(b) Every part; the whole.

> Now thyselfe hast lost both lopp and topp.
> Spenser, Shep. Cal., February.

lop[3]† (lop), n. [ME. loppe, < AS. loppe, also lobbe (see lob[1]), a spider; connections unknown.] A spider.

> Thi riet shapen in manere of a net or of a webbe of a loppe. Chaucer, Astrolabe, i. 3.

lop[4] (lop), n. [ME. loppe, prob. < Icel. hloppa* = Sw. loppa = Dan. loppe, a flea, < Icel. hlaupa = AS. hleapan, E. leap[1].] A flea. [Now prov. Eng.]

> Grete loppis ouere all this lande thei flye,
> That with bytyng makis mekill blure.
> York Plays, p. 85.
>
> After this bore shal come a lambe that shal haue feet of lede, and hede of bras, an hert of a loppe, a swynes skyn, and an harde. Caxton, Chron. of Eng., p. 60.

lop[5]†. An obsolete preterit of leap[1].

Loparia (lō-pā'ri-ạ), n. pl. [NL.] A division of heteropterous bugs of the family Phytocoridæ, comprising the largest and most superbly colored members of the family.

lope[1] (lōp), v.; pret. and pp. loped, ppr. loping. [< ME. lopen, a var. of lepen (AS. hleápan), perhaps due in part to LG. lopen, D. loopen, leap: see leap[1].] I. intrans. 1†. To leap.

> This whinyard has gard many better men to lope than thou. Greene, James IV., Ind.

2. To move or run with a long step, as a dog; canter leisurely with a rather long, easy stride, as a horse.

> The most confirmed gait he could establish was a Canterbury gallop with the hind legs, which those more forward assisted for doubtful moments, though generally content with a loping trot.
> J. F. Cooper, Last of the Mohicans, ii.

II. trans. To cause to lope in going or running. [Rare.]

> For seven or eight miles we loped our jaded horses along at a brisk pace. T. Roosevelt, Hunting Trips, p. 281.

lope[1] (lōp), n. [< ME. lope; < lope[1], v. Cf. leap[1], n.] 1†. A leap.

> I cannot do the author justice . . . without taking a large lope over the next reign.
> Roger North, Examen, p. 618.

2. A striding movement; a run made with long steps; especially, a leisurely canter with a rather long, easy stride, as of a horse.

> The guards set Ashby through the hedge, and in a lope he turned up the tow-path. The Century, XXX. 286.

lope[2]†. A Middle English preterit and past participle of leap[1].

lop-eared (lop'ērd), a. [< lop[1] + eared.] Having ears which lop or hang downward; having pendulous ears. Also lap-eared.

lopeman† (lōp'mạn), n. A leaping man.

> The high and mighty! God, what a style is this!
> Methinks it goes like a Dutchy lope-man;
> A ladder of a hundred rounds will fail
> To reach the top on 't.
> Fletcher (and another), Noble Gentleman, iii. 4.

loper (lō'pėr), n. 1. One who or that which lopes.—2. In rope-making (in the now nearly obsolete process of laying up strands in a rope-walk by the use of a whirl), a swivel placed at one end of the rope-walk, the whirl being at the other end. The yarns are attached to the loper, and the twisting proceeds from it toward the whirl, the untwisted parts of the yarns being kept separate by the top, which, as the twisting progresses, is forced along toward the whirl.

lope-staff† (lōp'stȧf), n. A leaping-pole.

> A lope-staffe wherewith men leape ditches. Cotgrave.
> The doubtful fords and passages to try,

Lopez gambit. See gambit.

Lopezia (lō-pē'zi-ạ), n. [NL. (Cavanilles, 1791), named after J. Lopez, a Spanish botanist.] A genus of dicotyledonous choripetalous plants, of the family Onagraceæ, the evening-primrose family. It is characterized by irregular flowers, with four petals (each furnished with a claw), one stamen which is anther-bearing and one which is petaloid, and an indefinite number of ovules. They are erect branching herbs with small red or purple flowers on slender pedicels in racemes or subcorymbs at the end of the branches. Twelve species are recognized, all from Central America. This genus is the type of the tribe Lopezieæ, containing 3 other Mexican genera.

Lopezieæ (lō-pē-zī'ē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Spach, 1835), < Lopezia + -eæ.] A tribe of plants of the family Onagraceæ, typified by the genus Lopezia, and characterized by irregular flowers with one or two stamens and a loculicidal capsule. It embraces 4 genera of shrubs or herbs.

lopez-root (lō'pez-röt), n. The yellowish woody root of a prickly climber, Toddalia aculeata, native in the East Indies. It was formerly a noted remedy for diarrhea, but is now disused except in India, where it is valued as a stimulating tonic.

Lophiidæ (lō-fī'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Lophius + -idæ.] A family of pediculate fishes, typified by the genus Lophius. (a) In old systems, a family of alleged acanthopterygians, including all the Pediculati together with the Batrachidæ. (b) In more recent systems, a family conterminous with the order Pediculati, and embracing the Lophiidæ proper, Antennariidæ, Ceratiidæ, and Maltheidæ. (c) In Gill's ichthyological system, a family of pediculate fishes with branchial apertures in or behind the inferior axillæ of the pectoral fins, anterior dorsal ray superior, mouth opening more or less upward, lower jaw generally projecting beyond or closing in front of the upper, pseudobrachia with two actinosts, pectoral members little geniculated, and ventral fins separated by a wide interval. In this restricted sense the family includes only the fishes known as anglers or fishing-frogs. Also Lophiadæ, Lophidæ.

Lophiodon (lō-fī'ō-don), n. [NL. (Cuvier, 1822), < Gr. λόφιον or λοφεῖον, dim. of λόφος, a crest, + ὀδούς (ὀδοντ-) = E. tooth.] 1. A typical genus of the family Lophiodontidæ, from the Middle or Upper Eocene, differing from most of the family in having only 40 teeth. The dental formula is: 3 incisors, 1 canine, 3 premolars, and 3 molars in each upper and lower half-jaw. The animal was a tapiroid. See Lophiodontidæ.

Lower Jaw-bone of Lophiodon.

2. [l. c.] A member of this genus.

lophiodont (lō'fi-ō-dont), a. and n. [< Lophiodon(t-).] I. a. Pertaining to the Lophiodontidæ, or having their characters.

II. n. A tapiroid of the family Lophiodontidæ.

Lophiodontidæ (lō″fi-ō-don'ti-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Lophiodon(t-) + -idæ.] A family of extinct perissodactyl ungulate quadrupeds of the tapiroid series, having both the upper and the lower molars bilophodont, four toes on the fore feet, and three on the hind feet. It includes a number of Eocene genera representing the earliest and most generalized types of Perissodactyla, and ranging in size from that of a hare to that of an ox. The more primitive forms had 44 teeth, others 40. Coryphodontidæ is a synonym.

lophiodontine (lō″fi-ō-don'tin), a. [< lophiodont + -ine[1].] Same as lophiodont. E. D. Cope, Amer. Nat., XXI. 994.

lophiodontoid (lō″fi-ō-don'toid), a. Resembling a lophiodon; having the characters of the Lophiodontoidea.

Lophiodontoidea (lō″fi-ō-don-toi'dē-ạ), n. pl. [NL., < Lophiodon(t-) + -oidea.] A superfamily of tapiroid mammals, having the upper as well as the lower true molars without a continuous outer wall, but some or all of these teeth with two complete transverse crests. The group comprises the living Tapiridæ and the extinct Lophiodontidæ.

lophioid (lō'fi-oid), a. and n. [< NL. Lophius + Gr. εἶδος, form.] I. a. Pertaining to the Lophiidæ, or having their characters.

II. n. One of the Lophiidæ, as an angler. Agassiz; J. Richardson.

Lophiomyidæ (lō″fi-ō-mī'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Lophiomys + -idæ.] A family of simplicident myomorphic rodents, constituted by the genus Lophiomys. The skull is unique in some respects, the temporal fossæ being roofed over by bony plates proceeding from the temporal ridge and malar bone; the molars are rooted and tuberculate; there are no premolars; the clavicles are imperfect; the cæcum is small; and the thumb is opposable.

Lophiomys (lō-fī'ō-mis), n. [NL., < Gr. λόφιον or λοφεῖον, dim. of λόφος, a crest, + μῦς = E. mouse.] The typical and only genus of the family Lophiomyidæ. L. imhausi of Africa is the only species. A. Milne-Edwards, 1867.

Lophiostoma (lō-fi-os'tō-mạ), n. [NL., < Gr. λόφιον or λοφεῖον, dim. of λόφος, a crest, + στόμα, mouth.] A genus of sphæriaceous fungi, typical of the family Lophiostomaceæ, having the perithecia carbonaceous, and the ostiolum large and laterally compressed. The spores, which are oblong or fusiform, are plurilocular, usually brown or olivaceous, and frequently appendiculate. The species grow mostly on dead wood, decorticated twigs, etc.

Lophiostomaceæ (lō-fi-os-tō-mā'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Lophiostoma + -aceæ.] A family of sphæriaceous fungi proposed by Fuckel (1869), typified by the genus Lophiostoma.

lophiostomate (lō-fi-os'tō-māt), a. [< Gr. λόφιον or λοφεῖον, dim. of λόφος, a crest, + στόμα, mouth.] In bot., having the apertures or openings crested. Cooke's Manual. [Rare.]

lophiostomous (lō-fi-os'tō-mus), a. Same as lophiostomate.

Lophius (lō'fi-us), n. [NL., < Gr. λόφος, a crest.] The typical genus of Lophiidæ, originally including all the pediculate fishes, now restricted to the angler, L. piscatorius, and closely related species. See cut under angler.

lophobranch (lō'fō-brangk), a. and n. [< Gr. λόφος, a crest, + βράχια, gills.] I. a. Having tufted gills; specifically, pertaining to the Lophobranchii, or having their characters.

II. n. A fish of the order Lophobranchii.

lophobranchiate (lō-fō-brang'ki-āt), a. and n. [< Gr. λόφος, a crest, + βράγχια, gills, + -ate[1].] Same as lophobranch.

Lophobranchii (lō-fō-brang'ki-ī), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. λόφος, a crest, + βράγχια, gills.] An order of teleost fishes having the branchial skeleton imperfect, the superior and basal branchihyals and pharyngeals wanting, and the gills not lamellar, but developed as loop-like or tuft-like lobes, whence the name. In Cuvier's system it was the fifth order of fishes, defined as having the jaws free and complete, and the gills divided into small round tufts disposed in pairs along the branchial arches. The genus Pegasus, as well as the typical lophobranchs, was referred to this order by Cuvier. Pegasus, having normal lamelliform gills and being the type of a distinct family Pegasidæ, has been removed from the Lophobranchii and referred to the Acanthopterygii, or to a special suborder Hypostomides of Teleocephali. The order consequently now includes only the families Syngnathidæ and Hippocampidæ, or pipe-fishes and sea-horses, constituting the suborder Syngnathi, and the Solenostomidæ, alone representing the Solenostomi. (See cut at Hippocampidæ.) All the Lophobranchii have a dermal skeleton composed of angular plates having a radiate or stellate ossification. Most of the species are marine. Also Lophobranchia, Lophobranchiati.

lophodont (lō'fō-dont), a. [< Gr. λόφος, a crest, + ὀδούς (ὀδοντ-) = E. tooth.] In odontog., having the crowns of the molar teeth thrown into ridges or crests, longitudinal or transverse: opposed to bunodont.

Lophodytes (lō-fod'i-tēz), n. [NL., < Gr. λόφος, a crest, + δύτης, a diver.] A genus of Anatidæ, of the subfamily Merginæ, having an erect semicircular compressed crest; the hooded mergansers. L. cucullatus is a common bird of the northern hemisphere.

Lopholatilus (lō-fō-lat'i-lus), n. [NL., < Gr. λόφος, a crest, + NL. Latilus, q. v.] A genus of tilefishes of the family Latilidæ, having a large nuchal adipose appendage, whence the name. See tilefish.

Lophomonadidæ (lō″fō-mō-nad'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Lophomonas (-ad-) + -idæ.] A family of flagellate infusorians. These animalcules are naked, solitary, and free-swimming, bearing a tuft of flagella at the anterior extremity, and having no distinct oral aperture.

Lophomonas (lō-fom'ō-nas), n. [NL., < Gr. λόφος, a crest, + μονάς, a unit: see monad.] The typical genus of Lophomonadidæ, founded by Stein in 1860. L. blattarum inhabits the intestine of the cockroach.

lophophoral (lof'ō-fō-ral), a. [< lophophore + -al.] Of or pertaining to the lophophore or disk of a polyzoan.

lophophore (lof'ō-fōr), n. [< Gr. λόφος, a crest, + -φόρος, bearing, < φέρειν = E. bear[1].] In Polyzoa, the oral disk at the free end of the polypide, on which is situated the mouth: so called from the circlet of ciliated tentacles which it bears. See Plumatella. This organ is circular in most polyzoans, as the cyclostomous, chilostomous, and ctenostomous forms, or the Gymnolæmata, but hippocrepiform in the Phylactolæmata or Lophopoda.

The horseshoe-shaped lophophore, such as we see it in Phoronis and in Lophopus, is probably the ancestral form, and has given rise to the two other extreme forms of lophophore—namely, the "pterobranchiate," associated with a great development of the epistome, and the "circular," associated with a complete suppression of the epistome. Encyc. Brit., XIX. 439.

Lophophorinæ (lō-fof-ō-rī′nē), n. pl. [NL., ⟨ Lophophorus + -inæ.] A subfamily of Phasianidæ, named from the genus Lophophorus, and containing also Ceriornis and Pucrasia. These magnificent birds are known as impeyans, monauls, tragopans, pucras, etc.

Lophophorus (lō-fof′ō-rus), n. [NL., ⟨ Gr. λόφος, a crest, + -φόρος, bearing, ⟨ φέρειν = E. bear[1].] 1. A magnificent genus of Phasianidæ, type of the subfamily Lophophorinæ; the impeyans. See Impeyan pheasant, and monaul. C. J. Temminck, 1815.—2. A genus of copepods. Brady, 1878.

Lophophyteæ (lō-fō-fī′tē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Schott and Endlicher, 1832), ⟨ Lophophytum + -eæ.] A tribe of fleshy herbs of the family Balanophoraceæ, based on the genus Lophophytum. It is distinguished from the other tribes of the family by the absence of a perianth in the staminate flowers, the two stamens with two-celled anthers, and the pistillate flowers with an adherent ovary. The tribe includes 3 genera and 7 species, all South American.

Lophophytum (lō-fof′i-tum), n. [NL. (Schott and Endlicher, 1832), ⟨ Gr. λόφος, a crest, + φυτόν, a plant.] A genus of dicotyledonous apetalous plants, of the family Balanophoraceæ and type of the tribe Lophophyteæ. It is characterized by having no sheath at the base of the peduncle, and by its monœcious flowers, both staminate and pistillate being inserted on a mammillated spadix. They are smooth fleshy herbs, rising from a thick rootstock. There are 4 species, confined to Colombia, Brazil, and Bolivia.

Lophopoda (lō-fop′ō-dä), n. pl. [NL., ⟨ Gr. λόφος, a crest, + ποῦς (ποδ-) = E. foot.] A name of the typical Bryozoa, or fresh-water polyzoans, as opposed to the Stelmatopoda or Infundibulata, or sea-mats. These moss-animals have the lophophore horseshoe-shaped or hippocrepiform, whence they are also termed Hippocrepia, or, more frequently now, Phylactolæmata. The name is derived from one of the genera, Lophopus, of the family Plumatellidæ, which, with the Cristatellidæ, are included in the group. Also incorrectly written Lophopea, Lophophea.

Lophopsittacus (lō-fop-sit′a-kus), n. [NL. (A. Newton, 1875), ⟨ Gr. λόφος, a crest, + ψιττακός, a parrot.] A genus of psittacine birds, represented by the extinct crested parrot of Mauritius, L. mauritianus.

Lophornis (lō-fôr′nis), n. [NL. (Lesson, 1829), ⟨ Gr. λόφος, a crest, + ὄρνις, a bird.] A genus of crested humming-birds, such as L. ornatus. They are known as coquettes. Also called Bellatrix.

Lophortyx (lō-fôr′tiks), n. [NL., ⟨ Gr. λόφος, a crest, + ὄρτυξ, the quail.] A genus of American partridges having an elegant plume of recurved feathers on the crown; the helmet-quails. There are two distinct species in the United States, the valley-quail of California, L. californica, and the Arizona quail, L. gambeli. Both are fine game-birds, much esteemed for their flesh. See cut under helmet-quail.

lophosteon (lō-fos′tē-on), n.; pl. lophostea (-ä). [⟨ Gr. λόφος, a crest, + ὀστέον, bone.] The median and single one of the five separate bones or ossific elements of which the sternum of a carinate bird usually consists; the piece or part of the breast-bone which includes the crest or keel: correlated with coracosteon, pleurosteon, and mætosteon. W. K. Parker.

The extent of ossification of the lophosteon and metostea, and the mode of their coössification.
Coues, Key to N. A. Birds, p. 143.

Lophotes (lō-fō′tēz), n. [NL., ⟨ Gr. as if *λοφωτής, cf. λοφωτός, crested, ⟨ λόφος, a crest.] 1. The typical genus of the family Lophotidæ, remarkable for the prominence of the forehead and the procurrence of the dorsal fin, which forms a kind of frontal crest, whence the name. The only known species is L. cepedianus, a rarely found deep-sea fish of wide distribution, attaining a length of 5 feet.

Lophotes cepedianus.

2. A genus of raptorial birds of the family Falconidæ. Also called Baza. R. P. Lesson, 1831.

Lophotidæ (lō-fot′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., ⟨ Lophotes + -idæ.] A family of acanthopterygian fishes represented by the genus Lophotes, of the group of Acanthopterygii, having the body rib-bon-shaped, with the vent near the end of it, a short anal fin behind the vent, and the dorsal fin as long as the body.

Lophotragus† (lō-fot′ra-gus), n. [NL., ⟨ Gr. λόφος, a crest, + τράγος, a goat.] Same as Elaphodus.

Lophyropoda (lof-i-rop′ō-dä), n. pl. [NL., orig. Lophyropa, prop. Lophuropoda*, ⟨ Gr. λόφουρος, with a bushy tail (see Lophyrus), + ποῦς (ποδ-) = E. foot.] In Latreille's system, the first section of his Branchiopoda; an indefinable group, containing certain larval forms (zoœæ), the genera Nebalia and Cuma, and sundry copepod, ostracode, and cladocerous crustaceans. As subsequently modified, it became a more homogeneous group of entomostracous crustaceans, composed of the orders Copepoda and Ostracoda, which have leaf-like branchiæ attached to the feet, as implied in the name.

Lophyrus (lō-fī′rus), n. [NL., prop. Lophurus*, ⟨ Gr. λόφουρος, with a tufted tail, ⟨ λόφος, a crest, tuft, + οὐρά, tail.] 1. A genus of mollusks of the family Chitonidæ, or chitons. Poli, 1791.—2. A genus of saw-flies of the hymenopterous family Tenthredinidæ and subfamily Lydinæ, having one marginal cell on the fore wings, the male antennæ pectinate, the female serrate, and the lanceolate cell with a cross-vein. It is a large and wide-spread group, of economic interest. L. pini injures conifers in Europe, and L. abbotti does similar damage in the United States. Fifteen European and about as many North American forms are described. Ichneumon-flies of the genera Tryphon, Paniscus, and Campoplex are parasites of the larvæ. Latreille, 1802.
3. A genus of plant-bugs of the heteropterous family Capsidæ. Kolenati, 1845.—4. A genus of iguanoid lizards. Oppel, 1811.—5. A genus of terrestrial columbine birds of the subfamily Gourinæ: a synonym of Goura. L. P. Vieillot, 1816.

Lopidæ (lop′i-dē), n. pl. [NL. (Douglas and Scott, 1865), ⟨ Lopus + -idæ.] A family of plant-bugs formerly referred to the Capsidæ, represented by the genus Lopus. In these bugs the body is elongate, its sides being almost parallel; the antennæ are as long as the body, with the second joint twice as long as the first, and the third and fourth joints filiform; the rostrum reaches to the end of the metasternum; the scutellum is triangular and equilateral; and the elytra are longer than the abdomen.

loplolly†, n. See loblolly.

loppard† (lop′ärd), n. [⟨ lop[2] + -ard. Cf. pollard.] A tree with the top lopped or cut off; a pollard.

And in a foul slede of corupcion,
When he had na other fode
But wlatsom glet and loper [var. lopyrde] blode.
Hampole, Prick of Conscience, l. 459.

lopper[2] (lop′ėr), v. t. and i. [In another form lobber; Sc. also lapper; ⟨ ME. loperen (in verbal n. loperyng and p. a. lopered, etc.); cf. G. dial. lübbern, G. liefern, geliefern, curdle; a freq. form (whence the later simple form loppe) connected with lopper[2], a., and ult. with leap[1], run: see lopper[2], a.] To curdle or coagulate, as milk which has become sour; clot. [Prov. Eng. and U. S., where sometimes lobber.]

Of his mouth a petuus thing to se
The lopprit blude in ded thraw voydis be.
Gavin Douglas, Æneid, x. 328.

lopping (lop′ing), n. [Verbal n. of lop[2], v.] 1. The cutting off of all the branches of a tree, except the crop or leading shoot, for the sake of the profit to be derived from them, as contrasted with pruning, by which some of the branches are cut off for the sake of the tree.—2. That which is cut off; severed branches: commonly in the plural.

lopping-ax (lop′ing-aks), n. A small, light ax used for trimming trees.

lopping-shears (lop′ing-shērz), n. pl. Heavy shears used for trimming shrubs, hedges, etc.

loppy[1] (lop′i), a. [⟨ lop[1] + -y[1].] Hanging down; limp and pendulous. [Rare.]

A smeared and loppy shirt-collar.
Shirley Brooks, Aspen Court, xxvii.

loppy[2]† (lop′i), a. [ME. loppy; ⟨ lop[3] + -y[1].] Full of fleas.

lopseed (lop′sēd), n. A North American herb, Phryma leptostachya, with spikes of small purple flowers, which in fruit are bent back close against the axis, whence the name.

lopsided (lop′sī″ded), a. [Also lapsided, lobsided; ⟨ lop[1] + side + -ed[2].] Inclining to one side; heavier or more developed on one side than on the other, physically or mentally.

I had rather the college should turn out one of Aristotle's four-square men, capable of holding his own in whatever field he may be cast, than a score of lopsided ones developed abnormally in one direction.
Lowell, Oration at Harvard Univ., Nov. 8, 1886.

lopstert, n. An obsolete form of lobster.

loptail (lop′tāl), v. i. Same as lobtail.

Lopus (lō′pus), n. [NL. (Hahn, 1831), ⟨ Gr. λοπός, or λόπος, peel, shell, husk, bark, ⟨ λέπειν, peel, bark.] The typical genus of Lopidæ, having the sides of the prothorax foliaceous in front. They are mostly small bugs of variegated colors, found on the foliage of trees and shrubs. The 30 species are mainly European, but some are South American and others Australian.

lop-web† (lop′web), n. [ME., ⟨ lop[3], lob[1], a spider, + web.] A spider's web.

In maner of a net or of a lop-webbe.
Chaucer, Astrolabe, i. 21.

As a lopwebbe fileth fome and gnattis,
Taken and suffren gret files go.
Occleve, MS. Soc. Antiq. 134, f. 267. (Halliwell.)

lop-wood (lop′wůd), n. See the quotation. [Eng.]

The curious customs of lop-wood or privileges of cutting fuel from pollards at certain seasons of the year.
The Academy, Feb. 4, 1883, p. 71.

loquacious (lō-kwā′shus), a. [= F. loquace = Sp. locuaz = Pg. loquaz = It. loquace, ⟨ L. loquax (loquac-), talkative, ⟨ L. loqui, speak, = Skt. √lap, speak. loquaciousness (lō-kwā′shus-nes), n. The quality of being loquacious; loquacity.

loquacity (lō-kwas′i-ti), n. [⟨ F. loquacité = Sp. locuacidad = Pg. loquacidade = It. loquacità, ⟨ L. loquacita(t-)s, talkativeness, ⟨ loquax (loquac-), talkative: see loquacious.] Talkativeness; the habit or practice of talking continually or excessively.

Too great loquacity and too great taciturnity by fits.
Arbuthnot.

★=Syn. Loquaciousness, garrulity, volubility, chatter.

loquat (lō′kwat), n. [⟨ Chin. (Cantonese dial.) lukwat, ⟨ luh, a rush, + kiuh, an orange.] 1. An evergreen shrub or tree, Eriobotrya Japonica, native in China and Japan, and commonly introduced in warm temperate climates. It is an ornamental plant, with leaves nearly a foot long, and yields a fruit of a yellow color, resembling a small plum.
2. The fruit of this tree. Also called biwa, lukwati, pipa, and Japanese medlar.

loquela (lō-kwē′lä), n. [⟨ L. loquela, speech, ⟨ loqui, speak: see loquacious.] In law, an imparlance; a declaration.

loquence (lō′kwens), n. [⟨ L. loquentia, a talking, discourse, ⟨ loqui, speak: see loquacious.] The act of speaking; speech.

Thy tongue is loose, thy body close; both ill;
With silence this, with loquence that doth kill.
Owen, Epigrams (1677). (Nares.)

lora[1], n. Plural of lorum.

lora[2] (lō′rä), n.; pl. loræ (-rē). [NL., a false form of L. lorum, q. v.] In entom., same as lore[4], 4. Kirby.

loral (lō′ral), a. and n. [⟨ lore[4] + -al.] I. a. In zoöl., of or pertaining to the lore: as, the loral space; a loral stripe.

II. n. In herpet., a loral plate. Also loreal.

loranth (lō′ranth), n. [⟨ NL. Loranthus.] A plant of the family Loranthaceæ. Lindley.

Loranthaceæ (lō-ran-thā′sē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Don, 1825), ⟨ Loranthus + -aceæ.] A family of dicotyledonous apetalous plants, the mistletoe family, of which the greater number are shrubs, or undershrubs, parasitic on trees.

They have an inferior ovary, and an ovule which becomes erect after the flower opens. The family comprises 13 genera and about 500 species, which are found throughout all warm and tropical regions.

loranthaceous (lō-ran-thā′shius), a. [< NL. Loranthaceæ + -ous.] Belonging to the Loranthaceæ, or having their characters.

Loranthus (lō-ran′thus), n. [NL. (Linnæus), < LGr. λῶρον, λῶρος, a thong (< L. lorum, thong), + Gr. ἄνθος, flower.] A genus of dicotyledonous apetalous plants, the type of the family Loranthaceæ and tribe Eulorantheæ. It is distinguished from the only other genus of the tribe by having a fruit which is not winged and is usually a berry or a drupe. There are about 300 species, growing in all warm regions, with the exception of North America. The great majority are parasitic shrubs, generally with perfect flowers, which are small and beautifully colored, usually red or yellow. (See mistletoe.) Nine fossil species have been described, occurring in the Tertiary deposits of Europe, and also of Australia, New Zealand, and Borneo.

lorate (lō′rāt), a. [< L. loratus, bound with thongs, < lorum, a thong, whip, lash, strap: see *lore*4.] In bot., shaped like a thong or strap; ligulate; linear; much elongated.

lorcha (lôr′chä), n. [Pg. lorcha; perhaps a corruption of Pg. lancha, a pinnace, or of lanchara, a small coasting-vessel used in the Malay archipelago. See lanchara.] A light Lorcha.

Chinese sailing vessel, built somewhat after ★a European model, but rigged like a junk.

lord (lôrd), n. [= Sc. laird; < ME. lord, loverd, lowerd, laverd, laferd, < AS. hlāford, the master of a household, lord; prob. a contraction of hlāfweard*, lit. 'loaf-ward,' i. e. 'keeper (and dispenser) of bread,' < hlāf, bread, loaf, + weard, a keeper: see *loaf*1 and ward, n. For the contraction of -weard to -ord, cf. -ald, -old, as in the name Harold and its G. cognate herold (see herald), contracted from -wald, -weald (-walda, -wealda). The name hlāford is peculiar to AS. (the Icel. lāvardhr being borrowed). This fact and the fanciful nature of its literal meaning indicate that it was prob. orig. a poetical designation, which, like līchama, body (see likam), and other orig. poetical words, came to be adopted in prose, with consequent contraction and loss of meaning. Hence prob. lady, q. v.] 1. A master or ruler; a man possessing supreme authority or power of control; a monarch, governor, chief, proprietor, or paramount disposer.

> They speke all Greke, excepte the Venycyans, that be lordes and gouernours there.
> Sir R. Guylforde, Pylgrymage, p. 14.

> Our Saviour, who had all gifts in him, was Lord to express his indoctrinating power in what sort him best seem'd. Milton, Apology for Smectymnuus.

> Who hath not learned, in hours of faith,

> That Life is ever lord of Death?
> Whittier, Snow-Bound.

2. [cap.] In Scrip., and in general Christian use, the Supreme Being; Jehovah: with the definite article except in address; also applied to Christ, who is called the Lord Jesus Christ, the Lord, or our Lord. The word Lord also appears to be used of the Holy Ghost in 2 Cor. iii. 17 (referring to Ex. xxxiv.). In the English version of the Old Testament, LORD, when so printed, is a translation of, or rather substitute for, the Hebrew Jahveh, Jehovah, or Adonai. In the English version of the New Testament it is a translation of the Greek Κύριος (Latin Dominus), variously translated God, Lord, Master, Owner, Sir.

> He seide, "Ye knowe wele that now cometh the feste that oure lorde was Inne I-bore, and he is lorde of alle lordes." Merlin (E. E. T. S.), i. 96.

> The LORD said unto my Lord, Sit thou at my right hand, until I make thine enemies thy footstool. Ps. cx. 1.

> Now the Lord is that Spirit: and where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty. 2 Cor. iii. 17.

3. A title of respect formerly given to persons of superior rank or consideration, especially in the phrase of address 'my lord,' as to kings and princes, monks or other ecclesiastics, a husband, etc.: still used humorously of a husband with reference to his wife.

> "My lord the monk," quod he, "be myrie of chere."
> Chaucer, Prol. to Monk's Tale, l. 36.

> Art thou that my lord Elijah? 1 Ki. xviii. 7.

> I oft in bitterness of soul deplored
> My absent daughter, and my dearer lord.
> Fenton, in Pope's Odyssey, iv. 362.

4. The proprietor of a manor; the grantor under whom feudal tenants held, for whom he was to some extent responsible, and over whom he had authority. The word, with its meaning modified, is retained in the modern term landlord.— 5. A nobleman; a title of honor in Great Britain given to those who are noble by birth or creation: applied to peers of the realm, of Scotland, and of Ireland, including dukes, marquises, earls, viscounts, and barons. Archbishops and bishops also are addressed by this title. A nobleman is customarily addressed as My lord, and the holder of a noble title, whether by right or by courtesy, is frequently (a baron ordinarily) designated Lord: thus, the Marquis of Salisbury is spoken of as Lord Salisbury, his eldest son Viscount Cranborne (courtesy title) as Lord Cranborne, etc. The younger sons of dukes and marquises have the courtesy title Lord prefixed to their Christian names: as, Lord Randolph Churchill (son of the seventh Duke of Marlborough).

> All marquises Eldest sonnes are named no Earles, but lord of a place or barrony, without any Addission of his Christen name; and all his other brethren Lordes, with the Addition of there Christoned name.
> Booke of Precedence (E. E. T. S., extra ser.), i. 27.

> The title of lord belongs to all bishops in all churches, and not merely to those who possess a seat in the English house of lords, nor has it anything to do with a royal prerogative of conferring titles, not being a recognised grade of peerage. Stubbs, Const. Hist., § 428, note.

6. An honorary title bestowed in Great Britain on certain official personages, generally as part of a designation. The mayors of London, York, and Dublin, and the provosts of Edinburgh, Glasgow, Aberdeen, Perth, and Dundee have this title; also, all judges while presiding in court, and the members of the College of Justice in Scotland.

7. One who goes foremost through the harvest with the scythe or the sickle. [Prov. Eng. (Suffolk).]

> My Lord begg'd round, and held his hat.
> Says Farmer Gruff, says he,
> There's many a lord, Sam, I know that,
> Has begg'd as well as thee.
> Bloomfield, The Horkey.

House of Lords, the upper of the two branches of Parliament of Great Britain and Ireland, divided into the lords spiritual and temporal. The full assembly would consist of 3 princes of the blood royal, 2 archbishops, 22 dukes, 24 marquises, 123 earls, 46 viscounts, 24 bishops, 344 barons, 16 Scotch representative peers, and 28 Irish representative peers: total 632. Whitaker's Almanack, 1912. He is a member of the British ministry, and retires from office with the cabinet to which he owes his appointment. (b) In Great Britain and Ireland, the principal official of a county, who has under him deputy lieutenants, and controls the appointment of justices of the peace and the issue of commissions in the local military organizations. The office was originally created for the defense of the counties in times of disturbance.—Lord of a manor, one who possesses a manor having copyhold tenants.—Lord of appeal in ordinary, one of those members of the British House of Lords appointed specially, with exceptionally limited privileges and powers, to form with other peers an ultimate court of appeal. See the quotation.

> The judicial functions of the House of Lords have been virtually transferred to an appeal committee, consisting of the Lord Chancellor and other peers who have held high judicial office, and certain lords of appeal in ordinary created by the Act. . . . The lords of appeal in ordinary are an entirely new creation. They hold office on the same conditions as other judges; they take rank as barons for life; but they are entitled to a writ of summons to attend and vote in the House only so long as they hold office, and their dignity does not descend to their heirs.

Lord of hosts. See *host*1.—Lord of lords, in Scrip., a title of Christ.

> These shall make war with the Lamb, and the Lamb shall overcome them: for he is Lord of lords, and King of kings. Rev. xvii. 14.

Lord of misrule, a person formerly chosen to direct the Christmas sports and revels. His rule began on All-hallow eve and continued till Candlemas day. Also called king of misrule.—Lord of the ascendant. See ascendant, 1.—Lord of the May. See the quotation.

> It was customary to personify this famous outlaw [Robin Hood], with several of his most noted associates, and add them to the pageantry of the May-games. He presided as Lord of the May; and a female, or rather, perhaps, a man habited like a female, called the Maid Marian, his faithful mistress, was the Lady of the May. His companions were distinguished by the title of "Robin Hood's Men," and were also equipped in appropriate dresses; their coats, hoods, and hose were generally green.

See president.—Lord Privy Seal. See Keeper of the Privy Seal, under keeper.—Lords Commissioners of the Treasury. See treasurer.—Lord's Day, the first day of the week; Sunday.—Lord's domain, that part of a manor occupied by the lord, or held by tenures which can be shown to have been servile in their origin.—Lord's forebode†. See forbode.—Lords marchers. See marcher.—Lords of Council and Session. See council.—Lords of justiciary, the judges of the Court of Justiciary or supreme criminal court of Scotland. See justiciary.—Lords of regality. See regality.—Lords of Session, the judges of the Scottish Court of Session.—Lords of the Articles, a committee of the Scottish Parliament, by whom the measures to be proposed in Parliament were prepared.—Lords of the bedchamber. See bedchamber.—Lords of the Congregation. See congregation.—Lords ordinary, the five judges who form the outer house of the Scottish Court of Session.—Lord's Prayer, a prayer or model of prayer given by Jesus to his disciples. It exists in the New Testament in two forms (Mat. vi. 9–13; Luke xi. 2–4), and it appears in the Book of Common Prayer in a translation of the first of these slightly different from that in the King James Bible. It is used in some part of almost all liturgical services. In ancient eucharistic offices it regularly follows at the end of the canon; in the Anglican communion office, however, after the communion of the people. In liturgical use it is said sometimes with and sometimes without the final doxology of Mat. vi. 13 (omitted in the revised version), "For thine is the kingdom," etc.—Lords spiritual, the archbishops and bishops who have seats in the House of Lords.—Lord's Supper. (a) A sacrament or an ordinance instituted by Christ for observance by his followers, and consisting in the blessing or consecration of bread and wine with the words of institution (see institution) and the subsequent eating and drinking of the consecrated elements. Bishops . . . put on the stoicharion, which . . . differs from that of a Priest by being waved in white and red bands, called loria. These signify rivers of grace, and set forth the doctrine which should flow from a Pontiff.
J. M. Neale, Eastern Church, i. 310.

loriot (lor′i-ot), n. [< F. loriot (OF. also lorion), i. e. l'oriot, < le, the, + OF. oriot, var. of oriol, a witwall, an oriole: see oriole.] The golden oriole of Europe, Oriolus galbula.

The swallow and the loriot
Are not so swift of wing.
R. H. Stoddard, Chinese Songs.

loris (lō′ris), n. [NL. loris (F. loris, sing. and pl.); commonly said to be a native (E. Ind.) name, but according to Baird < D. loeris, a clown, booby, formerly adj., loerisch, loersch, clownish, < loer, loerd, a clown, fool, < OF. lourd, a stupid fellow: see lourd[1].] 1. The slender lemur of Ceylon, Arachnocebus or Loris gracilis, a prosimian mammal of the family Lemuridæ and subfamily Nycticebinæ: more fully called slender loris. Also lori; pl. loris.—2. [cap.] The typical genus of Lorisinæ, based by Geoffroy on the slender lori or loris of Ceylon, and the same as Arachnocebus of Lesson; extended to include the slow lemur, which is more frequently referred to a genus Nycticebus, Stenops, or Bradylemur. The species are arboreal and nocturnal inhabitants of the East Indies. L. gracilis is remarkable for its slender form, disproportionately long limbs, the absence of a tail, short muzzle, and large eyes.

Slender Loris (Loris gracilis).

Lorisinæ (lor-i-sī′nē), n. pl. [NL., < Loris + -inæ.] A subfamily of Lemuridæ, named from the genus Loris, in a restricted sense including only this genus and Nycticebus, in a wider sense including these genera with Arctocebus and Perodicticus: in the latter use it is the same as Nycticebinæ. The animals referred to this group are the slender loris, Loris gracilis; the slow lemur, Nycticebus tardigradus; the potto, Perodicticus potto; and the angwantibo, Arctocebus calabarensis. Also Loridina.

Lorius (lō′ri-us), n. [NL., < E. lory, q. v.] A large genus of small trichoglossine parrots, type of the subfamily Loriinæ; the lories. The term has been used with much latitude, but is now restricted to the broad-tailed lories, of which more than 20 species are known, all of the Austromalayan region, as L. domicella of the Moluccas. The characteristic coloration is red varied with blue; but some species are green, others brown or black. Several subdivisions of Lorius are recognized, especially Eos. The name Domicella is now much used instead of Lorius. See cut under Domicella.

lorn (lôrn), a. [< ME. lorn, loren, lore, < AS. loren, pp. of leósan, lose: see leese[1], lose[1].] 1. Lost; undone.

Lotophagi (lō-tof′ạ-jī), n. pl. [L., < Gr. Λωτοφάγοι, lotus-eaters, < λωτός, lotus, + φαγεῖν, eat.] The lotus-eaters; in Gr. legend, especially as given in the Odyssey, the name of a people who ate the fruit of a plant called the lotus, conjecturally identified with various plants which have borne that name. Those of the followers of Odysseus or Ulysses who ate of it are described as being rendered forgetful of their friends and unwilling to return to their own land. In historical times a people known under the name of Lotophagi lived on the northern coast of Africa in Tripoli, and on the island of Meninx (Lotophagitis, modern Jerba) in Tunis. See lotus, 1, and lotus-eater.

lotor (lō′tọr), n. [NL., < L. lavare, pp. lotus, wash: see lave[2], lotion.] The washer: a designation, both specific and generic, of the American racoon, Procyon lotor, from its habit of dipping its food in water before eating it.

Sw. lotteri = Sp. lotería = Pg. loteria, < F. loterie, lottery, a lot, < lot, lot, share: see lot, n.] 1. Distribution of anything by lot; allotment; also, the drawing of lots; determination by chance or fate; random choice; matter of chance: as, the lottery of life.

Ajax. Who shall answer him?
Achil. I know not: it is put to lottery.
Shak., T. and C., ii. 1. 140.

Knowledge and improvements are to be got by sailing and posting for that purpose; but whether useful knowledge and real improvements, is all a lottery.
Sterne, Sentimental Journey, p. 14.

2. A scheme for raising money by selling chances to share in a distribution of prizes; more specifically, a scheme for the distribution of prizes by chance among persons purchasing tickets, the correspondingly numbered slips, or lots, representing prizes or blanks, being drawn from a wheel on a day previously announced in connection with the scheme of intended prizes. In law the term lottery embraces all schemes for the distribution of prizes by chance, such as policy-playing, gift-exhibitions, prize-concerts, raffles at fairs, etc., and includes various forms of gambling. Most of the governments of the continent of Europe have at different periods raised money for public purposes by means of lotteries; and a small sum was raised in America during the Revolution by a lottery authorized by the Continental Congress. Both state and private lotteries have been forbidden by law in Great Britain, and in all of the United States legislation on the subject is usually comprehensive and severe.

He [man] comes not into the world, nor he comes not to the Sacrament, as to a lottery, where perchance he may draw salvation. Donne, Sermons, iv.

Lotteries, at this period common in all New England, had become a favorite resort for raising money to support government, carry on wars, build churches, construct roads, or endow colleges. S. Judd, Margaret, i. 6.

3†. The lot or portion falling to one's share; a chance allotment or prize.

Octavia is
A blessed lottery to him.
Shak., A. and C., ii. 2. 248.

4. A children's picture or print. [Prov. Eng.]

lotto, loto[1] (lot′ō, lō′tō), n. [It. lotto, lot, lottery: see lot, n.] 1. A game played with disks and cards. Each disk has one number on it, and each card several numbers in lines. The disks are drawn from a bag, the number on each is called, and the corresponding number on one of the cards covered. That player who first covers all the numbers of one line wins the game.

2. Same as keno.

lot-tree (lot'trē), n. A European tree, Sorbus ★Aria. Also called white beam-tree.

lotus (lō'tus), n. [< L. lotus, lotos, < Gr. λωτός, the name of several plants (see def.). Cf. lote[2].] 1. One of a number of different plants famous in mythology and tradition, or in modern times associated with traditions. Aside from the Homeric lotus (see Lotophagi and lotus-tree), the name was also given to several species of water-lily, as the blue water-lily, Castalia cærulea, the Egyptian water-lily, C. Lotus, and the nelumbo (Nelumbo Nelumbo), the Pythagorean or sacred bean, which grow in stagnant or slowly running waters. Castalia cærulea and C. Lotus are often found figured on Egyptian buildings, columns, etc., and the nelumbo, or Hindu and Chinese lotus, bears a prominent part in mythology. In the decorative art of India the lotus-flower is used especially as a support to the figure of a divinity or of a sage or deified personage. It is so represented both in relief or solid, as in bronze, and in paintings. Similar representations in Chinese and Japanese art seem to be derived directly from India.

2. [cap.] [NL. (Tournefort, 1700).] A genus of leguminous plants, type of the tribe Loteæ, distinguished by a two-valved pod and the pointed keel of the corolla. About 120 species are recognized by recent authors. They are found in the temperate and mountainous regions of Europe and Asia, also in Africa, America, and Australia. The plants are shrubby herbs, with peculiar quadri- to quinquefoliate leaves, of which three leaflets are near the apex of the leaf and the other two are near the base, so as to have the appearance of stipules. The flowers are red, pink, or white, and disposed in axillary umbels. The pod is oblong or often linear, and straight or curved. Many of the species are cultivated. A general name for plants of the genus is bird's-foot trefoil. L. corniculatus is the common bird's-foot trefoil or clover of Great Britain, etc., also called cat-in-clover, fingers-and-toes, and by other fanciful names. Its herbage is highly nutritious, and it is a valuable pasture- and meadow-plant, with taller fodder-plants, or in inferior soils. Some other species are also valuable. L. Jacobæus is sometimes called St. James's flower, or jacobi.

3. In arch., an ornament in the form of the Egyptian water-lily, Castalia Lotus, frequently figured in the art of ancient nations, notably on certain types of the capitals of Egyptian columns.—Blue lotus of the Nile, Castalia cærulea.—East Indian lotus, Castalia pubescens.—Egyptian lotus, Castalia Lotus. See def. 1.—Hungarian lotus, a European water-lily, Castalia thermalis. See water-lily.

lotus-berry (lō'tus-ber″i), n. A small West Indian tree, Byrsonima coriacea of the Malpighiaceæ, bearing edible yellow drupes.

lotus-eater (lō'tus-ē″tėr), n. One of the Lotophagi; hence, one who finds pleasure in a listless, dreamy life; a devotee of indolent pleasures; a languid voluptuary.

> And round about the keel with faces pale,
> Dark faces pale against that rosy flame,
> The mild-eyed melancholy Lotos-eaters came.
> Tennyson, Lotos-Eaters.

lotus-tree (lō'tus-trē), n. 1. A prickly shrub, Zizyphus Lotus, native in northern Africa and southern Europe, yielding one of the jujube-fruits, a sweet and pleasant-flavored drupe of the size of an olive. The fruit is not equal to that of the common jujube, Z. Zizyphus, but is much used for food where it is native, and furnishes a kind of wine. It is held by many to have been the food of the classical Lotophagi, as it agrees with the locality and description given by Polybius. See Lotophagi.

2. The nettle-tree, Celtis australis, bearing a small sweet berry, which has sometimes been identified with the ancient lotus-food. Also called tree-lotus. See Celtis and nettle-tree.—3. The date-plum, Diospyros Lotus, an Asiatic tree, cultivated in southern Europe. Its sweet, barely edible fruit can hardly be the classical lotus.

[Among trees that have been supposed to be the classical lotus may be mentioned also Nitraria retusa, a thorny, desert-loving shrub, whose succulent fruit has a stimulating quality.]

Louis-Quatorze (lö'i-ka-tôrz'), a. [F.] An epithet designating a style of architecture and decoration prevalent in France in the reign of Louis XIV. (1643–1715), and copied in other countries. It is especially characteristic of palaces and large mansions of that period. Externally the forms are in a freely treated classical style, and rustication is much employed; the windows are larger and the rooms more lofty and spacious than in buildings of the time immediately preceding, and there is a constant effort to attain majesty and sumptuousness. The palace of Versailles and the eastern colonnade of the Louvre are prominent examples of Louis-Quatorze. The style is characteristically illustrated in internal decoration, the favorite medium of which was gilt stucco-work combined in figures uniting lavishness with studied symmetry and balance of parts. The scroll and shell appear as familiar details, and panels—either rectangular or nearly rectangular in form, sometimes severely plain, sometimes ornamented—are commonly present as a main feature of the design. The classical ornaments and all the elements of the earlier Renaissance styles are admitted, but are treated with the modifications imposed by the spirit of the age. In decorative art the Louis-Quatorze style embraces several new methods of decoration, such as incrusted work and the free use of veneers of precious woods, as well as the mounting and ornamentation of furniture in elaborate designs of gilded bronze, applied as lock-plates, hinges, handles, etc. The forms of panels, of pieces of furniture, and the like become more varied than in the earlier Renaissance, and the ornamentation has but little reference to natural forms. The richly inlaid furniture of Boule (see buhl) surpassed all previous work of this kind.

Louis-Quinze (lö'i-kanz'), a. [F.] An epithet designating the style of French architecture and decoration which succeeded the Louis-Quatorze style, and characterized the reign of Louis XV. (1715–74). In it the peculiarities of the preceding style are carried to extremes; the severe sense of proportion and measure which always characterized the magnificence of the seventeenth century is replaced by a complete disregard of symmetry and of the interdependence of masses, by an elongated treatment of the foliations of the scroll, and by a profusion of shell-work of crimped and fantastic but meaningless conventionality. In its most debased and tawdry form, ornament of this style is termed rococo.

Louis-Seize (lö'i-sāz'), a. [F.] An epithet designating the style of architecture and ornamental design which prevailed in France in the reign of Louis XVI. (1774–92), distinguished by a return to greater simplicity than under Louis XV., and not seldom by the aim to reproduce classical architectural forms, as in parts of furniture, etc. The members of tables, chairs, etc., are very commonly slender, the moldings delicate and refined, the general forms right-angled and severe; but the surface decoration is very richly diversified. The arts of engraving, porcelain-decoration, tapestry, etc., were very prosperous and characteristic during the prevalence of this style.

Louis-Treize (lö'i-trāz'), a. [F.] An epithet designating the styles of French architecture and decoration characteristic of the reign of Louis XIII. (1610–43), or in general of the first half of the seventeenth century. The architecture of this time is less light and elegant than that of the earlier Renaissance; it makes extensive use of orders based on the classical, and seeks to make them massive and big, carrying the columns from the base of the edifice to the cornice. High-pitched roofs continue in favor, as well as polychrome effects from the combination of stone and brick; and rustic work or bossage is accentuated. In cabinet-work and decoration kindred elements of design obtain; pseudo-classical columns and engaged columns, often bossed, are usual, and are combined with entablatures, etc., following more or less closely the Vitruvian dicta. Carving in relief is abundant, and often good, but in general less delicate than that of the earlier Renaissance.

louse[1] (lous), n.; pl. lice (līs). [< ME. lous (pl. lis, lise, lys), < AS. lūs (pl. lȳs) = D. luis = OHG. MHG. lūs, G. laus = Icel. lūs = Dan. Sw. lus, louse; perhaps lit. 'destroyer' or 'damager,' from the root lus* of loose, lose[1], loss, etc. Cf. Gr. φθείρ, a louse, < φθείρειν, destroy.] An insect or other small arthropod (as a crustacean) that infests other animals or plants, or an animal resembling such parasites: a name for a great variety of small creatures. Specifically—(a) One of a class of small degraded parasitic hemipterous insects of the order Hemiptera and suborder Parasita; the Pediculina or Pediculidæ. These are the little wingless bugs most frequently called lice, infesting man and other animals as external parasites, in the hair or fur. They are haustellate, or furnished with a sucking-proboscis, which can be protruded and fixed in the skin of the host, the attachment being secured by little hooks; there are six legs with hooks for crawling and grappling; the general form is elliptical, most of the body consisting of the large jointed abdomen; the skin is so tough that when the louse is crushed it can be heard to crack. Such lice are oviparous and extremely prolific; their eggs, which mature very rapidly, are glued to hairs, and are known as nits. At least three kinds infest man. The head-louse, Pediculus capitis, living chiefly in the hair of the head, is the slenderest one of the three. The body-louse, Pediculus vestimenti, living in the hair of the body at large, and in the seams of the clothing, is less transparent than the former, with a grayish tint, and hence called grayback; myriads of these creatures are generated where people are crowded in unclean or unwholesome conditions, as in camps, jails, etc. The last kind, the crab-louse, Phthirius pubis or inguinalis, chiefly affects the hair of the pubis and perinæum, but may range all over the body; its shape is peculiar, as shown in the figure under crab-louse. Most mammals, if not all, have lice peculiar to themselves. Hæmatopinus is an extensive genus of such lice: H. vituli is found on cattle. A species of Hæmatomyzus affects elephants. Bats have a set of lice, constituting the family Nycteribiidæ.

> A lous is a worme with many fete, & it commeth out of the filthi and onclene skynne. . . . To withdryue them. The best is for to wasshe the oftentimes, and to channge oftentymes clene lynen.
> Quoted in Book of Quinte Essence (ed. Furnivall), p. 19.

(b) Bird-lice are parasitic insects, of several hundred species, various genera, and several families, which old authors ranged with the foregoing in the order Hemiptera, but later placed in the Pseudoneuroptera. They are known as the order or superfamily Mallophaga. They have mandibulate or biting mouth-parts, are wingless, and of very variable forms. They are by no means confined to birds, but infest mammals as well; almost every kind of bird and beast is infested by these creatures, sometimes several species to one host, and in such multitudes as to cause disease and death. Of these, such as infest domestic quadrupeds and birds belong to the genera Trichodectes, Docophorus, Nirmus, Goniocotes, Goniodes, Lipeurus, Trinotum, Colpocephalum, Menopon, and Gyropus. (c) The beaver harbors a remarkable louse, Platypsyllus castoris, a degraded clavicorn beetle, so peculiar as to have been made type of an order, Achreioptera. (d) Insects have their own lice. Such are the bee lice, or pupiparous dipterous insects of the family Braulidæ, order Diptera; and some of the lice of bats are similar dipterous insects, though wingless, of the family Nycteribiidæ. Bees, wasps, etc., are also infested by certain small parasitic heteromerous beetles in the form of lice, such as the wingless larvæ of Meloidæ, a species of which has been named Pediculus melittæ, and the whole family Stylopidæ. Insects affected by the latter are said to be stylopized. None of the foregoing lice are aquatic. (e) Fishes, marine mammals, crustaceans, etc., are infested by a great variety of small degraded crustaceans, collectively known as fish-lice or Ichthyophthira. Most of these belong to a class or order Epizoa or Siphonostoma, or Lernæoidea; a few are cirripeds, as Rhizocephala. Whale-lice are Cyamidæ. Carp-lice are Argulidæ. (f) Wood-lice are the terrestrial isopods of the family Oniscidæ, also called slaters, sow-bugs, etc. These are not parasites, but some of the aquatic isopods are fish-lice, as Cymothoidæ. (g) Plants are infested by multitudes of small plant-sucking hemipters, known as plant-lice, and formerly collectively termed Phytophthiria: as the aphids, Aphididæ, some of which are also called gall-lice; the psyllids, Psyllidæ, called flea-lice and jumping plant-lice; and the scale-insects or Coccidæ, some of which are also known as bark-lice. (h) Book-lice are corrodentian insects of the family Psocidæ, various species of which, as those of the genera Atropos and Clothilla, injure books. (i) Certain mites or acarids are sometimes called lice, as the harvest-ticks, known as red-lice, the itch-mite or itch-louse, etc. For further information, see the compounded words, and also the technical names.

louse[1] (louz), v. t.; pret. and pp. loused, ppr. lousing. [< ME. lousen; < louse[1], n.] To clean from lice. [Obsolete or rare.]

> Howe handsome [convenient] it is to lye and sleepe, or to lowze themselves in the sunshine.

Addison, The Royal Exchange.

4. To caress; show affection by caresses: a childish use of the word.

He climbed often into her lap, and, putting his arms round her neck, loved her with his cheek against hers, and with all his little heart. Harper's Mag., LXXIX. 271.

To love one's love with an A, B, etc., a formula used in redeeming forfeits.

For these you play at purposes,
And love your loves with As and Bs;
For these, at Beast and Ombre woo,
And play for love and money too.
S. Butler, Hudibras, III. i. 1007.

I'll give you a clue to my trade, in a game of forfeits. I love my love with a B because she's Beautiful; I hate my love with a B because she's Brazen; I took her to the sign of the Blue Boar, and I treated her with Bonnets; her name's Bouncer, and she lives in Bedlam.
Dickens, Our Mutual Friend, ii. 1.

II. intrans. To have strong affection; especially, to be passionately attached to one of the opposite sex.

But since thou lovest, love still and thrive therein,
Even as I would when I to love begin.
Shak., T. G. of V., i. 1. 9.

'Tis better to have loved and lost
Than never to have loved at all.
Tennyson, In Memoriam, xxvii.

★ love[1] (luv), n. [Also dial. (Sc.) luve; < ME. love, luve, < AS. lufu, lufe (= MLG. lēve = OHG. liubi, liupī, liupa, MHG. G. liebe; cf. OFries. liafte, NFries. ljeafde = D. liefde), love, < lufian, love: see love[1], v.] 1. The principle of sympathetic or pleasurable attraction in sentient and thinking beings; that feeling of predilection or solicitude for, or delight in, certain individuals or classes, principles, qualities, or things, which excites a strong desire or craving for the welfare, companionship, possession, enjoyment, or promotion of its object or objects; the yearning desire (whether right or perverted) for what is thought to be best in any relation or from any point of view. In its purest and most universal form, love is regarded in the highest conception of God as the essence of divinity.

Nature worketh in us all a love to our own counsels.
Hooker, Eccles. Polity, Pref., ii.

Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends. John xv. 13.

The love of money is the root of all evil. 1 Tim. vi. 10.

We render you our loves, sir,
The best wealth we bring home.
Fletcher, Wildgoose Chase, i. 3.

Any one reflecting upon the thought he has of the delight which any present or absent thing is apt to produce in him has the idea we call love. For when a man declares in autumn, when he is eating them, or in spring, when there are none, that he loves grapes, it is no more but that the taste of grapes delights him: let an alteration of health or constitution destroy the delight of their taste, and he can then be said to love grapes no longer.
Locke, Human Understanding, II. xx. 4.

2. Intimate personal affection between individuals of opposite sex capable of intermarriage; the emotional incentive to and normal basis of conjugal union: as, to be in love; to marry for love.

And Jacob served seven years for Rachel; and they seemed unto him but a few days, for the love he had to her.
Gen. xxix. 20.

But had I wist, before I kiss'd,
That love had been sae ill to win,
I'd lock'd my heart in a case of gold,
And pin'd it with a silver pin.
Waly, Waly, but Love be Bonny (Child's Ballads, IV. 134).

It's good to be off with the old love,
Before you are on with the new. Old song.

Hail, wedded love, mysterious law, true source
Of human offspring, sole propriety
In Paradise of all things common else!
Milton, P. L., iv. 750.

Fond love, the gentle vow, the gay desire,
The kind deceit, the still-reviving fire,
Persuasive speech, and more persuasive sighs,
Silence that spoke, and eloquence of eyes.
Pope, Iliad, xiv. 249.

3. A beloved person; an object of affectionate interest, as a sweetheart or a husband or wife: often also used in address as a term of endearment.

She hears no tidings of her love.
Shak., Venus and Adonis, l. 867.

They [the Virginia Indians] would haue beards, but that they pluck away the haires; they haue one wife, many loues. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 768.

What they could my words expressed,
O my love, my all, my one!
Singing helped the verses best.
Browning, Serenade at the Villa.

4. [cap.] A personification of the passion of love; sexual attraction imagined as an independent power external to its subject: applied especially to Cupid (more properly Amor) or Eros, the classical god of love, and more rarely to Venus or Aphrodite, the goddess of love.

Love made those hollows, if himself were slain,
He might be buried in a tomb so simple.
Shak., Venus and Adonis, l. 243.

All thoughts, all passions, all delights,
Whatever stirs this mortal frame,
All are but ministers of Love,
And feed his sacred flame. Coleridge, Love.

5. An embodiment or a representation of Cupid; one of a class of beings poetically imagined as devoted to the interests of lovers, and depicted as winged boys.

I mote perceive how, in her glauncing sight,
Legions of loves with little wings did fly.
Spenser, Sonnets, xvi.

6. Gratification of a sexual passion or desire, as in an illicit relation.

Come, let us take our fill of love, until the morning.
Prov. vii. 18.

7†. A kindness; something done in token of love.

What good love may I perform for you?
Shak., K. John, iv. 1. 49.

8†. A thin silk stuff. One variety, soft and translucent, was used for veils. See love-ribbon.—9. In some games, nothing: a term indicating that no points have been scored: as, the game was two, love (that is, two points on one side and nothing on the other); love all (all the players have failed to score).—10. An old game in which one holds up one or more fingers, and another, without looking, guesses at the number. Davies.

The countrymen's play of holding up our fingers (dimicatione digitorum, i. e. the play of love).
N. Bailey, tr. of Colloquies of Erasmus, p. 159.

11. The plant Clematis Vitalba, the virgin's-bower or traveler's-joy.—Cupboard love. See cupboard.—Family of Love. See Familist, 1.—For all lovest, or of all lovest [a universalized form of "for the love of God," "of heaven," etc.], by all means.

Alack, where are you? speak, an if you hear;
Speak, of all loves! I swoon almost with fear.
Shak., M. N. D., ii. 2. 153.

And said, Sir, for all loves,
Let me thy prisoneres seen.
Sir Ferumbras. (Halliwell, under all-loves.)

For love, out of affectionate consideration; hence, for nothing; without compensation or payment.—For love or money, by any means; in any way.—Free love. See free.—In love, imbued with affection, especially sexual affection; enamored.

If he be not in love with some woman, there is no believing old signs: a' brushes his hat o' mornings.
Shak., Much Ado, iii. 2. 40.

Labor of love, any work done or task performed with eager willingness, either from fondness for the work itself or from regard entertained toward the person for whom it is done.—Love of benevolence or friendship. See benevolence.—Love of complacency. See love of benevolence.—Natural love, a natural appetite or inclination which is common to animals and plants.—Sensitive love, a love common to man and the lower animals.—There's no love lost between them, they have no liking for each other.

There was not a great deal of love lost between Will and his half-sister. Thackeray, Virginians, xvii.

To love one's love with an A, B, etc. See love[1], v. t.—To make love to, to profess affection for (one of the opposite sex); strive to win the affection of.—To play for love, to play a game, as at cards, without stakes.—Syn. 1 and 2. Love, Liking, Predilection, Attachment, Affection, Fondness, Devotion; friendship, kindness, tenderness, delight, partiality, charity (theological). As between persons, love is the most general of these words, covering much the widest range, both in degree and in kind. Liking is the weakest. Predilection goes a little further, but is only a preparatory liking or readiness to love. Attachment has much of the notion implied in its derivation; it is a love that binds one to another, an unwillingness to be separated. Affection is generally a regulated and conscious love or attachment; it goes deeper than attachment. Attachment and especially affection are often the refined and mellowed fruit of the passion of love. Fondness, originally a foolish tenderness, is not yet altogether redeemed from that idea; it may be an unreasoning and doting attachment, and is never very high in quality. Devotion is a sort of consecration or dedication to the object of one's feeling, an intense loyalty, as to a superior—a constant service. See esteem.

love[2]†, v. t. [< ME. loven, lovien, < AS. lofian, praise, value, appraise (= OS. lobhōn = OHG. lobōn, lobēn, MHG. G. loben = Icel. lofa = Sw. lofva = Dan. love, praise); cf. lof, n., praise; akin to lufian, love, leōf, dear, etc., < Teut. √ lub, be pleasing: see love[1], lief, leave[2], furlough.] 1. To praise; commend.

Al loued thai god, with ioyful mode,
And saynt elyn scho bare the rode.
Holy Rood (E. E. T. S.), p. 95.

2. To praise as of value; prize; set a price on.

The sullere [seller] loveth his thing dere.
Old Eng. Homilies (ed. Morris), ii. 213.

I love, as a chapman loveth his ware that he wyll sell. Je fais. Come, of hewe moche love you it at: sus combien le faictez vous? I love you it nat so dere as it coste me; I wolde be gladde to bye some ware of you, but you love all thynges to dere. Palsgrave.

loveability, loveable, etc. See lovability, etc.

love-affair (luv′a-fâr″), n. A special experience of love; the sum of the incidents having to do with being in love with any person.

Confer at large
Of all that may concern thy love-affairs.
Shak., T. G. of V., iii. 1. 254.

love-apple (luv′ap″l), n. An old name of the common tomato, Lycopersicon Lycopersicum.

love-bag†, n. A charm to procure love. Nares.

Another ask't me, who was somewhat bolder,
Whether I wore a love-bagge on my shoulder?
Musarum Deliciæ (1656).

love-bird (luv′bėrd), n. A little parrot or parrakeet, remarkable for the affection it shows for its mate. Many species of different genera have this trait. They are all of diminutive size. The American love-birds belong to the genus Psittacula, and some of them have also been called Agapornis. They are such as P. passerina, with several related species or varieties, and P. purpurata. The true love-birds belong to the restricted genus Agapornis, all of which are African. They are such as A. cana, A. pullaria, and A. swinderniana. (See cut under Agapornis.) The most familiar of these is A. pullaria, scarcely 7 inches long, bright-green with a rosered face and throat, coralline bill, gray feet, and short rounded tail, which when spread shows a red field bordered with a subterminal bar of black. It thrives on canary-seed, and makes a charming pet. Another group of love-birds inhabits the East Indian archipelago, New Guinea, and Australia, and represents divisions of the genus Psittacula (in a large sense) called Cyclopsitta and Psittinus. Such are C. diophthalma of the Aru Islands, P. malaccensis, etc. The most diminutive of parrots, Nasiterna pygmæa, belongs to the same group as the last. Also love-parrakeet, love-parrot.

love-broker (luv′brō″kėr), n. One who acts as agent between lovers. Shak., T. N., iii. 2. 39.

love-dart (luv′därt), n. An organ of many pulmonate or terrestrial gastropods, as snails: technically called spiculum amoris. See the quotation.

A curious organ is a pyriform muscular sac, containing one or two slender conical styles, which can be thrust out through the aperture of the sac; they are found in certain snails, and with them they pierce each other's skin. They are known as love-darts. Pascoe, Zoöl. Class., p. 166.

love-day† (luv′dā), n. [< ME. love day; < love[1] + day.] A day appointed for the amicable adjustment of disputes between neighbors by arbitration; a day for reconciliation.

Mo love-dayes and acordes
Then on instrumentes ben cordes.
Chaucer, House of Fame, l. 695.

This day shall be a love-day, Tamora.
Shak., Tit. And., i. 1. 491.

love-drink† (luv′dringk), n. A drink to excite love; a philter or love-potion.

love-favor (luv′fā″vor), n. Something given to be worn in token of love.

Deck'd with love-favors. Bp. Hall, Satires, i. 2.

love-feast (luv′fēst), n. 1. Among the primitive Christians, a meal eaten in token of brotherly love and charity, originally in connection with the holy communion, and having in common with it the name of the Lord's Supper. See agape[2], 1.—2. An analogous service held at intervals by some religious denominations, as the Moravians, the Methodists, and some German Baptists. The provision is usually very simple, consisting of bread and water, sometimes with tea and coffee. Singing and the interchange of religious experience accompany the repast.

love-feat† (luv′fēt), n. A deed or act of love; a wooing.

Every one his love-feat will advance Unto his several mistress.
Shak., L. L. L., v. 2. 123.

love-in-a-puzzle (luv′in-a-puz′l), n. Same as love-in-a-mist.

love-in-idleness (luv′in-ī′dl-nes), n. The plant Viola tricolor, the heart's-ease.

Yet mark'd I where the bolt of Cupid fell;
It fell upon a little western flower,
Before milk-white, now purple with love's wound,
And maidens call it love-in-idleness.
Shak., M. N. D., ii. 1. 168.

love-juice† (luv′jös), n. In the quotation, the juice of the flower love-in-idleness, the application of which to sleeping eyes was supposed to cause love for the first living object seen after awaking.

But hast thou yet latch'd the Athenian's eyes
With the love-juice, as I did bid thee do?
Shak., M. N. D., iii. 2. 37.

love-knot (luv′not), n. [< ME. loveknotte; < love[1] + knot[1].] 1. A knot tied as a symbol of loyalty in love; a true-lovers' knot.

Another divinatory method employed by love-sick maidens is to sleep in a county in which they do not usually reside, and to knit the left garter round the right leg stocking, leaving the other garter and stocking untouched. . . . And if spells fail not, he [the future husband] will appear in a dream with the insignia of his profession. Gay gives a classical example of tying the love-knot, for the purpose of confirming a lover in his passion.
Hampson, Medii Ævi Kalendarium, I. 151.

2. A knot or bow of ribbon given or worn as a sign of loyalty or affection, or as a decoration.

"What is holychurche, frend?" quoth ich. "Charite," he seyde,
"Lyf, and Loue, and Leaute in o by-leyue and lawe,
A loue-knotte of leaute and of leel by-leyue."
Piers Plowman (C), xviii. 127.

Leg and arm with love-knots gay,
About me leap'd and laugh'd
The modish Cupid of the day.
Tennyson, Talking Oak.

My light glove on his casque of steel,
My love-knot on his spear!
Whittier, The Hero.

Lovel† (luv′el), n. [< ME. lovel, < OF. lovel, louvel, louveau, < ML. lupellus, a young wolf, dim. of L. lupus (> F. loup), a wolf: see lupus. The word lovel remains as the surname Lovel.] Wolf: a common name formerly for a dog.

According to Stowe, p. 847, William Collingborne was executed in 1484 for writing the following couplet on the king's ministers:

"The Ratte, the Catte, and Lovell our dogge Rule all England under the hogge." Halliwell.

lovelace[1]†, n. [ME. luflace; < love[1] + lace.] A love-knot; a love-token.

Thus, quen pryde schal me pryk, for prowes of armes,
The loke to this luf lace schal lethe my hert.
Sir Gawayne and the Green Knight (E. E. T. S.), l. 2438.

Lovelace[2] (luv′lās), n. [So called after Lovelace, the hero of Richardson's novel "Clarissa Harlowe."] A fine-mannered libertine; a rakish but agreeable man of the world.

low-worm (lō′wėrm), n. [< low[4] (?) + worm.] In farriery, a disease of horses resembling shingles.

Loxa bark. See bark[2].

loxarthrus (lok-sär′thrus), n. [NL., < Gr. λοξός, slanting, oblique (see loxia), + ἄρθρον, a joint.]

In pathol., an obliquity of a joint without dislocation or sprain, as in clubfoot.

loxia (lok'si-ä), n. [NL., < Gr. λοξός, slanting, crosswise, oblique, indirect, ambiguous (> L. luxus, dislocated); prob. akin to λικριφίς, crosswise, and to L. obliquus, slanting: see lux[1] and oblique.] 1. In pathol., a distortion of the head toward one side; wryneck; torticollis.—2. [cap.] A genus of fringilline birds. (a[1]) A group containing a great number of Fringillidæ whose bills are stout, crooked, or otherwise notable. (b) In a restricted sense, the crossbills, or those Fringillidæ whose bills are metagnathous. In this sense Curvirostra is a synonym. The common red crossbill is Loxia curvirostra; the white-winged crossbill is L. leucoptera; the parrot-crossbill of Europe is L. pityopsittaca. There are several others, mostly boreal or alpine birds, of North America, Asia, and Europe. See cut under crossbill.

Loxiadæ, Loxiidæ (lok-sī'a-dē, -i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Loxia + -adæ, -idæ.] Same as Loxiinæ.

loxian (lok'si-an), a. and n. [< Loxia + -an.] I. a. Of or pertaining to the Loxiinæ. Also loxiine.

II. n. A crossbill or some other member of the Loxiinæ.

Loxiinæ, Loxianæ (lok-si-ī'nē, -ā'nē), n. pl. [NL., < Loxia + -inæ, -anæ.] A subfamily of Fringillidæ, named from the genus Loxia, containing a number of grosbeaks, crossbills, and other finches agreeing in no definable particulars. Also Loxiadæ, Loxiidæ. See Coccothraustinæ.

loxiine (lok'si-in), a. Same as loxian.

loxoclase (lok'sō-klāz), n. [< Gr. λοξός, slanting, + κλάσις, fracture.] A variety of orthoclase occurring in grayish-white or yellowish crystals at Hammond, St. Lawrence county, New York. Named on the supposition that it was peculiar in having orthodiagonal cleavage.

loxocosm (lok'sō-kozm), n. [< Gr. λοξός, slanting, + κόσμος, world.] An instrument to illustrate the effect of the obliquity of the earth's axis in different seasons upon the length of the day.

Loxodon (lok'sō-don), n. [NL.: see loxodont.] 1. A genus of sharks. Müller and Henle, 1841. —2. A genus of living and fossil proboscidian mammals, of which the African elephant, Elephas or Loxodon africanus, is the type, distinguished from the Asiatic elephant, Elephas or Euelephas indicus, by the shallow and open intervals between the ridges of the teeth, the cement forming merely a thin coat. See Euelephas, elephant. Falconer, 1857. Also Loxodonta.

loxodont (lok'sō-dont), a. and n. [< Gr. λοξός, slanting, + ὀδούς (ὀδοντ-) = E. tooth.] I. a. Having teeth like those of elephants of the genus Loxodon.

II. n. An elephant with loxodont dentition, as the living African species or any fossil one.

Loxodonta (lok-sō-don'tä), n. [NL.: see Loxodon.] Same as Loxodon, 2. F. Cuvier.

loxodrome (lok'sō-drōm), n. [< Gr. λοξός, slanting, oblique, + δρόμος, a running, course, < δραμεῖν, run.] A loxodromic line.

loxodromic (lok-sō-drom'ik), a. [As loxodrome + -ic.] Pertaining to oblique sailing, or sailing by the rhumb: as, loxodromic tables.—Loxodromic chart or projection, a chart or projection having the property (among others) that a straight line drawn on it corresponds to a spiral on the sphere which intersects the meridian at the same constant angle. Commonly called Mercator projection.—Loxodromic curve, line, or spiral, the path of a ship when her course is directed constantly toward the same point of the compass, in a direction oblique to the equator, so as to cut all the meridians at equal angles; a rhumb-line. Its stereographic projection is a logarithmic spiral, provided the center of projection is taken in the axis of the sphere. It always approaches the pole, but never reaches it; so that a ship, by following always the same oblique course would continually approach nearer and nearer to the pole of the earth without ever arriving at it. See rhumb. Also called helispherical line.

loxodromics (lok-sō-drom'iks), n. [Pl. of loxodromic: see -ics.] The art of oblique sailing by the loxodrome or rhumb, which makes an equal angle with each meridian.

loxodromism (lok-sod'rō-mizm), n. [As loxodrome + -ism.] The tracing of a loxodromic curve or line; the act of moving as if in a loxodromic curve.

loxodromy (lok'sō-drō-mi), n. [As loxodrome + -y.] Loxodromics.

Loxolophodon (lok-sō-lof'ō-don), n. [NL.: see loxolophodont.] A genus of huge extinct mammals with loxolophodont dentition, of the order Amblypoda (Cope) or Dinocerata (Marsh). See Uintatheriidæ.

loxolophodont (lok-sō-lof'ō-dont), a. [< Gr. λοξός, slanting, oblique, + λόφος, a crest, + ὀδούς (ὀδοντ-) = E. tooth.] In odontog., obliquely lophodont: applied to a form of dentition, as in Loxolophodon or Uintatherium, in which the upper molars have the anterior internal tubercle connected by oblique crests with two external tubercles, the posterior internal one being rudimentary or wanting.

Loxops (lok'sops), n. [NL., < Gr. λοξός, slanting, oblique, + ὤψ, eye, face.] 1. A genus of birds peculiar to the Sandwich Islands, belonging to the family Dicæidæ, having the bill like that of a linnet. L. coccinea is called the scarlet creeper. It is a small bird, 4½ inches long, of an orange and rufous coloration. L. rosea and L. aurea are other species. The bird of Bow Island, formerly named Loxops inornata, is now known as Pinaroloxias inornatus. J. Cabanis, 1847.

2. A genus of plant-bugs of the family Capsidæ, having the head undilated and the beak extending to the hind border of the metapectus. They are all European. Fieber, 1858.

Loxosoma (lok-sō-sō'mä), n. [NL., < Gr. λοξός, slanting, oblique, + σῶμα, body.] A remarkable genus of entoproctous Polyzoa, species of which, as L. neapolitanum, are parasitic upon other polyzoans and upon sertularians, being fixed by the narrow end of the stalked body.

Loxosomatidæ (lok″sō-sō-mat'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Loxosoma (Loxosomat-) + -idæ.] A family of parasitic entoproctous Polyzoa, of solitary habit and long-stalked form, having numerous tentacles, a cement-gland in the stalk, and no partition between the stalk and the cell. Reproduction is by gemmation, the buds separating from the parent and no colonies being formed.

loy[1] (loi), n. [Origin obscure.] In agri., a long narrow spade used in stony lands. Farmer's Encyc. [Prov. Eng.]

loy[2†], n. [By apheresis from alloy.] Same as alloy.

Carato [It.], the touching or refining or loye of gold; a weight or degree called a carat. Florio.

loyal (loi'al), a. [< F. loyal, OF. loial (also leial, leal, > E. leal) = Sp. Pg. leal = It. leale, faithful, loyal (Sp. Pg. legal = It. legale, legal), < L. legalis, pertaining to law: see legal, of which loyal (with leal) is a doublet. Cf. royal, real[2], regal, similarly related.] 1. True or faithful in allegiance; keeping faith or troth; constant in service, devotion, or regard; not false or treacherous: used especially of allegiance to the sovereign, government, or law, but applied to all other relations of trust or confidence: as, a loyal subject; a loyal friend; to be loyal to one's cause.

The citizens on their part shewed themselves stout and loyall subiects. Bacon, Hist. Hen. VII., p. 180.

There Laodamia with Evadne moves,
Unhappy both! but loyal in their loves.
Dryden, Æneid, vi.

2. Pertaining to or marked by allegiance or good faith; manifesting fidelity or devotion: as, loyal professions; loyal adherence to a principle.

Write loyal cantons of contemned love.
Shak., T. N., i. 5. 289.

The loyal warmth of Florian is not cold.
Tennyson, Princess, ii.

= Syn. See allegiance.

loyalism (loi'al-izm), n. [= F. loyalisme; as loyal + -ism.] Devotion to a government or cause; the animating principle of loyalists.

The sharpness of the collision with the mother country and with domestic loyalism. N. A. Rev., CXXVII. 185.

loyalist (loi'al-ist), n. [= F. loyaliste; as loyal + -ist.] 1. A partizan supporter of an existing government; one who opposes insurrection or revolution.—2. Specifically, in the American Revolution, a Tory.

loyalize (loi'al-īz), v. t.; pret. and pp. loyalized, ppr. loyalizing. [< loyal + -ize.] To impart a loyal spirit to; restore to loyalty.

The work of loyalizing that . . . locality has fairly begun. New York Tribune, May 22, 1862.

loyally (loi'al-i), adv. In a loyal manner; faithfully.

loyalness (loi'al-nes), n. Loyalty. [Rare.]

loyalty (loi'al-ti), n. [< ME. loialte*, < OF. loialte, loyauté (also lealte, leaute, > E. lealty), loyalty, F. loyauté = Pr. leyaltat, leiautat, lealtat = Sp. lealtad = Pg. lealdade = It. lealtà, < ML. legalita(t-)s, loyalty, also legality; < legalis, loyal, legal: see loyal. Cf. lealty, legality.] The state or quality of being loyal; devotion to a sovereign or a superior; fidelity in duty, service, love, etc.; firm allegiance; constancy.

Master, go on, and I will follow thee
To the last gasp, with truth and loyalty.
Shak., As you Like it, ii. 3. 70.

Upon your loyalty to the state and me,
I do command you, sir, not depart Candy.
Leau. and Fl., Laws of Candy, ii. 1.

The conformity of our actions to our engagements, whether express or implied, is fidelity. . . . Thus a subject is faithful to the engagement which binds him to the sovereign of the state. If, in such a case, love is added to fidelity, it becomes loyalty.
Whewell, Elements of Morality, p. 85.

=Syn. Allegiance, Loyalty, Fealty. See allegiance.

Loyolist (lō-yō'list), n. [< Loyola + -ist.] A follower of the Spaniard Ignatius of Loyola (1491–1556), founder of the order of Jesuits; a Jesuit. [Rare.]

Of late years that super-politick and irrefragable society of the Loyolists have propt up the ivy.
Howell, Dodona's Grove, p. 60.

lozel, n. and a. See losel.

lozenge (loz'enj), n. and a. [Early mod. E. lozenge; < ME. losange, losenge, losynge; < OF. losenge, losange, losenge, a lozenge, a quadrilateral, a window-pane, also a little square cake of preserved herbs, flowers, etc., F. losange, Cat. llosange, Sp. losange, It. lozanga, a lozenge: origin undetermined. In one view the word rests on Prov. lausa, Cat. llosa, Sp. losa, Pg. louza, a slab, a tombstone.] I. n. 1. A plane figure with four equal sides, having two acute and two obtuse angles, also called a diamond; a rhomb; also, formerly, any oblique parallelogram.

Suppose the artist made . . . a lozenge, then a trapezoid. Browning, Cleon, 84.

The rhombus or lozenge figure so visible in this order was also a remarkable form of battle in the Grecian cavalry. Sir T. Browne, Garden of Cyrus, i.

2. Something resembling such a figure in form. (a) In her.: (1) A common bearing of this form; it is always set with the acute angles above and below. (2) The escutcheon appropriated to women, usually of more or less regular lozenge shape. On a hatchment the bearings of a widow are so displayed.

With coroune wroght ful of losynges.
Chaucer, House of Fame, l. 1317.

(b) A small cake of sugar, or confection, often medicated, originally in the form of a rhomb, but now variously shaped.

For to make losing[e]s to comfort the stomack.
Pathway to Health, bl. l. (Nares.)

(c) A pane of glass for window-glazing, either lozenge-shaped or square, but intended to be set diagonally; a quarrel. (d) An envelop-blank cut out by a punching-machine. (e) In the cutting of brilliants, one of the four quoins of the upper surface or crown. See quoin. (f) A spangle. Prompt. Parv., p. 313.—Lozenges in cross, in her., a cross usually of four lozenges. When, more rarely, five or a larger number of lozenges are used, one lozenge forms the center of the cross.

II. a. In decorative art, divided by diagonal lines into diamonds or lozenges: a common distribution of decorative design in the fourteenth century: as, a lozenge pattern. Tapestries of this epoch are often so divided, each lozenge being filled with some heraldic bearing, and the background of miniatures in manuscripts often has the same pattern.

lozenge-coach (loz'enj-koch), n. A dowager's carriage, as bearing a widow's arms on a lozenge.

I am retired hither like an old summer-dowager: only that I have no toad-eater to take the air with me in the back part of my lozenge-coach, and be scolded.
Walpole, To Mann (1746), II. 52.

lozenged (loz'enjd), a. [< lozenge + -ed[2].] 1. Formed in the shape of a lozenge.

The lozenged panes of a very small latticed window.
Charlotte Brontë, Jane Eyre, xxviii.

2. In zoöl.: (a) Rhomboidal or rhombic. (b) Divided by raised lines into rhomboidal or lozenge-shaped spaces.

lozengee, a. See lozengy.

lozenge-fret (loz'enj-fret), n. See fret[3].

lozenge-goad (loz'enj-gōd), n. A goad-spur the point of which is approximately lozenge-shaped. Also lozenge-spur.

lozenge-graver (loz'enj-grā″vėr), n. A graving-tool having a rhomb- or diamond-shaped cross-section. The belly of the graver is formed by two faces intersecting at an angle of less than 90°.

lozenge-machine (loz'enj-ma-shēn″), n. A confectioners' machine for rolling dough, paste, or confections into thin sheets which are cut by means of stamps into lozenge-shaped cakes or pieces.

Lozenge-molding.

lozenge-molding (loz'enj-mōl″ding), n. Same as lozenge-fret (which see, under fret[3]).

lozenge-shaped (loz'enj-shāpt), a. Having the form of a lozenge or rhomb; by extension, square but set diagonally. Compare lozengy.

lozenge-spur (loz'enj-spėr), n. Same as lozenge-goad.

lozenge-tool (loz'enj-töl), n. Same as lozenge-graver.

lozengewise (loz'enj-wīz), adv. In her., arranged in the form of a lozenge.

lozengy, lozengee (loz'en-ji, -jē), a. [< OF. losengé, < losenge, lozenge: see lozenge.] In her., having the whole surface covered with lozenges or formed into lozenge-shaped divisions. This is very often depicted with exact squares set cornerwise.—Lozengy barry, in her., having the whole surface occupied with lozenges which are divided again barwise or horizontally, therefore divided into triangles of ★which those of one tincture point up and the others down.

L. S. An abbreviation of Latin locus sigilli, 'place of the seal': usually inserted within brackets in copies of documents to indicate the position of the seal in the originals.

L. S. D., l. s. d. An abbreviation of Latin (Middle or New Latin) libræ, solidi, denarii—that is, pounds, shillings, pence; hence, colloquially, money; cash; funds. Also £ s. d. [Eng.]

lubbard (lub'ärd), n. and a. [Formerly also lubberd; a var., with substituted suffix -ard, of lubber.] I. n. Same as lubber.

Thou slovenly lubberd, and toyish fellow, what idle toyes goest thou fantasticating!
Ben venuto, Passengers' Dialogues (1612).

It was now the part of the huge porter to step forward; but the lubbard was . . . overwhelmed with confusion of spirit. Scott, Kenilworth, xxx.

II. a. Lubberly.

Conscious how much the hand
Of lubbard Labour needs his watchful eye.
★ Cowper, Task, iii. 400.

lubber (lub'ėr), n. [Formerly also lubbar, lubbour, louwber, lubberd, luubard, etc.; ME. lober (pl. lobres, loburs); cf. MD. lobber, LG. lobbes, E. looby, lob[1], etc.] A heavy, clumsy fellow; a dolt: applied especially by sailors to any one of the crew who is deficient in seamanship.

Grete lobres and longe that loth weore to swynke
Clotheden hem in copes to beo knowen for bretheren.
Piers Plowman (A), Prol., l. 52.

They went to the Grammer schole little children; they came from thence great lubbers.
Ascham, The Scholemaster, p. 88.

"It will be long," said the master then,
"Ere this great lubber do thrive on the sea."
The Noble Fisherman (Child's Ballads, V. 331).

Lubber's hole (naut.), the vacant space between the head of a lower mast and the edge of the top, through which Rigging of Ship's Top.

f f, top; g g, lubber's holes; h h, futtock-shrouds.

sailors may mount without going over the rim by the futtock-shrouds. Formerly, when tops were differently constructed, it was regarded by seamen as fit to be used only by lubbers and greenhorns.—Lubber's point (naut.), Same as lubber-line.

lubber (lub'ėr), v. i. [< lubber, n.] To sail in a lubberly or clumsy manner. [Rare.]

We set our primitive sail; and . . . soon found ourselves lubbering over the beautiful lake at a speed of from two to two and a half miles an hour.
The Century, XXX. 742.

lubber-cock (lub'ėr-kok), n. A turkey-cock. [Prov. Eng.]

lubber-grasshopper (lub'ėr-gras″hop-ėr), n. 1. The clumsy locust, Brachystola magna, a very large lubberly insect common on the great plains of the western United States. See cut under Brachystola.—2. The large short-winged insect Romalea microptera, which abounds in the Gulf States and feeds on all succulent plants. It is notable as having no known natural enemies. It is from 2.75 to 3.15 inches long, very thick-bodied, and clumsy in its movements.

lubberhead (lub'ėr-hed), n. A stupid fellow. [Prov. Eng.]

lubber-hole (lub'ėr-hōl), n. Same as lubber's hole (which see, under lubber).

Lubberland (lub'ėr-land), n. The land of Cockaigne.

Good mother, how shall we find a pig if we do not look about for it? will it run off o' the spit into our mouths, think you, as in Lubberland, and cry we, we?
B. Jonson, Bartholomew Fair, iii. 2, Peter's Prophecy.

lubber-line (lub'ėr-līn), n. Naut., a black vertical line drawn on the inside of the compass-box, which represents the vessel's head in steering. Also called lubber's point.

lubberliness (lub'ėr-li-nes), n. The state or condition of being lubberly; sturdy clumsiness.

You, like a lazy hulk, whose stupendous magnitude is full big enough to load an elephant with lubberliness.
Tom Brown, Works, ii. 179.

lubberly (lub'ėr-li), a. [< lubber + -ly[1].] Like a lubber; clumsy; awkward.

By my Soul, the Girl is spoil'd already — d'ye think she'll ever endure a great lubberly Tarpawlin?
Congreve, Love for Love, ii. 10. (Davies.)

lubberly (lub'ėr-li), adv. [< lubberly, a.] Clumsily; awkwardly.

lubberwort (lub'ėr-wėrt), n. Any food or drink which makes one idle and stupid. [Prov. Eng.]

lubric (lū'brik), a. [< OF. lubrique, slippery, lascivious, F. lubrique, lascivious, = Sp. lúbrico = Pg. It. lubrico, slippery, lascivious, < L. lubricus, slippery, uncertain, deceitful.] 1. Having a smooth surface; slippery; hence, voluble; glib.

Then starts she suddenly into a throng
Of short thick sobs, whose thund ring volleys float,
And roul themselves over her lubric throat,
In panting murmurs. Crashaw, Musick's Duel.

2. Unsteady; wavering.

Through the deep and lubric waves of state and court.
Sir H. Wotton, Reliquiæ, p. 208.

3. Lascivious; wanton; lewd.

Why were we hurried down
This lubric and adulterate age
(Nay, added fat pollutions of our own),
To encrease the steaming ordures of the stage?
Dryden, Ode to the Memory of Mrs. Anne Killigrew, l. 63.

[Obsolete or rare in all uses.]

lubrical (lū'bri-kạl), a. [< lubric + -al.] Same as lubric.

What, shall thy lubrical and glibbery muse Live! B. Jonson, Poetaster, v. 1.

lubrican† (lū'bri-kạn), n. Same as leprechawn.

By the mandrake's dreadful groans,
By the Lubrican's sad moans,
By the noise of dead men's bones
In charnel-houses rattling.
Drayton, Nymphidia, l. 418.

lubricant (lū'bri-kạnt), a. and n. [< L. lubrican(t-)s, ppr. of lubricare, make smooth: see lubricate.] I. a. Lubricating.

II. n. Any natural or artificial material that may be used to lubricate the rubbing surfaces of machinery, in order to lessen their friction upon each other. Natural non-volatile oils and greases are the typical lubricants; but the variety of materials and compounds used is very great, including some metallic alloys.

lubricant-tester (lū'bri-kạnt-tes″tėr), n. A form of testing-machine for determining the lubricating values of oils. This tester acts by recording the friction developed under a given power.

lubricate (lū'bri-kāt), v. t.; pret. and pp. lubricated, ppr. lubricating. [< L. lubricatus, pp. of lubricare (> It. lubricare = Sp. Pg. lubricar), make slippery, < lubricus, slippery: see lubric.] 1. To make smooth or slippery; supply or smear with some substance, especially one of an oily or greasy nature, for the purpose of diminishing friction: as, to lubricate the bearings of a machine.

There seemed a pool of honey about his heart, which lubricated all his speech and action with fine jets of mead.
Emerson, English Traits, p. 291.

2. In photog., to coat or smear (a print) with some glazing agent, as Castile soap dissolved in alcohol, or a compound of beeswax and Venice turpentine, as a preliminary to burnishing.

lubricate (lū'bri-kāt), a. [< L. lubricatus, pp. of lubricare, make slippery: see lubricate, v.] Slippery. [Rare.]

lubricating-oil (lū'bri-kā-ting-oil), n. Any oil that is used or is suitable for lubrication; specifically, a thick oil produced in the process of ★refining paraffin-oil and petroleum.

lubrication (lū-bri-kā'shọn), n. [< L. as if lubricatio(n-)*, < lubricare, make slippery: see lubricate.] The act of lubricating, or the state of being lubricated.

There is a sort of previous lubrication, such as the boa-constrictor applies to any subject of digestion, which is requisite to familiarize the mind with a startling or a complex novelty. De Quincey, Style, i.

lubricative (lū'bri-kā-tiv), a. [< lubricate + -ive.] Capable of lubricating; supplying lubrication. [Rare.]

What he desires is that the prig should be good in some oily and lubricative way, so as not to jar the nerves of those who are less good.
S. Lanier, The English Novel, p. 267.

★lubricator (lū'bri-kā-tọr), n. [< lubricate + -or.] One who or that which lubricates. Specifically—(a) A device or contrivance for keeping the rubbing parts of machines, bearings, shafting, etc., supplied with some lubricant to diminish friction. These appliances are made in a great variety of forms, and may be divided into three classes—those for lubricating the cylinders of motors, those for lubricating the axles of cars and road-vehicles, and those for shafting and machinery in general. In all the aim is the same, to furnish a limited but constant supply of the lubricant to the moving parts. See impermeator. (b) A machine for waxing bullets, so that when fired they will clean the gun; also, a wad containing a lubricant and followed by a felt washer, attached to the projectile in a rifled gun that the operation of firing may clean the piece. (c) In photog., a glazing agent, as a solution of Castile soap in spirit, or a compound of beeswax and turpentine, with which prints are smeared before burnishing to improve the gloss.—Lubricator alarm-signal, in mach., a device for giving an alarm when, from failure of lubrication, a journal becomes heated.

lubricity (lū-bris'i-ti), n. [< F. lubricité = Sp. lubricidad = Pg. lubricidade = It. lubricità, slipperiness, lasciviousness, < ML. lubricita(t-)s, slipperiness, < L. lubricus, slippery: see lubric.] 1. The state or quality of being lubric or slippery; slipperiness of surface, literal or figurative; hence, instability; transitoriness; evanescence; evasiveness.

There cannot be two more pregnant Instances of the Lubricity and instableness of Mankind than the Decay of these two antient Nations [the Greeks and the Jews].
Howell, Letters, ii. 57.

I take this evanescence and lubricity of all things . . . to be the most unhandsome part of our condition.
Emerson, Experience.

That learned jurisconsult, with characteristic lubricity, had evaded the dangerous honor.
Motley, Dutch Republic, II. 138.

2. Capacity for lubrication.

The mucilage adds to the lubricity of the oyl, and the oyl preserves the mucilage from inspissation, and contracting the consistency of a jelly.
Ray, Works of Creation, ii.

3. Lasciviousness; lewdness; salacity.

Wantonness and lubricity. Dryden.

Of these [symbols of Priapus] the goat is one that most frequently occurs, . . . as this animal has always been distinguished for its lubricity.
Knight, Anc. Art and Myth. (1876), p. 21.

When one looks at the popular literature of the French at this moment, . . . and at the life of which this literature of theirs is the index, one is tempted to make a goddess out of a word of their own, and then, like the town clerk of Ephesus, to ask: "What man is there that knoweth not that the city of the French is a worshipper of the great goddess Lubricity?"
M. Arnold, Nineteenth Century, XV. 678.

lubricous (lū'bri-kus), a. [< L. lubricus, slippery: see lubric.] 1†. Same as lubric.

Much lesse shall I positively determine anything in matters so lubricous and uncertain.
Glanville, Pre-existence of Souls, xii.

2. Having a smooth, slippery surface, appearing as if oiled or varnished, as certain algæ and the elytra of certain Coleoptera.

lubrifaction (lū-bri-fak'shọn), n. [Irreg. < L. lubricus, slippery, + factio(n-), a making, < factus, pp. of facere, make: see -fy.] The act or operation of lubricating, or of making slippery.

The sixth cause is lubrifaction and relaxation; as we see in medicines emollient, such as are milk, honey, mallowes, etc. Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 41.

lubrification (lū″bri-fi-kā'shọn), n. [= F. lubrification; as lubrify + -ation: see -fy, -fication.] Same as lubrifaction.

lubrify†, v. t. [< OF. lubrifier, make slippery, contr. < L. lubricus, slippery, + -ficare, make: see -fy.] To make slippery. Cotgrave.

Lucanidæ (lū-kan'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Lucanus + -idæ.] A family of lamellicorn coleopterous insects, the lamellæ of whose antennal club are incapable of close apposition, and whose mandibles are large and powerful in the male; the stag-beetles. The form of the lucanids is generally elongate, and the elytra cover the pygidium; in some there are stridulating organs. They are usually of plain dark colors, but some, such as species of Lamprima in Australia and of Chiasognathus in Chiloe, are brilliant. Upward of 500 species are described. They most abound in warm wooded countries, and live during the day in trunks of trees, logs, etc., taking flight at dusk. The larvæ of the European species live in willow and oak, where they remain untransformed for years. See Lucanus. The same or a corresponding group is called Lucanida, Lucanides, Lucanites, Lucanoides, etc.

Lucanus (lū-kā'nus), n. [NL., so called in allusion to the glistening elytral surface, < ML. lucanus, sunrise (?), < L. lucere, shine: see lucent.] The typical genus of Lucanidæ; stag-beetles proper, with emarginate eyes, geniculate antennæ, mentum entire, covering the ligula and maxilla, and fore tibiæ pectinate. The branching antler-like mandibles of the North American L. elaphus are sometimes three fourths of an inch long. L. cervus is the corresponding European species. L. dama is a large stag-beetle of the United States, from 9 to 18 lines long, with smaller pincer-like mandibles with a single snag. See Lucanidæ and stag-beetle.

lucarne (lū-kärn′), n. [< F. lucarne, an alteration of OF. lucane, lucanne, luquenne (whence ME. lucane, lucayne, etc.), connected with luquet of same meaning, perhaps from L. lux (luc-), light.] A dormer- or roof-window; also, a light or small window in a spire.

lucasite (lū′kas-īt), n. [Named after Dr. H. S. Lucas.] A variety of vermiculite which occurs with corundum in Macon county, Georgia.

lucavnet, See lucarne.

Lucchese (lū-kēs′ or -kēz′), a. and n. [< It. Lucchese, < Lucca (see def.).] I. a. Of or pertaining to the city of Lucca in Italy, or to its inhabitants.

The most precious of the Lucchese relics, a cedar-wood crucifix, carved, according to the legend, by Nicodemus, and miraculously conveyed to Lucca in 782.
Encyc. Brit., XV. 38.

II. n. sing. and pl. An inhabitant or inhabitants of the city or province (formerly a republic, afterward a duchy) of Lucca, on the northwest coast of Italy.

luce[1] (lūs), n. [Formerly also lucie, lucy; < ME. luce, lewse, < OF. lus, luz (dim. lucel and lucet) = Pg. lucio, a luce, < LL. lucius, a fish, perhaps the pike.] The pike (a fish), especially when full-grown.

In heraldry the luce or pike occurs in the arms of the Lucy or Lucie family so far back as the reign of Henry II. Day.

Slend. They [the Shallows] may give the dozen white luces in their coat. . . .
Shal. The luce is the fresh fish.
Shak., M. W. of W., i. 1. 22.

The mighty luce or pike is taken to be the tyrant, as the salmon is the king of the fresh waters.
I. Walton, Complete Angler, i. 8.

A pike, first a Hurling pick, then a Pickerel, then a Pike, then a Luce or Lucie. Holme, p. 345.

luce[2] (lūs), n. [Origin obscure.] A rut. [Prov. Eng.]

lucencet, n. [ME. lucense, < OF. lucence* = Sp. lucencia, < L. lucen(t-)s, shining: see lucent.] The state or quality of being lucent; light.

O lux vera, graunt us zowr lucense,
That with the spryte of errour I nat seduct be.
Digby Mysteries, p. 96. (Halliwell.)

lucency (lū′sen-si), n. [See lucence.] The state or quality of being lucent; brightness; luster; splendor. [Rare.]

A name of some note and lucency, but lucency of the Nether-fire sort. Carlyle, French Rev., III. i. 6.

lucent (lū′sent), a. [= F. luisant = Sp. luciente, < L. lucen(t-)s, ppr. of lucere, shine; connected with lux (luc-), light, lumen, a light, luna, the moon, etc.; < √ luc, shine, = Teut. √ luh, shine, in AS. leóht, etc., light: see further under light[1]. From L. lucere are also ult. E. lucern[1], lucid, elucidate, translucent, etc.] Bright; shining; lustrous; resplendent.

I meant the day-starre should not brighter rise,
Nor lend like influence from his lucent seat.
B. Jonson, Epigrams, lxxv.

Lucent syrops tinct with cinnamon.
Keats, Eve of St. Agnes.

lucern[1] (lū′sėrn), n. [< ME. lucern, < OF. lucerne, luserne, luiserne, lucarne, a lamp, also glow-worm, also, like F. lucarne, a roof-window (see lucarne), = Sp. lucerna, < L. lucerna, a lamp, < lucere, shine: see lucent.] A lamp.

A multitude of wreaths, tablets, masks, festoons, lucernes, [and] genii holding lyres.
C. C. Perkins, Italian Sculpture, p. 375.

lucern[2] (lū′sėrn), n. [Also lusern, luserne, luzern, luzerne, luzarne, lyserne, etc., introduced in the first half of the 16th century, prob. in trade use (in literature, vaguely as the name of a strange wild beast), prob. < G. lüchsern, adj. (applied to the fur), < luchs, a lynx: see lynx.] 1†. A lynx; also, the fur of the lynx.

The Lyserne, the Beauer, the Sable, the Martron, the black and dunne fox. Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 479.

2†. A sort of hunting-dog.

Let me have
My Lucerns too, or dogs inur'd to hunt
Beasts of most rapine.
Chapman, Bussy D'Ambois, iii. 1.

lucern[3], n. See lucerne.

lucerna (lū-sėr′nä), n. [L.: see lucern[1].] 1. An ancient lamp. See lucern[1].—2. A quasi-popular name for the lantern-gurnard, Trigla obscura, given in allusion to the brilliant silvery band along the side of this fish.—3. [cap.] A genus of pulmonate gastropods, of the family Helicidæ, having the aperture toothed and more or less twisted. Humphreys, 1797.

lucernal (lū-sėr′nal), a. [< lucern[1] + -al.] Of or pertaining to a lamp or other artificial light. —Lucernal microscope. See microscope.

Lucernaria (lū-sėr-nā′ri-ä), n. [NL., < L. lucerna, a lamp: see lucern[1].] The typical genus of Lucernariidæ. These animals are small, gelatinous, semi-transparent, and variously colored or phosphorescent marine organisms (jellyfishes), either swimming freely by rhythmical contraction and expansion of the umbrella, or fixed to some submerged object by means of a stalk or peduncle which grows out of the back (aboral surface) of the disk and constitutes a hydrorhiza or rootstalk. In this latter state the animal is trumpet- or bell shaped, resembling a little hand bell standing on the end of its handle, with the other end expanded into an eight-rayed limb or disk, each ray ending in a little bundle or tuft of tentacles, and the center of the disk being occupied by a four-lobed mouth leading into the body-cavity. See Lucernariidæ.

Lucernariadæ (lū″sėr-nā-rī′ä-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Lucernaria + -adæ.] An order of the subclass Lucernarida, class Hydrozoa, including those discophorans or jellyfishes whose polypite is single and may be fixed by a proximal aboral hydrorhiza. The umbrellar margin has short tentacular processes, and the reproductive elements are developed in the primitive hydrosome without the intervention of free zoöids. The genus Lucernaria may be regarded as the type, and the group itself is by some considered a synthetic or generalized type of structure, like that from which various specialized forms of acalephs may have been derived.

lucernarian (lū-sėr-nā′ri-an), a. and n. I. a. Of or pertaining to the genus Lucernaria or the Lucernariidæ; calycozoan.

II. n. A member of the genus Lucernaria or of the family Lucernariidæ; a calycozoan. See cut at Hydrozoa (fig. 5).

Lucernarida (lū-sėr-nar′i-dä), n. pl. [NL., < Lucernaria + -ida.] A subclass of Hydrozoa, in which the base of the hydrosome is developed into an umbrella in the walls of which are the reproductive organs. It is a prime division of hydrozoans, equivalent to Discophora in a common acceptation of that term, and has been divided like the latter into three orders: Rhizostomea or Rhizostomidæ, free and with multiple polypites; Monostomea or Pelagiidæ, free and with single polypite; and Lucernariadæ, free or fixed and with single polypite. The last consists of one family, coextensive with the order, and is also called Calycozoa. See Discophora.

lucernaridan (lū″sėr-nar′i-dan), a. and n. I. a. Of or pertaining to the Lucernarida.

II. n. A member of the Lucernarida; a discophoran; an acraspedote medusan or jellyfish.

Lucernariidæ (lū″sėr-nā-rī′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Lucernaria + -idæ.] The typical family of Lucernariadæ. It contains discophorans with the umbrellar margin simple and undivided, without hollow arms or margin-laps, and with simple tentacles, and having on the exumbrella a prolongation by means of which they affix themselves to foreign bodies. Genera referred to this family are Lucernaria, Depastrum, and Carduella.

lucernaroid (lū-sėr′nā-roid), n. [< Lucernaria + -oid.] The reproductive zoöid of any of the Lucernarida. Nicholson, Zoöl., 1878, ★p. 133.

lucerne, lucern[3] (lū-sėrn′), n. [< F. luzerne, formerly luserne, lucerne.] A leguminous plant, Medicago sativa, a highly valuable pasture- and forage-plant, cultivated from ancient times, now widely spread in temperate climates. In the United States it has been cultivated with especial success in southern California. It is greatly relished by animals, and under favorable conditions yields several crops in a year. It is also an improver of soil. In the western United States it is best known under the Spanish name alfalfa, having been introduced into California from South America. Also called Spanish trefoil, French, Brazilian, or Chilian clover, and in British usage medic or purple medic.

Flowering Branch of Lucerne (Medicago sativa). a, flower; b, fruit.

Lucerne hammer. See hammer[1].

Lucianist (lū′shian-ist), n. [< Lucian (see def.) + -ist.] 1. One of the followers of Lucian or Lucan, a Marcionite leader in the second century, who taught that the actual soul and body of a man would not come forth in the resurrection, but some representative of them.—2. Same as Collucianist.

lucid (lū′sid), a. [= F. lucide = Sp. lúcido = Pg. It. lucido, < L. lucidus, light, bright, clear, < lucere, shine: see lucent.] 1. Emitting light; shining; bright; resplendent: as, the lucid orbs of heaven. [Poetical, except in some technical uses. See second quotation, and def. 5.]

A court
Compact of lucid marbles.
Tennyson, Princess, ii.

Lucid stars are those which are visible without a telescope. Newcomb and Holden, Astronomy, p. 45.

2. Transmitting or reflecting light; clear; transparent; pellucid: as, a lucid stream.

Before each lucid panel fuming stood
A censer fed with myrrh and spiced wood.
Keats, Lamia, ii.

So wide the loneness, so lucid the air.
Lowell, Appledore.

3. Marked by intellectual clearness or brightness; free from obscurity or confusion of thought, or, specifically, from delirium; clear-headed; sane: as, a lucid mind; lucid perceptions; lucid intervals in insanity.

After some gentle Slumbers, and unusual Dreams, about the dawnings of the Day, I had a lucid Interval.
Howell, Letters, ii. 29.

4. Presenting a clear view; easily understood; distinct: as, a lucid order or arrangement; a lucid style of writing.

A singularly lucid and interesting abstract of the debate. Macaulay.

5. In entom.: (a) Smooth and very shining; reflecting light like polished metal. (b) Giving light; phosphorescent; luciferous.—6. In bot., having a shining surface.—Lucid interval, in insanity, a period of saneness occurring in the midst of insane behavior: an intermission resembling restoration of health, as distinguished from a mere diminution of the disease.

lucida (lū′si-dä), n.; pl. lucidæ (-dē). [NL. (sc. stella, star), fem. of lucidus, bright: see lucid.] A star easily seen by the naked eye, as opposed to a telescopic star; also, the brightest star of a constellation, or the brightest component of a double or multiple star.

lucidity (lū-sid′i-ti), n. [= F. lucidité = It. lucidità, < L. as if lucidita(t-)s*, < lucidus, light, bright, clear: see lucid.] The state of being lucid, in any sense of that word; lucidness; especially, clearness of conception or expression; intellectual transparency.

He [Voltaire] looked on things straight; and he had a marvelous logic and lucidity.
M. Arnold, Mixed Essays, p. 169.

Thought-transference is out of the question, and M. Richet has recourse to the theory of a sort of clairvoyance to which he gives the generic name of lucidity, a vision in which the ordinary optical impediments no longer act as such. Science, XII. 47.

=Syn. Clearness, Plainness, etc. See perspicuity.

lucidly (lū′sid-li), adv. In a lucid manner; with brightness; clearly.

He argued the matter during two hours, and no doubt lucidly and forcibly. Macaulay, Hist. Eng., xxiv.

lucidness (lū′sid-nes), n. The quality or state of being lucid; lucidity; transparency.

The lucidness was constant, though the vial that contained it was kept stopt. Boyle, Works, p. 388.

Lucifer (lū′si-fėr), n. [= F. Lucifer = Sp. Lucifero = Pg. Lucifer = It. Lucifero, < L. lucifer, light-bringing, applied to the moon (Diana), and to the morning star (Venus), and poet. to day, < lux (luc-), light, + ferre = E. bear[1]: see lucent, light[1], and bear[1]. The equiv. Gr. word is φωσφόρος: see phosphorus.] 1. The morning star; the planet Venus when she appears in the morning before sunrise: when she follows the sun, or appears in the evening, she is called Hesperus, or the evening star. Applied by Isaiah figuratively to a king of Babylon.

How art thou fallen from heaven, O Lucifer, son of the morning! how art thou cut down to the ground, which didst weaken the nations! Is. xiv. 12.

2. The prince of darkness; Satan. [This use arises from an early opinion that in the above passage from Isaiah reference was made to Satan.]

And when he falls, he falls like Lucifer, Never to hope again.
Shak., Hen. VIII., iii. 2. 371.

Pandæmonium, city and proud seat
Of Lucifer; so by allusion call'd
Of that bright star to Satan paragon'd.
Milton, P. L., x. 425.

3. [l. c.] A match ignitible by friction with any surface, or with a specially prepared surface. It is usually made of a small splint of wood tipped with some inflammable substance, as a mixture of potassium chlorate and antimony sulphid, or more commonly of phosphorus and potassium nitrate. Also called lucifer match.

Every traveller should provide himself with a good handy steel, proper flint, and unfailing tinder, because lucifers are liable to accidents. J. T. Fields, Underbrush, p. 189.

4. The typical genus of Luciferidæ.—5. (a) A genus of humming-birds. A species of northern Mexico and adjoining parts of the United States is Trochilus or Calothorax lucifer, having the gorgelet prolonged into a ruff. (b) [l. c.] Any humming-bird of the genus Calothorax or Lucifer, of which there are several species.

Luciferian[1] (lū-si-fē′ri-an), a. [< Lucifer (see def.) + -ian.] Of or pertaining to Lucifer or Satan; devilish.

That all that luciferian exorcism be blotted out.
Jer. Taylor, Dissuasive from Popery, ii. § 19.

Luciferian[2] (lū-si-fē′ri-an), a. and n. [< Lucifer (see def.) + -ian.] I. a. Of or pertaining to Lucifer, Bishop of Cagliari in the island of Sardinia during the fourth century, or to his followers.

II. n. One of the followers of Lucifer, Bishop of Cagliari. The Luciferians were vehement upholders of the Nicene faith, and separated themselves from their fellow-Catholics solely on the ground that the latter showed undue leniency to those who had been received back into the church after forsaking Arianism. Also Luciferite.

Luciferidæ (lū-si-fer′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Lucifer, 4, + -idæ.] A family of thoracostracous or podophthalmic crustaceans, typified by the Devil Shrimp, a species of Lucifer.

genus Lucifer, and characterized by the absence of the last pair of thoracic legs. They are consequently excluded from Decapoda, and are either placed with the opossum-shrimps and mantis-shrimps in Stomatopoda, or made a separate tribe, Aplopoda, as by Dana.

Luciferite (lū′si-fėr-īt), n. [< Lucifer (see Luciferian) + -ite[2].] Same as Luciferian[2].

luciferous (lū-sif′e-rus), a. [< L. lucifer, light-bringing (see Lucifer), + -ous.] 1. Giving light; affording light or means of discovery. Boyle, Works, IV. 394. [Rare.]—2. In entom., having phosphorescent organs: applied to insects which emit light, as the glow-worm.—3. [cap.] Of or pertaining to Lucifer or Satan; Luciferian; Satanic. [Rare.]

This Luciferous and gluttonous heart.
J. Bradford, Letters (Parker Soc., 1853), II. 32.

luciferously (lū-sif′e-rus-li), adv. 1. In a luciferous manner; so as to enlighten or illuminate. Sir T. Browne, Christ. Mor., III. 8. [Rare.]—2. [cap.] Satanically; diabolically.

Euery vulgarly-esteemed upstart dares breake the dreadfull dignity of antient and autenticall Poesie, and presume Luciferously to proclame in place thereof repugnant precepts of their owne spaune.
Chapman, Masque of Middle Temple.

lucific (lū-sif′ik), a. [< LL. lucificus, light-making, < L. lux (luc-), light, + facere, make.] Producing light. N. Grew, Cosmologia Sacra, II. ii. § 14. [Rare.]

luciform (lū′si-fôrm), a. [< L. lux (luc-), light, + forma, form.] Having the form or nature of light; resembling light.

Plato speaketh of the mind, or soul, as a driver that guides and governs a chariot, which is, not unfitly, styled αὐγοειδές, a luciform æthereal vehicle.
Bp. Berkeley, Siris, § 171.

Lucifriant, a. An improper form of Luciferian[1]. Marston.

lucifugous (lū-sif′ū-gus), a. [< L. lucifugus, shunning the light, < lux (luc-), light, + fugere, flee.] Shunning light; avoiding daylight: applied to various animals, as bats, cockroaches, etc.

lucigen (lū′si-jen), n. and a. [< L. lux (luc-), light, + √ gen, produce: see -gen.] I. n. A modern lamp of great illuminating power, in which oil is burned under conditions which produce and maintain for probably the longest possible time in an illuminating flame a white heat in the carbon particles. The principle upon which the lamp operates is the atomization of the oil by the action of escaping compressed air heated during its passage to the atomizing jet. The oil and air are thus intimately mingled, at a high temperature at the instant of ignition, in such proportions as to gain the maximum illuminating effect.

II. a. A term applied to a system of lighting by lucigens.

The new system of lighting known as lucigen permits of obtaining an intense light of great brilliancy under very remarkable conditions. Sci. Amer., N. S., LIX. 147.

Luciidæ (lū-sī′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Lucius + -idæ.] The pikes, as a family of fishes: same as Esocidæ. C. L. Bonaparte.

lucimeter (lū-sim′e-tėr), n. [< L. lux (luc-), light, + Gr. μέτρον, measure.] 1. A photometer.—2. A sunshine-recorder designed to measure the combined effect of the duration and intensity of sunshine in promoting evaporation.

Lucina (lū-sī′nä), n. [L., the goddess of childbirth, prop. fem. of lucinus, < lux (luc-), light: see lucent.] 1. In Rom. myth., the goddess who presided over childbirth, considered as a daughter of Jupiter and Juno, but frequently confused with Juno or with Diana. She corresponded more or less closely to the Greek goddess Eileithyia.—2. [NL.] In zoöl.: (a) The typical genus of Lucinidæ, having both lateral and cardinal teeth. L. dentata is a species whose white shell shows concentric lines of growth overlaid with oblique radiate striation. Bruguière, 1791. (b) A genus of flies of the family Sciomyzidæ, containing two large gray European species resembling members of the genus Scatophaga. Meigen, 1830. (c) A genus of orthopterous insects. Walker, 1870.

Lucina pennsylvanica.

Lucinacea (lū-si-nā′sē-ä), n. pl. [NL., < Lucina, 2, + -acea.] A superfamily of integropalliate dimyarian mollusks, represented by the Lucinidæ and related families.

lucinacean (lū-si-nā′sē-an), a. and n. I. a. Of or pertaining to the Lucinacea.

II. n. A member of the Lucinacea.

Lucinidæ (lū-sin′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Lucina, 2, + -idæ.] A family of integropalliate siphonate bivalve mollusks. The anal and branchial orifices are well defined but scarcely siphonate; the mouth is very small, and the labial palpi are rudimentary; the branchiæ are large and double, and the foot is vermiform. The shell is subcirçular and equivalve, the hinge typically with two cardinal and two lateral teeth in each valve, but variable and sometimes edentulous; the ligament is marginal and subinternal, and the anterior muscular impression elongated. The genera and species are numerous; the living ones are found in temperate and tropical seas; fossil forms go back to the Silurian. See Lucina.

lucioid (lū′si-oid), n. and a. [< LL. lucius, a pike (see Lucius), + Gr. εἶδος, form.] I. n. A fish of the family Esocidæ; a pike. Sir J. Richardson.

II. a. Like a pike; esocine.

Luciola (lū-sī′ō-lä), n. [NL. (Laporte, 1833), < It. lucciola, a firefly, formerly also a glow-worm, < luce, < L. lux (luc-), light: see light[1].] A genus of fireflies of the family Lampyridæ, having a short transverse prothorax, carinate, and narrowly margined. It is widely distributed, with over 50 species, usually dark-brown and yellow. L. lusitanica is a highly luminous species, which may emit flashes every two or three seconds.

Lucioperca (lū″si-ō-pėr′kä), n. [NL., < LL. lucius, a pike, + L. perca, perch.] A Cuvierian genus of percoid fishes; the pike-perches. L. (Sandrus) sandra is the giant pike-perch of Europe, 3 or 4 feet long, of voracious habits and valuable as a food-fish. Preferably Sandrus.

Lucius (lū′si-us), n. [NL., < LL. lucius, a fish, supposed to be the pike; cf. Gr. λύκος, a kind of fish, lit. 'wolf', = L. lupus, wolf: see Lupus. Hence ult. (< LL. lucius) E. luce[1].] A genus of fishes, the pikes: same as Esox.

luck[1] (luk), n. [< ME. luk, lukke (not found in AS.) = OFries. luk = D. luk, geluk = MLG. lucke, LG. luk (= Icel. lukka = Sw. lycka = Dan. lykke, < G.) = OHG. gilucchi* (not recorded), MHG. gelücke, glücke, G. glück, good fortune, luck, happiness; prob. orig. only HG., the LG. forms being prob., like the Scand., from the HG. Connection with D. lokken = OHG. locchōn, MHG. G. locken = Icel. lokka = Sw. locka = Dan. lokke, allure, entice, seems improbable, on account of the difference of meaning.] 1. Fortune; hap; that which happens to a person by chance, conceived as having a real tendency to be favorable or unfavorable, or as if there were an inward connection between a succession of fortuitous occurrences having the same character as favorable or unfavorable. Thus, gamesters say that one ought to continue to play while the luck is in one's favor and leave off when the luck turns against one.

To tell of good or evil luck,
Of plagues, of dearths, or seasons' quality.
Shak., Sonnets, xiv.

Here's a Trout has taken my fly: I had rather have lost a crown. What luck 's this! he was a lovely fish, and turned up a side like a salmon.
Cotton, in Walton's Angler, ii. 251.

Gay luck to our hunters!—how nobly they ride!
Whittier, Hunters of Men.

2. Good fortune; favorable hap; a supposed something, pertaining to a person, at least for a time, giving to fortuitous events a favorable character; also, in a weakened sense, a fortuitous combination of favorable occurrences.

His lests best become him because they come from him rudely and vnaffected: and hee has the lucke commonly to haue them famous.
Bp. Earle, Micro-cosmographie, A Blunt Man.

They [young men who gamble] think they are "trying their luck," as the phrase is; but if they could be convinced that it is not their luck which they are trying, but only a fraction of it, their opponent having the rest in his pocket, they would show themselves . . averse to risks in which it is more than an even chance against them.
De Morgan, Probabilities, i.

Luck may, and often does, have some share in ephemeral successes, as in a gambler's winnings spent as soon as got, but not in any lasting triumph over time.
Lowell, Study Windows, p. 117.

3. An object with which good fortune is thought to be connected; especially, a vessel for holding liquid, as a drinking-cup. There are several such vessels surviving in England, as the Luck of Edenhall, preserved in a manor-house in the county of Cumberland.

The drinking-glass of crystal tall;
They call it the Luck of Edenhall.
Longfellow, The Luck of Edenhall.

Fisherman's luck. See fisherman.—Greasy luck. See greasy, 9.—To be down on one's luck, to be in bad luck. [Colloq.]

They say that when Mrs. C. was particularly down on her luck, she gave concerts and lessons in music here and there. Thackeray, Vanity Fair, lxiv.

=Syn. See happy.

luck[1] (luk), v. [< ME. lukken (= MLG. lucken); from the noun.] I. intrans. To be lucky. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

II. trans. To make lucky. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

luck[2] (luk), n. [A var. of lock[2].] A lock of wool twisted on the finger of a spinner.

She straight slipp'd off the Wall and Band,
And laid aside her Lucks and Twitches.
Bloomfield, Richard and Kate, l. 30.

Miss Gisborne's flannel is promised the last of the week—there is a bunch of lucks down cellar; bring them up.
S. Judd, Margaret, i. 2.

Luckenbooth brooch. A brooch of a fashion formerly sold in the Luckenbooths in Edinburgh, usually heart-shaped and of silver, sometimes of more elaborate pattern, as of two hearts conjoined, and often bearing inscriptions. These brooches were used as gifts of love and betrothal.

luckie, n. See lucky[2].

luckily (luk′i-li), adv. In a lucky manner; fortunately; by good fortune; with a favorable issue: as, luckily we escaped injury.

luckiness (luk′i-nes), n. The state or quality of being lucky or fortunate; good fortune; favorable issue or event.

luckite (luk′īt), n. [Luck(y Boy) (see def.) + -ite[2].] A variety of the mineral melanterite, or hydrous ferrous sulphate, containing a small amount of manganese. It is found at the "Lucky Boy" silver-mine in Utah.

luckless (luk′les), a. [< luck[1] + -less.] 1. Having no luck; suffering mischance; unlucky; unsuccessful: as, a luckless gamester.

Ah, luckless poet! stretch thy lungs and roar.
Pope, Imit. of Horace, II. i. 324.

2. Unattended by luck; bringing or marked by ill luck or misfortune; unfortunate; unfavorable: as, a luckless adventure.

The night-crow cried, aboding luckless time.
Shak., 3 Hen. VI., v. 6. 45.

=Syn. Unlucky, ill-starred, ill-fated.

lucklessly (luk′les-li), adv. In a luckless manner; unfortunately; unsuccessfully.

lucklessness (luk′les-nes), n. The state of being luckless or unfortunate. Imp. Dict.

luck-penny (luk′pen′i), n. 1. A small sum given back "for luck" to the purchaser or payer by the person who receives money in a bargain or other transaction. [Scotch and Irish.]—2. A copper tossed overboard "for luck."

lucky[1] (luk′i), a. and n. [< luck[1] + -y[1].] I. a. 1. Favored by luck; fortunate; meeting with good success: as, a lucky adventurer.

This is fairy gold, boy. . . . We are lucky.
Shak., W. T., iii. 3. 129.

2. Producing good by chance or unexpectedly; favorable; auspicious: as, a lucky adventure; a lucky time; a lucky cast.

So may some gentle Muse
With lucky words favour my destined urn;
And, as he passes, turn,
And bid fair peace be to my sable shroud.
Milton, Lycidas, l. 20.

Well met, gentlemen; this is lucky that we meet so just together at this very door.
I. Walton, Complete Angler, p. 173.

Mr. Chivery, who was a man of few words, had, on sundry Sunday mornings given his boy what he termed "a lucky touch" on the shoulder signifying that he considered such commendation of him to Good Fortune, preparatory to his that day declaring his passion and becoming triumphant. Dickens, Little Dorrit, xviii.

3. Bulky; full; superabundant: as, lucky measure. [Scotch.]—4. Handy. [Colloq.]

Bellm. Perhaps I may have occasion to use you; you used to be a lucky rogue upon a pinch.
Mart. Ay, master, and I have not forgot it yet.
Mrs. Centlivre, Love's Contrivance, i.

Lucky money, coins worn or carried by way of a charm—sometimes ancient or foreign money. =Syn. 1 and 2. Fortunate, etc. See happy.

II. n. See the phrase.—To cut one's lucky, make one's lucky, to get away; escape. [Low.]

Charley and I made our lucky up the wash'us chimney.
Dickens, Oliver Twist.

lucky[1] (luk'i), adv. [< lucky, a.] More than enough; too: as, lucky severe; lucky long. [Scotch.]

lucky[2], luckie (luk'i), n. [Prob. a particular use of lucky[1], in a sense like that of goody.] An elderly woman; a grandam; goody: prefixed to a person's name: as, Lucky M'Laren. [Scotch.]

lucky-bag (luk'i-bag), n. A receptacle on a man-of-war for all clothes and other articles of private property carelessly left by their owners.

Have the master-at-arms with you in this inspection, to gather up all articles of private property and put them in the lucky bag. Luce, Seamanship, p. 310.

lucky-dad, lucky-daddie (luk'i-dad, -dad'i), n. A grandfather. [Scotch.]

lucky-hands (luk'i-handz), n. A widely distributed fern, Dryopteris Filix-mas: so named from the resemblance of the young unexpanded frond to a hand. The fronds, as well as the roots, were used by ignorant and superstitious people as preservatives against witchcraft and enchantment.

lucky-minnie (luk'i-min'i), n. A grandmother. [Scotch.]

lucky-proach (luk'i-prōch), n. A fish, the father-lasher. [Scotch.]

lucrative (lū'krā-tiv), a. [< F. lucratif = Sp. Pg. It. lucrativo, < L. lucrativus, profitable, < lucrari, pp. lucratus, gain: see lucre, v.] 1. Yielding lucre or gain; gainful; highly profitable: as, a lucrative transaction; a lucrative business or office.—2†. Greedy of gain; self-seeking.

Let not thy prayer be lucrative, nor vindictive, pray not for temporal superfluities. Donne, Sermons, xi.

Lucrative office, an office to which compensation is attached, or perquisites.—Lucrative succession, in Scots law, a passive title whereby an heir apparent who accepts a gratuitous grant from his ancestor of any part of the estate to which he is to succeed as heir may be subjected to the payment of all the debts of the ancestor contracted prior to the grant. =Syn. 1. Paying, remunerative.

lucratively (lū'krā-tiv-li), adv. In a lucrative manner; profitably.

lucre (lū'kėr), n. [Early mod. E. also luker; < ME. lukre* (erroneously lurke, luk, Prompt. Parv.), < OF. (and F.) lucre = Sp. Pg. It. lucro, < L. lucrum, gain, with formative -crum, from a √ lu, which appears also in Ir. luach, price, wages, Gr. λεία, λῆϊς, booty (see Lestes), OBulg. lovŭ, booty (Russ. lovitĕ, take as booty); AS. lēan = OS. OFries. lōn = D. loon = MLG. lōn = OHG. MHG. lōn, G. lohn = Icel. laun = Sw. Dan. lön = Goth. laun, reward.] Gain in money or goods; profit: often, in a restricted sense, base or unworthy gain; money or wealth as the object of sordid greed; hence, greed.

Not greedy of filthy lucre. 1 Tim. iii. 3.

Love to my child, and lucre of the portion,
Provoked me. B. Jonson, Magnetick Lady, v. 6.

Until I gave one of them a small knife to cut betel nuts, he would not go with us; but for the lucre of that he conducted us to a town.
Rob. Knox (Arber's Eng. Garner, I. 424).

lucre†, v. t. [Early mod. E. also luker; < OF. lucrer, < L. lucrari, gain, < lucrum, gain: see lucre, n.] To gain. Levins, Manip. Vocab., col. 182, l. 35.

Lucretian (lū-krē'shiạn), a. [< Lucretius (see def.) + -an.] Of or pertaining to any member of the ancient Roman gens of the Lucretii; especially, relating to or characteristic of the Roman poet and philosopher Titus Lucretius Carus (about 98–55 B. C.), eminent as a poet, and as the most important exponent of the Epicurean philosophy.

lucriferous† (lū-krif'e-rus), a. [< L. lucrum, gain, + ferre = E. bear[1].] Gainful; profitable.

The grand thing that is like to keep this experiment from being as generally useful as perhaps it will prove lucriferous is the dearness of sal armoniack.
Boyle, Works, III. 148.

lucriferousness† (lū-krif'e-rus-nes), n. Profitableness. Boyle, Works, II. 30.

lucrific† (lū-krif'ik), a. [< L. lucrificus, gainful, < lucrum, gain, + facere, make.] Producing profit; gainful. Ash.

luculently (lū'kū-lent-li), adv. In a luculent manner; lucidly; clearly; luminously.

Nowhere has the transition . . . been so luculently shown as here.
Max Müller, Science of Lang., N. S., p. 542.

Luculia (lū-kū'li-ạ), n. [NL. (Robert Sweet, 1826), from the Nepalese name, Luculi swa, of one of the species, L. gratissima.] A genus of plants of the family Rubiaceæ and of the tribe Cinchoneæ, distinguished by the imbricated lobes of the corolla, on the throat or tube of which the included stamens are inserted. There are two species, one found in the Himalaya and the other in the Khasia mountains. The best-known species is L. gratissima, a small tree with opposite ovate-lanceolate leaves, and very fragrant cymes of showy pink flowers. It is a highly ornamental hothouse-plant.

Lucuma (lū-kū'mạ), n. [NL., from the Peruv. name.] A name proposed by Molina in 1782 for a genus of sapotaceous plants considered by some recent authors to belong to Achras. This genus is characterized by four- or five-parted flowers, coriaceous exstipulate leaves, the staminodia or abortive stamens alternate with the fertile ones (although sometimes few or wanting), and seeds without albumen. It embraces about 46 species, chiefly South American, but extending from Chile to Mexico and the West Indies; a very few, however, occur in Australia and New Caledonia. They are trees or shrubs with milky juice and clusters of small or middle-sized flowers in the axils of the leaves or on the older joints. Achras Zapota and A. multiflora (Lucuma multiflora of de Candolle) of the West Indies are called bully-trees, the former of which is the mammee-sapota or marmalade-tree. The fruit contains a pleasant-flavored pulp, resembling quince marmalade in appearance and taste. Ponteria Caimito (Lucuma Caimito of Roemer) of Peru has a smaller fruit, which is said to be superior in flavor to the last-named. A. obovata (Lucuma obovata of Humboldt, Bonpland, and Kunth), also of Peru, is cultivated in Chile under the name of lucuma de Coquimbo.

Lucumo (lū'kū-mō), n. [L., also lucomo, lucmo, an inspired person, an Etruscan prince or priest; a word of Etruscan origin.] Among the ancient Etruscans, the head of a patrician or noble family uniting in himself the characters of priest and prince; in general, one of the Etruscan nobility. To this class the kings also seem to have belonged.

And plainly and more plainly
Now might the burghers know,
By port and vest, by horse and crest,
Each warlike Lucumo.
Macaulay, Horatius, st. 23.

lucus a non lucendo (lū'kus ā non lū-sen'dō). [L.: lucus, a wood or grove, esp. one sacred to a deity; a, from; non, not; lucendo, abl. gerund of lucere, shine (see lea[1], a-[10], non, lucent); that is, a grove is called lucus (which is in form like lucus (lucu-), a light, lucere, be light, shine, lucidus, light) because it is not light: in allusion to the attempt of an ancient grammarian mentioned by Quintilian to derive lucus, a grove, from lucere, shine. The two words are in fact connected, lucus (like grove) being orig. an open light space in a wood.] An absurd etymology or derivation; hence, anything inconsequent or illogical. Sometimes shortened to lucus a non.

lud[1]†, a. A Middle English form of loud.

lud[2]†, n. A Middle English form of lede[3].

Lud[3] (lud), n. A minced form of Lord, in petty oaths: also vulgarly in address: as, my lud.

Needlesse it shall be to refute this phansie, which falleth to the ground of itselfe as a ludibrious follie of the man.
Tooker, Fabric of the Church (1604), p. 119.

ludibundness† (lū'di-bund-nes), n. [< ludibund* (not recorded) (< L. ludibundus, sportive, < ludere, play) + -ness.] Sportiveness; playfulness.

That ludibundness of nature in her gamaieus, and such like sportful and ludicrous productions.
Dr. H. More, Mystery of Iniquity, I. xv. § 14.

ludicrous (lū'di-krus), a. [= OF. ludicre = Pg. It. ludicro, < L. ludicrus, sportive, < ludus, play, < ludere, play, sport. Cf. allude, collude, delude, elude, illude, prelude.] Serving for or exciting sport; laughable from singularity or grotesqueness; adapted to cause sportive laughter or ridicule; absurd.

He has, therefore, in his whole volume, nothing burlesque, and seldom anything ludicrous or familiar.
Johnson, Waller.

The Duke [of Newcastle] was in a state of ludicrous distress. He ran about chattering and crying, asking advice and listening to none. Macaulay, William Pitt.

=Syn. Funny, Comical, Droll, Ludicrous, Ridiculous, Laughable. Either the direct action of laughter or a corresponding sentiment is included in the signification of all these terms. (Crabb, Synonymes, p. 578.) In this respect laughable is the generic word, but it is also one of the strongest. Funny is the weakest of the list, ranging from the meaning of 'amusing' or 'odd' down to its colloquial use in the sense of strange.' Comical still retains a faint suggestion of its origin in connection with the drama, being primarily used in connection with something done or seen, and hence something viewed by the mind: a comical predicament is just such as would be fit for exhibition in a comedy. Droll especially implies the odd or unfamiliar: as, a droll story, idea, fellow. Ludicrous is an advance in strength upon comical, as comical is an advance upon funny. Ridiculous is the only word in the list that throws contempt or even discredit upon the person concerned: it is allowable to tell a ludicrous story about one's friend, but not a story that makes him appear ridiculous. A thing may be ludicrous, etc., on account of its unreasonableness or violation of common sense; if it is ridiculous, it is certainly on that account. That is laughable which simply provokes a hearty laugh.

ludicrously (lū'di-krus-li), adv. In a ludicrous manner; sportively; grotesquely.

You wrong me in thinking I quoted a text from my saint ludicrously. Walpole, To Lady Hervey, Nov. 21, 1765.

The Lords . . . swear by the holy Altar to be revenged for this Ludification and injurious Dealing.
Baker, Chronicles, p. 72.

Some [Puritans] are of a linsey-woolsey disposition, . . . all like Ethiopians, white in the teeth only; full of ludification, and injurious dealing, and cruelty.
Josselyn (Tyler's Hist. Amer. Lit., I. 181).

ludificatory† (lū-dif'i-kā-tō-ri), a. [< LL. ludificatorius, mocking, < L. ludificator, a mocker, < ludificare, pp. ludificatus, make sport of: see ludification.] Making sport; tending to excite derision.

In the sacraments of the Church there is nothing empty or vain, nothing ludificatory, but all thoroughly true.
Barrow, Works, III. xxxix.

ludlamite (lud'lam-īt), n. [After Mr. Ludlam, an English mineralogist.] A hydrous phosphate of iron, occurring in bright-green monoclinic crystals. It is found near Truro in Cornwall, and is associated with vivianite in cavities in pyrite.

Ludlow group. In geol., in England, a series of rocks, consisting chiefly of shales, with occasionally an intercalated belt of limestone, belonging to the Upper Silurian and lying above the Wenlock group, into which it graduates downward, and with whose fauna it has a large number of species in common. The group is typically developed between Ludlow in Shropshire and Aymestrey in Hereford, and the name was given by Murchison because the town of Ludlow stands on beds of this age.

Ludlow's code. See code.

Ludolphian, Ludolfian (lū-dol'fi-an), a. [< Ludolph (see def.) + -ian.] Pertaining to the mathematician Ludolf van Ceulen (died 1610), who calculated the ratio of the circumference of a circle to the diameter to the equivalent of 35 places of decimals, and wished the value to be engraved upon his tombstone.

ludus Helmontii (lū'dus hel-mon'ti-ī). [NL., 'Helmont's amusement,' so called from Jan Baptista van Helmont, a Belgian chemist and physician of the 17th century (died 1644), who believed in the efficacy of such stones (and who gave gas the name it bears: see gas); L. ludus, play, sport, amusement.] 1. A calcareous stone, the precise nature of which is not known, used by the ancients as a remedy in calculous affections.—2. A calculous concretion occurring in an animal body.—3†. A variety of septaria in which the sparry veins are frequent and anastomosing.

Ludwigia (lud-wij'i-ä), n. [NL. (Linnæus), named after C. G. Ludwig, professor of botany at Leipsic, and contemporary with Linnæus.] A genus of dicotyledonous choripetalous plants of the family Onagraceæ; the false or bastard loosestrife. It is characterized by having from three to six petals, entire or two-lobed, sometimes wanting; from three to six stamens; and a three- to six-celled ovary, which becomes, in fruit, a septicidal capsule. They are herbs with opposite or alternate leaves, usually lanceolate in shape, and with the flowers almost always solitary in the axils of the leaves, sometimes in terminal heads. About 25 species are known, natives of Europe, Asia, Africa, and North America. L. alternifolia of the eastern United States, on account of its cubical pod, is called seedbox, and also bowman's-root. Isnardia palustris, the water-purslane, sometimes referred to this genus, is a common weed in ditches and shallow ponds.

ludwigite (lud'wig-īt), n. [Named after E. Ludwig, a chemist of Vienna.] A borate of iron and magnesium, occurring in dark-green to black masses with a fine fibrous structure.

With returning silence, with the lull of the chime, . . . she still resumed the dream.
Charlotte Brontë, Shirley, xiii.

lulla, lully (lul′ä, -i), interj. [ME. lully, lulla, lullay, etc.: see lull, lullaby.] A common burden in nursery songs.

Lully lulla thow litell tine child;
By, by, lully lullay, thow littell tyne child.
Coventry Mysteries (ed. Halliwell), p. 414.

★ lullaby (lul′a-bī), n.; pl. lullabies (-bīz). [< lull, lulla, + -by, a meaningless addition. Cf. rock-aby.] 1. A song sung to lull children to sleep; a cradle-song.

Philomel, with melody
Sing in our sweet lullaby;
Lulla, lulla, lullaby.
Shak., M. N. D., ii. 2. 14.

Drinking is the lullaby used by nurses to still crying children. Locke, Education.

2. A cradle-song, or an instrumental piece in the style of a cradle-song; a berceuse.

lullaby (lul′a-bī), v. t.; pret. and pp. lullabied, ppr. lullabying. [< lullaby, n.] To lull to sleep; hush with a lullaby.

Silence fell upon them, the gliding water lapping the bruised face and lullabying the perturbed spirit, the soft hand of the girl weaving a spell for the wounded warrior.
The Century, XXXVI. 901.

luller (lul′ėr), n. One who lulls or fondles.

lullingly (lul′ing-li), adv. In a lulling manner; so as to quiet or soothe.

The gentle sway of his measure . . . floats you lullingly along from picture to picture.
Lowell, Among my Books, 2d ser., p. 178.

Lullist (lul'ist), n. A follower of Raymond Lully, a scholastic, who died in 1315.

lully, interj. See lulla.

Lulworth skipper. See skipper.

lum[1] (lum), n. [Cf. AS. hlymm.] 1. A wooded valley.—2. A deep pool.

lum[2] (lum), n. [Also lumb, lume, loom; origin obscure; cf. W. llumon, a chimney.] 1. A chimney. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.]

> He set his foot in the black cruik-shell, . . .
> And out at the lum flew he.
> Hogg, Queen's Wake, The Witch of Fife.

2. In coal-mining, a chimney placed on the top of the upcast-shaft to increase the draft and carry off the smoke. [North. Eng.]

lumachella (lū-ma-kel'ä), n. [It.: see lumachelle.] Same as lumachelle.

lumachelle, lumachel (lū'ma-kel), n. [< It. lumachella, lumachelle (named from the shells it contains), < lumachella, a little snail, dim. of lumaca, a snail, < L. limax (limac-), a snail: see limax.] A variety of compact limestone or marble containing fragments of shells, encrinites, and other fossils, which are sometimes iridescent, displaying a variety of brilliant colors. Some of the most beautiful and rarest varieties of antique ornamental marbles belong to the lumachelles. The colors of the limestone base vary greatly in the different varieties. Also called fire-marble.

lumbaginous (lum-baj'i-nus), a. [< LL. lumbago (lumbagin-), lumbago: see lumbago.] Of, ★pertaining to, or afflicted with lumbago.

lumbago (lum-bā'gō), n. [NL., < LL. lumbago, disease or weakness of the loins, < L. lumbus, loin: see loin.] In pathol., myalgia in the lumbar region.

lumbal (lum'bal), a. [< L. lumbus, loin, + -al.] Same as lumbar.

lumbar[1] (lum'bär), a. and n. [= F. lombaire = Sp. lumbar = Pg. lombar = It. lombare, < LL. lumbaris* (neut. lumbare, used as a noun, an apron), < L. lumbus, loin: see loin.] I. a. Of or pertaining to the loins in general: specifically applied in anatomy to many structures. See phrases.—Lumbar abscess, an abscess in the lumbar region; a chronic collection of pus which forms in the cellular substance of the loins behind the peritoneum, and descends in the course of the psoas muscle.—Lumbar arteries, five pairs of branches of the aorta corresponding to the lumbar vertebræ.—Lumbar fascia. See fascia.—Lumbar flexure, the curve of the backbone in the lumbar region, the convexity of which is forward, and distinguishes man from most other animals.—Lumbar ganglia. See ganglion.—Lumbar hernia. See hernia.—Lumbar nerves, five pairs of spinal nerves corresponding to the lumbar vertebræ.—Lumbar plexus, the plexus of the anterior divisions of the lumbar nerves. This plexus is formed of the four upper lumbar nerves. These are all connected with one another by intercommunicating branches, and the last one sends a similar branch to the sacral plexus. The lumbar plexus lies embedded in the psoas magnus muscle. Its leading branches are named iliohypogastric, ilio-inguinal, external cutaneous, anterior crural, genitocrural, and obturator. They supply parts of the abdominal walls, the external genitals, and the front and inner side of the thigh.—Lumbar region, a region of the abdomen lying on each side of the umbilical region, below the hypochondriac and above the iliac. See cut under abdomen.—Lumbar vertebræ, those bones of the spinal column which come between the thoracic or dorsal and the sacral vertebræ, generally bearing no ribs, or otherwise distinguished as a set or series. In man there are five such vertebræ, ribless, with large reniform or kidney-shaped bodies, stout transverse processes, large squarish spinous processes, and prominent oblique articular processes, the anterior of which, on each bone, have accessory processes called mamillary, developed from independent ossific centers.

Human Lumbar Vertebra.
c, centrum; s, neural spine; z, prezygapophysis; z', postzygapophysis; m, metapophysis; a, anapophysis; t, transverse process.

II. n. A lumbar vertebra.

Lumbar[2]†, n. A corrupted form of Lombard[2]. Minsheu.

Lumbard†, n. A former spelling of Lombard[1], Lombard[2].

lumbard-pie† (lum'bärd-pī), n. [Also lumber-pie; < Lumbard, Lombard[1], Italian (a term applied to several ancient dishes), + pie[1].] A highly seasoned meat-pie. Halliwell.

> And it is further ordered therefore that the provision be as followeth: . . . lumberpie, capon, custurd, and codling tart, and 14 mess of each.
> Accounts of Carpenters' Company, Election Dinner, 1663. (Nares.)

lumber[1] (lum'bėr), v. i. [Early mod. E. lumbren, with excrescent b as in number, humble[1], humble[2], etc.; < ME. lomeren, < Sw. lomra, resound, a freq. verb, < Sw. dial. ljumm, a great noise, = Icel. hljōmr, a sound, a tune, akin to Goth. hliuma, hearing, < Teut. √ hlu, hear: see loud and list[1], listen. Like other words denoting sounds, the word has been appar. regarded as imitative, and has also been confused more or less with unrelated words, as with lumber[2], lump, etc.] 1. To make a heavy rumbling noise; rumble: chiefly in the present participle.

> A boisterous gush of wind lumbering amongst it.
> Chapman.
>
> When a lumbering noise from behind made him start.
> Barham, Ingoldsby Legends, I. 66.

2. To move heavily or cumbrously: chiefly in the present participle.

> The post-boy's horse right glad to miss
> The lumbering of the wheels.
> Cowper, John Gilpin.
>
> You pause, as you trudge before the lumbering coach.
> H. James, Jr., Trans. Sketches, p. 249.
>
> Alison listened in amazement, and with a little fear, to this lumbering lad, whose small, twinkling, shrewd eyes seemed to suggest that he was not quite such a fool as he looked. W. Black, Harper's Mag., LXXVI. 392.

3. To stumble. Also lumper. [Prov. Eng.]

> get comen lodly to that lede, as lazares ful monye, > Summe lepre, summe lome [lame], & lomerande blynde, > Poysened & parlatyk & pyned in fyre.
> Alliterative Poems (ed. Morris), ii. 1094.

lumber[2] (lum'bėr), n. [Prob. < lumber[1], v., as being orig. heavy, 'lumbering' articles. In a popular view lumber is explained as orig. the contents of the lumber-room, this being explained as "orig. the Lombard-room, or room where the Lombard banker and broker stowed away his pledges" (Trench, following Blount). But see lumber-room. The word seems, in fact, to have been associated at times with lumber[3].] 1. Things, more or less bulky and cumbersome, thrown aside (or which may be thrown aside) as of no present use or value. Lumber usually includes old or broken boards, barrels, boxes, and other articles of possible future use, as distinguished from mere useless rubbish or refuse. Often used figuratively.

> The tobs, kyrnes, stands, dishes, formes, chaires, stoles, and other lumber.
> Wills & Inv. N. C. (Surtees), II. 300.
>
> A deale of lumber and luggage.
> Mabbe, tr. Aleman's Guzman d'Alf., I. 3.
>
> So that with Provision, Chests, Hencoops, and Parrot-Cages, our Ships were full of Lumber, with which we intended to sail. Dampier, Voyages, II. ii. 129.
>
> It was his glory to free the world from the lumber of a thousand vulgar errours.
> Sterne, Tristram Shandy, iii., Author's Pref.
>
> The bookful blockhead, ignorantly read,
> With loads of learned lumber in his head.
> Pope, Essay on Criticism, l. 613.

2. Timber sawed or split for use, as beams, joists, boards, planks, staves, hoops, and the like. [U. S.]—3. Useless and cumbersome weight, bulk, etc.

> A fine slashing dog, of good size, possessing plenty of bone without lumber, and excellent legs and feet.
> Dogs of Great Britain and America, p. 104.

4. Foolish or ribald talk. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]—5. Harm; mischief. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

lumber[2] (lum'bėr), v. [< lumber[2], n.] I. trans. 1. To heap together in disorder.

> How in matters they be rawe,
> They lumber forth the lawe.
> Skelton, Colin Clout, l. 95.
>
> Deep in the darkness of dull authors bred,
> With all their refuse lumber'd in his head.
> Mallet, Verbal Criticism.

2. To fill with lumber; encumber with anything useless: as, to lumber a room: often with up.

> I could not, in any honesty, lumber my pages with descriptions or speculations which would be idle to most readers. Howells, Venetian Life, xi.

II. intrans. To cut timber in the forest and prepare it for market. [U. S.]

> In Maine so much harm was done to the general interests of the State by reckless lumbering.
> The American, VII. 229.

lumber[3]†, n. [A corruption of earlier lumbard, lombard: see lombard[2].] 1. A pawnbroker's shop.

> They put all the little plate they had in the lumber, which is pawning it, till the ships came.
> Lady Murray, quoted by Trench.

2. A pledge; a pawn.

> The lumber for their proper goods recover.
> Buller, Upon Critics. (Encyc. Dict.)

lumber-car (lum'bėr-kär), n. A railroad-car of extra length, usually 34 feet, particularly intended for carrying lumber. Car-Builder's Dict.

lumberdar (lum-bėr-där'), n. [Hind. lambardār, < E. number + Hind. -dār.] The representative of a village community for the payment of the government dues. [Anglo-Indian.] lumber-drier (lum'bėr-drī'ėr), n. See lumber-kiln.

lumberer (lum'bėr-ėr), n. [< lumber[2], v., + -er[1].] A person employed or concerned in cutting timber and getting it from the forest. Also lumberman. [U. S.]

> The lumberer finds it indispensable, in the operations of his woodcraft, to learn to chop timber right and left handed. Science, IX. 148.

lumber-kiln (lum'bėr-kil), n. An inclosed chamber, artificially warmed, in which sawn lumber may be rapidly heated, to free it from moisture and prevent warping. Such rooms are usually warmed by coils of steam-pipes, and are often arranged with tracks for cars on which the green lumber is piled and run into the building, to be drawn out again when dried. In various forms of driers, the moisture from the wood is condensed and drawn out of the chamber without disturbing the inclosed air; or the air charged with moisture is drawn out and replaced by dry air; or a condenser formed of cold-water pipes is hung in the room, and the moisture which condenses on the pipes drips off and is conducted out of the room.

lumberly (lum'bėr-li), a. [< lumber[1] + -ly[1].] Lumbering; heavy-stepping; unwieldy.

> But England is stirring in a slow, lumberly, and timorous fashion.
> J. A. H. Murray, 9th An. Add. to Philol. Soc.

lumberman (lum'bėr-man), n.; pl. lumbermen (-men). 1. Same as lumberer.—2. One who deals in lumber. [U. S.] lumber-measure (lum'bėr-mezh″ūr), n. A device for ascertaining the number of superficial feet in boards of different lengths. It consists of a case containing a disk placed vertically, which as it passes over the surface of the boards shows on a dial their superficial contents. The apparatus is adjustable for boards of different lengths. [U. S.]

lumber-port (lum'bėr-pôrt), n. A port-hole cut

Bow of Vessel Unloading Lumber through Lumber-port.

in the bow or stern of vessels for the passage of long pieces of timber. [U. S.]

lumber-room (lum'bėr-röm), n. [< lumber[2] + room. Said to be orig. Lombard-room, but this form is not found in use: see lumber[2], lumber[3].] A room or place for the reception of useless or unused things; a room occupied by lumber.

> The world lies no longer a dull miscellany and lumber-room, but has form and order.
> Emerson, The American Scholar.

Lumbert†, n. An obsolete form of Lombard[1], Lombard[2].

lumber-wagon (lum'bėr-wag″on), n. Any large box-wagon, used especially by farmers for the transportation of miscellaneous heavy articles; also, a heavy wagon used in hauling lumber. [U. S.]

lumber-yard (lum'bėr-yärd), n. A yard or inclosure where wood and timber are stored for sale. [U. S.]

lumbi, n. Plural of lumbus.

lumbiplex (lum'bi-pleks), n. [< L. lumbus, loin, + LL. plexus, a plaiting: see plexus.] The lumbar plexus (which see, under lumbar[1]).

lumbiplexal (lum-bi-plek'sal), a. [< lumbiplex + -al.] Of or pertaining to the lumbiplex, or lumbar plexus of nerves. Coues.

lumbocolotomy (lum″bō-kō-lot'ō-mi), n. [< L. lumbus, loin, + Gr. κόλον, colon, + τομή, a cutting.] In surg., incision into the colon in the lumbar region.

lumbodynia (lum-bō-din'i-ä), n. [NL., < L. lumbus, loin, + Gr. ὀδύνη, pain.] In pathol., myalgia in the lumbar region; lumbago.

lumbo-inguinal (lum″bō-ing'gwi-nal), a. [< L. lumbus, loin, + inguen, groin.] Pertaining to the loin and the groin: as, a lumbo-inguinal nerve.

lumbosacral (lum″bō-sā'kral), a. [< L. lumbus, loin, + NL. sacrum.] Pertaining to the lumbar and the sacral region of the spine.—Lumbosacral cord, the nerve formed by the union of the fifth lumbar nerve and the branch from the fourth.—Lumbosacral ligament, a ligament passing from the transverse process of the last lumbar vertebra to become attached to the lateral surface of the base of the sacrum.

lumbric (lum'brik), n. [< ME. lumbrike = F. lombric = Sp. lombriz = Pg. lombriga = It. lom- brico, < L. lumbricus, an intestinal worm, an earthworm.] A worm. Clarke. [Rare.]

lumbrical (lum'bri-kal), a. and n. [= F. Pg. lombrical = Sp. lombrizal = It. lombricale, < NL. lumbricalis, < L. lumbricus, an intestinal worm, an earthworm: see lumbric.] I. a. Pertaining to or resembling a worm; lumbriciform; vermiform: specifically applied in anatomy to the lumbricales.

II. n. A lumbrical muscle. See lumbricalis.

lumbricalis (lum-bri-kā'lis), n.; pl. lumbricales (-lēz). [NL.: see lumbrical.] In anat., a lumbrical muscle: so called from its resemblance in size and shape to a worm. There are four of these small muscles in the palm of the hand and four in the sole of the foot, sometimes distinguished as lumbricales manus and lumbricales pedis; the former are also called fidicinales, or fiddler's muscles, because they contribute to the quick movements of the musician's fingers. They are ancillary to the deep flexor muscles. Each lumbricalis arises from one of the tendons of a deep flexor muscle, whether of hand or foot, and is inserted into the side of the base of that finger or toe which such tendon supplies. Neither the thumb nor the great toe has a lumbricalis. Similar muscles occur in some mammals besides man.

Lumbricidæ (lum-bris'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Lumbricus + -idæ.] A family of terricolous annelids of the order Oligochæta, typified by the genus Lumbricus; earthworms. The body is long, cylindric, or nearly so, with numerous rings or segments, bearing bristly parapodia which assist in progression, some of the segments being modified into a cingulum or clitellus. There are no eyes, ears, or oral armature. See earthworm.

lumbricide (lum'bri-sīd), n. [Contr. of lumbricicide*, < L. lumbricus, an intestinal worm, + -cida, a killer, < cædere, kill.] A vermifuge or anthelmintic which destroys the roundworm, Ascaris lumbricoides.

lumbriciform (lum-bris'i-fôrm), a. [< L. lumbricus, an intestinal worm, an earthworm (see lumbric), + forma, form.] Like an earthworm in form; lumbricine; lumbricoid; vermiform.

Lumbricina (lum-bri-sī'nä), n. pl. [NL., < Lumbricus + *-ina*2.] A tribe of annelids, the terricolous oligochætous worms, such as earthworms.

lumbricine (lum'bri-sin), a. [< NL. lumbricinus, < L. lumbricus, an intestinal worm: see lumbric.] Lumbriciform; specifically, of or pertaining to the Lumbricina.

lumbricoid (lum'bri-koid), a. and n. [< L. lumbricus, an intestinal worm, an earthworm (see lumbric), + Gr. εἶδος, form.] I. a. Resembling an earthworm: specifically applied to the internal parasite Ascaris lumbricoides, a nematoid, one of the commonest of the worms which infest man. See Ascaris.

II. n. The worm Ascaris lumbricoides.

Lumbricomorpha (lum-bri-kō-môr'fä), n. pl. [NL., < L. lumbricus, an intestinal worm, an earthworm (see lumbric), + Gr. μόρφη, form.] The earthworms and their allies, regarded as one of four orders of oligochætous annelids.

Lumbriculidæ (lum-bri-kū'li-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Lumbriculus + -idæ.] A family of oligochætous annelids, taking name from the genus Lumbriculus.

Lumbriculus (lum-brik'ū-lus), n. [NL., dim. of L. lumbricus, an intestinal worm, an earthworm: see lumbric.] A genus of aquatic or limicoline oligochætous annelids, the type of the family Lumbriculidæ. It is remarkable for the power of reproduction by transverse fission which its members possess. The worm breaks in two, and proceeds to develop a new head for one of its pieces and a new tail for the other.

Lumbricus (lum-brī'kus), n. [NL., < L. lumbricus, an intestinal worm, an earthworm: see lumbric.] The typical genus of Lumbricidæ, and together with Perichæta composing that family; the earthworms proper, as L. terrestris.

lumbus (lum'bus), n.; pl. lumbi (lum'bī). [L., loin: see loin.] In anat., the loin; the lumbar region of the body.—Quadratus lumborum, the square muscle of the loins, a stout thick muscle of quadrilateral shape extending from the twelfth rib to the crest of the ilium on each side of the spinal column.

lume†, v. i. An obsolete form of *loom*2.

lumen (lū'men), n.; pl. lumina (-mi-nä). [NL., ★< L. lumen, light, a light, a window: see luminous.] 1. An opening or passageway, as, in anat., of a hollow tubular organ: as, the lumen of the intestine or of a blood-vessel.

Tracheotomy was resorted to, the larger lumen of the tube affording a freer vent. Lancet, No. 3454, p. 949.

2. In bot., the internal cavity, or space within the wall, of a cell.

In thin sections of the sclerotia thin lumina appear in all possible forms. De Bary, Fungi (trans.), p. 321.

lum-head (lum'hed), n. A chimney-top. [Scotch.]

The . . . blue reek that came out of the lum-head. Scott, Heart of Mid-Lothian, xxvii.

lumière (F. pron. lü-miär'), n. [F., < LL. luminare, < L. lumen, light: see lumen.] In armor, the opening in the vizor, whether of the large helm of the thirteenth century, of the bassinet, or of the armet of the fifteenth century.

lumina, n. Plural of lumen.

luminant (lū'mi-nant), a. and n. [< LL. luminan(t-)s, ppr. of luminare, brighten: see luminate.] I. a. Emitting light; shining; luminous.

II. n. An illuminating agent. [Rare.]

Public institutions and factories are very much in favour of the new luminant. Elect. Rev. (Eng.), XXIV. 334.

luminarist (lū'mi-nā-rist), n. [< luminar(y) + -ist.] In painting, a master of light and shade; one skilful in rendering gradations and effects of light or of shadow.

The finest works of that great and subtle luminarist Adrian van Ostade. The Academy, Jan. 21, 1880, p. 48.

luminary (lū'mi-nā-ri), n.; pl. luminaries (-riz). [< OF. luminarie, F. luminaire, a light, = Pg. Sp. luminar, luminaria = It. luminare, luminara, luminaria, < LL. luminare, a lamp, a light, L. luminare, a window, < lumen (lumin-), light: see luminous.] 1. A light-giver; a body that illuminates or gives out light: applied especially to the sun and moon.

Where the great luminary . . .
Dispenses light from far. Milton, P. L., iii. 576.

Henco—2. One who is a source of intellectual light; a person who illustrates any subject, or enlightens mankind: as, the great luminaries of an age; a luminary of literature or science.

It will not be necessary to bring under review the minor luminaries of this period. Prescott, Ferd. and Isa., i. 1.

3†. An illumination.

There were Luminaries of Joy lately here for the Victory that Don Gonxalez de Cordova got over Count Mansfelt in the Netherlands. Howell, Letters, I. iii. 14.

luminate† (lū'mi-nāt), v. t. [< LL. luminatus, pp. of luminare, illumine, < L. lumen (lumin-), light: see luminous. Cf. illuminate, illumine, illume, limn, etc.] To illuminate.

lumination (lū-mi-nā'shon), n. [< LL. as if luminatio(n-)*, < luminare, shine: see luminate.] 1†. Illumination. Johnson.—2. A lighting up; a flashing out, as of light or energy; an illuminating outburst. [Rare.]

The liberty of the Netherlands, notwithstanding several brilliant but brief luminations, occurring at irregular intervals, seemed to remain in almost perpetual eclipse. Motley, Dutch Republic, I. 43.

lumine† (lū'min), v. t. [< ME. luminen, < LL. luminare, shine: see luminate and *loom*2. Cf. illumine.] To illumine; enlighten. See illumine.

Thus the outwarde parte of the place lumyned the eyes of the beholders, by reason of ye sumptuous worke. Hall, Hist. Hen. VIII., an. 12.

lumine (lū'min), n. [< L. lumen (lumin-), light: see lumen, luminous.] The principle or the medium of light; the luminiferous ether. London Jour. Arts, Sci., and Manuf., 1848.

luminer†, n. An obsolete form of limner.

lumineret, n. A Middle English form of limner.

luminescence (lū-mi-nes'ens), n. [< luminescen(t) + -ce.] The emission of light, however caused, at temperatures below those at which bodies are commonly incandescent.

I have ventured to employ the term luminescence for all those phenomena of light which are more intense than corresponds to the actual temperature. E. Wiedemann, Phil. Mag., 5th ser., XXVIII. 151.

luminescent (lū-mi-nes'ent), a. [< L. luminare, shine, + -escent.] Characterized by luminescence. E. Wiedemann, Phil. Mag., 5th ser., XXVIII. 155.

luminiferous (lū-mi-nif'e-rus), a. [< L. lumen (lumin-), light, + ferre = E. *bear*1.] 1. In physics, producing or bearing light; yielding light: as, the luminiferous ether. See *ether*1, 2.

The luminiferous motions are only components of the whole motion. Sir W. Thomson, Reprint of Papers, p. 419.

2. Serving as a medium for conveying light.

luminologist (lū-mi-nol'ō-jist), n. 1. One who is versed in the study of illuminations (of manuscripts).—2. One who studies the luminous phenomena of living organisms.

He incorporates manuscript notes placed at his disposal by our veteran Gosse, and by luminologists such as Giglioli, Dubois, and others. Nature, XXXVII. 411.

luminosity (lū-mi-nos'i-ti), n. [= F. luminosité = It. luminosità, < ML. luminosita(t-)s, splendor, < L. luminosus, luminous: see luminous.] 1. The quality of being luminous or bright; luminousness; the radiation or reflection of light.

The luminosity of ordinary flames depends on the pressure of the supporting medium. E. Frankland, Exper. in Chem., p. 904.

2. Specifically, the intensity of light in a color, measured photometrically. That is to say, a standard light has its intensity, or vis viva, altered until it produces the impression of being equally bright with the color whose luminosity is to be determined; and the measure of the vis viva of the altered light relatively to its standard intensity is then taken as the luminosity of the color in question.

It is evident, then, that brightness or luminosity is one of the properties by which we can define colour; it is our second colour constant. This word luminosity is also often used by artists in an entirely different sense; they call colour in a painting luminous simply because it recalls to the mind the impression of light, not because it actually reflects much light to the eye. O. N. Rood, Modern Chromatics.

★3. In bot., phosphorescence.

luminous (lū'mi-nus), a. [< F. lumineux = Sp. Pg. It. luminoso, < L. luminosus, luminous, shining, < lumen (lumin-), light, for lucmen*, < lucere, shine: see lucent, *light*1.] 1. Radiating or reflecting light; giving out light, whether as an original or as a secondary source; illuminating; shining; radiant; bright.—2. Producing or adapted to produce light; having the power of yielding light.

The admission of luminous waves gives a perfectly satisfactory explanation . . . of the great majority of the phenomena of light. Lommel, Light (trans.), p. 213.

3. Lighted up; illuminated; bright; clear; resplendent; rendering an effect of lightness or brightness, as a work of art or a color.

The church of St. Justina, designed by Palladio, is the most handsome, luminous, disencumbered building in the inside that I have ever seen. Addison, Remarks on Italy (ed. Bohn), I. 384.

Making the dusk and silence of the woods
Glad with the laughter of the chasing floods,
And luminous with blown spray and silver gleams.
Whittier, Franconia from the Pemigewasset.

In anat., of or pertaining to the lunare, or semilunar bone of the carpus.—7. Pertaining to silver: from the moon being the alchemical symbol of that metal: as, lunar caustic (nitrate of silver).—Lunar bone, a certain bone of the wrist or carpus. See lunare.—Lunar caustic. See caustic.—Lunar cycle. Same as Metonic cycle (which see, under cycle[1]).—Lunar distance, in naut. astron., the distance of the moon from the sun, or from a fixed star or planet lying nearly in the line of its path, by means of which the longitude of a ship at sea may be calculated.—Lunar equation. See equation.—Lunar hornet-moth, Sesia bembeciformis, a hornet-moth having a crescentic yellow spot on the thorax, and a black crescent on each fore wing: an English collectors' name.—Lunar macula. See macula.—Lunar mansion, one of 28 (or 27) parts into which the ecliptic was or is divided by various Oriental peoples as the Hindus, Chinese, and Arabians, their mean length being the path of the moon in one day among the stars. Each mansion is determined by certain stars occupying it.—Lunar method, in naut. astron., the method of determining longitude from observation of lunar distances.—Lunar month. See month.—Lunar nodes. See node.—Lunar observation, an observation of the moon's distance from a star for the purpose of finding the longitude.—Lunar stars, certain stars and other celestial objects whose geocentric distance from the moon is given in the Nautical Almanac for certain hours, so that by measuring the apparent distance of the moon from one or more of them the longitude can be found.

> He knew every lunar star in both hemispheres.
> R. H. Dana, Jr., Before the Mast, p. 228.

Lunar tables. (a) In astron., tables of the moon's motions for computing the moon's true place at any time, past or future. (b) In navigation, tables for correcting the apparent distance of the moon from the sun, or from a fixed star, on account of refraction and parallax, and for deducing the longitude of the observer from the lunar data given in the almanac.—Lunar theory, the deduction of the moon's motion from the law of gravitation.—Lunar underwing, Anchocelis lunosa, a small noctuid moth of ocher-brown color, whose underwings are marked with a crescentic darker spot: an English collectors' name.—Lunar year. See year.

II. n. In navigation, lunar distance, or an observation for lunar distance: as, to take a lunar.

> These trials were partly made at Greenwich by Maskelyne, who, as we shall see, was a great advocate of lunars, and was not ready to admit more than a subsidiary value to the watch. Encyc. Brit., XVII. 259.

lunare (lū-nā'rē), n.; pl. lunaria (-ri-ä). [NL., neut. (sc. os) of L. lunaris, lunar: see lunar.] A bone of the carpus, more fully named os lunare, and also called semilunare, or the semilunar bone: supposed to represent the bone of the typical carpus called intermedium by Gegenbaur. It is sometimes fused with the scaphoid, forming a single scapholunar bone, as in carnivores. When distinct, as in man, it is the middle bone of the proximal row, between the scaphoid and the cuneiform.

Lunaria (lū-nā'ri-ä), n. [NL. (Linnæus, 1753), < L. lunaris, of the moon: see lunar.] 1. A genus of cruciferous herbs of the tribe Sinapeæ, characterized by entire cordate leaves and a very broad silicle on a long stipe, the seeds being attached by long stalks. There are two species, found in Europe. L. annua is the common honesty, also called satin-flower and bolbonac, cultivated for its racemes of large purple flowers and the silvery partitions of the fruit. L. rediviva, the perennial honesty, is also cultivated, but less commonly.

2. [l. c.] Plural of lunare and lunarium.

lunarian (lū-nā'ri-an), n. [< L. lunaris, of the moon (see lunar), + -ian.] 1. One of the (supposed) inhabitants of the moon.—2. One versed in knowledge of the moon; a student of lunar phenomena. Also lunarist.—3. An advocate of the lunar method of finding longitude at sea: a term which has lost its significance since the chronometer has reached its present state of perfection.

> There were powerful competitors who hoped to gain it [a reward offered for the best method of finding longitude at sea] by lunars, and a bill was passed through the House in 1763 which left an open chance for a lunarian during four years. Encyc. Brit., XVII. 259.

lunarist (lū'năr-ist), n. [< lunar + -ist.] Same as lunarian, 2.

> In such grand disturbances as these [storms], the Lunarist should endeavour to trace influences of moon, and the Astro-meteorologist even those of planets.
> Fitz Roy, Weather Book, p. 213.

★lunarium (lū-nā′ri-um), n.; pl. lunariums, lunaria (-umz, -ä). [NL., ⟨ L. lunaris, of the moon: see lunar.] A mechanical representation of the moon and its phases.

What is become of the Lunarium for the King?
Jefferson, Correspondence, II. 393.

lunary[1]† (lū′na-ri), a. [⟨ L. lunaris, of the moon: see lunar.] Same as lunar.

The Greeks observed the lunary year—that is, twelve revolutions of the moon, 354 dayes.
Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., iv. 12.

lunary[2] (lū′na-ri), n.; pl. lunaries (-riz). [⟨ ME. lunarie = OF. lunaire, ⟨ ML. lunaria, moonwort (in NL. the specific name of the plant), ⟨ L. lunaris, of the moon: see lunar.] 1. The garden-flower Lunaria annua. See honesty, 5, and Lunaria.—2. The moonwort, Botrychium Lunaria. This herb was formerly supposed to have the power of opening locks and drawing the shoes from the feet of horses. (See quotation under lunatic, a., 3.) The name was formerly applied to various other real or imaginary plants having superstitious associations.

luna-silkworm (lū′nä-silk″wėrm), n. The caterpillar of the luna-moth, Tropæa luna.

Sometime with lunatic bans, sometime with prayers.
Shak., Lear, ii. 3. 19.

Of a most lunatic conscience and spleen, and affects the violence of singularity in all he does.
B. Jonson, Bartholomew Fair, i. 1.

3†. Of or like the moon. [An erroneous use.]

That ferrum equinum [lunary] . . . hath a vertue attractive of Iron, a power to break lockes, and draw off the shooes of a horse that passeth over it. . . . Which strange and magicall conceit seemes unto me to have no deeper root in reason then the figure of its seed, for therein indeed it somewhat resembles an horseshooe, which notwithstanding Baptista Porta hath too low a signation, and raised the same unto a Lunatic representation.
Sir T. Browne, Pseud. Epid., ii. 6 (1646, p. 100).

II. n. 1. A person affected with lunacy; specifically, an insane person who has lucid intervals, or one whose unsoundness of mind is acquired, not congenital, as distinguished from an idiot.

I must convince you, not only that the unhappy prisoner was a lunatic, within my own definition of lunacy, but that the act in question was the immediate, unqualified offspring of the disease.
Erskine, Speech for James Hadfield.

A lunatic is one who has had understanding, but by disease, grief, or other accident has lost the use of his reason, which yet the law presumes that he may recover.
Minor, Inst. (2d ed.), I. 86.

2. More generally (and in law), any person of unsound mind. See further under lunacy and insanity.

The lunatic, the lover, and the poet
Are of imagination all compact;
One sees more devils than vast hell can hold—
That is, the madman. Shak., M. N. D., v. 1. 8.

'Tis time to take the monarch's power in hand:
Authority and force to join the skill,
And save the lunatics against their will.
Tate (?), in Dryden's Abs. and Achit., xii. 780.

Adjudicated lunatic, one whose incompetency to manage his own property and affairs, by reason of mental unsoundness, has been judicially established by a commission or inquest, and who is thereby interdicted from making contracts and dispositions of property.—Criminal lunatic, a convict, or one in custody under accusation of crime, who has been found to be unfit for trial or for punishment by reason of unsoundness of mind: sometimes used to include also persons not amenable to criminal punishment by reason of having been of unsound mind at the time of committing the crime.—Lunatic asylum, a house or hospital established for the reception and treatment of lunatics.=Syn. See insanity.

lunatical (lū-nat′i-kal), a. [⟨ lunatic + -al.] Affected by or manifesting madness or lunacy; lunatic. [Rare.]

And there is not the Mone seyn in alle the Lunacioun, saf only the seconde quarteroun.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 301.

When it is stated that during four lunations twelve series of observations only were secured, some idea of the amount of cloudy weather can be formed.
C. F. Hall, Polar Expedition, p. 323.

lunatum (lū-nā′tum), n.; pl. lunata (-tä). [L., neut. of lunatus, crescent-shaped: see lunate.] A bone of the proximal row of the carpus of some animals, as batrachians, on the radial side of the wrist, probably homologous with the radiale.

lunch (lunch), n. [A var. of lump, as bunch of bump and hunch of hump. In def. 2 lunch is commonly regarded as an abbr. of luncheon, which is therefore by some preferred as the more correct or "elegant" form; but lunch, 2, is derivable as well from lunch, 1, directly; cf. piece in the sense of 'a slight repast.' See luncheon.] 1. A large lump or piece, as of bread. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.]

An cheese and bread, frae women's laps,
Was dealt about in lunches. Burns, Holy Fair.

2. A slight repast or meal between breakfast and dinner, or, as formerly, between dinner and supper, or between dinner or supper and bedtime; luncheon.

As for the lunches, the one is pure Sicilian, of the fruits of the orchard and the vine; the other, pure Briton, smacking of the cook and the larder.
Stedman, Vict. Poets, p. 231.

lunch (lunch), v. i. [⟨ lunch, n.] To take a lunch or luncheon.

I have breakfasted with Bolivar—I have lunched with Napoleon—I have dined with Wellington—and now, blessed be the stars above, here am I drinking tea with North and Tickler. Noctes Ambrosianæ, Sept. 1, 1832.

We lunched fairly upon little dishes of rose leaves delicately preserved. Howells, Venetian Life, xiii.

lunch-counter (lunch′koun″tėr), n. A counter or long elevated table in an eating-house or other house of entertainment, at which persons sit on high stools or stand while taking a lunch: also, colloquially, a standee. [U. S.]

luncheon (lun′chon), n. [Formerly also lunchion, lunshin; a dial. word, prob. for lunchin*, lunching*, ⟨ lunch + -ing[1]. The termination, like that of the unrelated nuncheon, simulates a F. origin.] 1. A large lump or piece, as of bread: same as lunch, 1. Cotgrave.

I sliced the luncheon from the barley-loaf.
Gay, Shepherd's Week, Tuesday, l. 70.

I instantly borrowed the old man's knife, and, taking up the loaf, cut myself a hearty luncheon.
Sterne, Sentimental Journey, p. 115.

2. A slight repast: same as lunch, 2. The form luncheon is now regarded as more "elegant" than lunch.

He was introduced to the early dinner, where all the children sat in their high chairs, and where the food was more wholesome than delicate—a meal which was too plainly dinner to be disguised under the name of luncheon.
Mrs. Oliphant, Poor Gentleman, xiv.

luncheon (lun′chon), v. i. [⟨ luncheon, n.] To take lunch or luncheon. [Rare.]

While ladies are luncheoning on Perigord pie, or coursing in whirling britskas, performing all the singular ceremonies of a London morning in the heart of the season.
Disraeli.

luncheon-bar (lun′chon-bär), n. In Great Britain, a part of an inn or public house where luncheon can be had. Compare lunch-counter.

lunda (lun′dä), n. [Icel. lundi.] 1. The common puffin, Fratercula arctica. Montagu.—2. [cap.] [NL.] A genus of Alcidæ, having the bill much as in Fratercula, but the head adorned with a long curly crest on each side: the tufted puffins. L. cirrata is a common species of the North Pacific ocean from California to Kamchatka. See Fratercula and puffin.

lundress† (lun′dres), n. [⟨ F. Londres, London.] A sterling silver penny formerly coined in London. Encyc. Dict.

lune[1] (lūn), n. [⟨ F. lune = Sp. Pg. It. luna, ⟨ L. luna, the moon: see luna.] 1. Anything in the shape of a crescent or half-moon. [Rare.]

Some faithful janizaries strew'd the field,
Fall'n in just ranks or wedges, lunes or squares,
Firm as they stood.
Watts, Lyric Poems, ii. (Encyc. Dict.)

2. In geom., a figure formed on a sphere or on a plane by two arcs of circles which inclose a space. Hippocrates of Chios, probably a contemporary of the celebrated physician Hippocrates of Cos, squared those plane lunes (μηνίσκοι) which are contained by two arcs standing on the same chord, the central angles of the arcs being to one another as 1:2 or 1:3 or 2:3.

The lune of Hippocrates is famous as being the first curvilinear space whose area was exactly determined.
Davies.

3†. A fit of lunacy or madness; a mad freak or tantrum.

Yea, watch
His pettish lunes, his ebbs, his flows, as if
The passage and whole carriage of this action Rode on his tide. Shak., T. and C., ii. 3. 139.

lune[2]† (lūn), n. [ME. lune, lewne, var. of loigne, q. v.] A leash: as, the lune of a hawk.

The lunes, or small thongs of leather, might be fastened to them with two tyrrits, or rings; and the lunes were loosely wound round the little finger.
Strutt, Sports and Pastimes, p. 91.

lune[3] (lūn), n. Another spelling of loon[2].

Lunel (lū-nel′), n. [F.] A sweet and rich white muscat wine, similar to Frontignan, produced in the south of France, in the department of Hérault.

lunet† (lū′net), n. [⟨ F. lunette, OF. lunete, dim. of lune, the moon: see lune[1]. Cf. lunette.] A little moon; a satellite.

Our predecessors could never have believed that there were such lunets about some of the planets as our late perspectives have descryed. Bp. Hall, Peace-Maker, § 10.

★lunette (lū-net′), n. [⟨ F. lunette, dim. of lune, the moon: see lunet.] 1. In fort., a detached work with flanks, presenting a salient angle to the enemy, intended for the protection of avenues, bridges, and the curtains of fieldworks.—2. In farriery, a half-horseshoe, having only the front.—3. A blinder for the eye of a horse.—4. In arch.: (a) The aperture formed by the intersection of any vault by a vault of smaller dimensions; particularly, such an aperture in a vaulted ceiling for the admission of light. Of this class are the upper lights of the naves of St. Peter's at Rome and St. Paul's in London.

Lunette, def. 1.

The effigy is placed under a Gothic arch whose lunette once contained a fresco by the Sienese painter Pietro Lorenzetti. C. C. Perkins, Italian Sculpture, p. 59.

(b) A small aperture or window, especially if curved or circular, in a roof.—5. In a glass-furnace, the flue connecting the fire-chamber and the pot-chamber. E. H. Knight.—6. A watch-crystal flattened in the center; also, a kind of concavo-convex lens for spectacles.—7. In archæol., a crescent ornament made of thin gold and intended as a diadem or gorget, found in ancient tombs of various epochs.—8. A work of art of such a shape as to fill a lunette, especially a painting or panel of such shape: as, the lunettes of Correggio.

A lunette for an altar of the Church of Saint Agostino.
The Portfolio, March, 1888, p. 62.

9. One of the two open loops of steel which constitute the guard of the ordinary fleuret or foil used in fencing.—10. In artillery, an iron ring at the end of the trail-plate of a gun-carriage, to be placed over the pintle-hook of the limber in limbering up.—11. In the Rom. Cath. Ch., a crescent-shaped or circular case of crystal fitted into the monstrance for the purpose of receiving the consecrated host for solemn exposition.

★lung (lung), n. [< ME. lunge, longe (pl. lunges), < AS. lungen (not lunge*), pl. lungena (not lungan*) = OFries. lungen, lungene = MD. longe, D. long = OHG. lungunna, lunginna, lungina, lungā, MHG. lungene, G. lunge = Icel. lunga, pl. lungu = Sw. lunga = Dan. lunge, lung; akin to AS. lungor (= OHG. lungar, MHG. lunger), quick (orig. light), lungre, quickly (orig. lightly), and to AS. leóht, līht (orig. linht*), light: see light[2], a., and cf. light[2], n., in pl., lungs (of an animal); cf. also Pg. leve, lung, < leve, light, < L. levis, light, akin to E. light[2], a., and thus ult. to lung.] 1. One of the two spongy or saccular organs, occupying the thorax or upper part of the body-cavity, which communicate with the pharynx through the trachea, and are the organs of respiration in air-breathing vertebrates. The corresponding organs of those animals that breathe under water are the gills or branchiæ; in ordinary fishes the homologue of a lung is the air-bladder or sound, whose varying conditions are important in classification. (See physoclistous, physostomous, and sound.) Except in their least-developed condition, the lungs are formed by the repeated subdivision of the branches of their bronchi which finally end in saccular dilatations called infundibula. The infundibula and the air-passages immediately leading to them are beset with air-cells. These air-cells or alveoli are from $\frac{1}{150}$ to $\frac{1}{75}$ of an inch in diameter. They are furnished with a close capillary network in which the branches from the pulmonary artery terminate, and the blood is separated from the air only by the capillary wall and the thin alveolar epithelium of the air-cells. This assemblage of minute saccular organs and air-bearing tubes is bound up by connective tissue into the comparatively compact lung. The bronchial arteries and veins provide for the nutrition of the pulmonary structures. Lymphatics abound, and there are numerous lymphatic glands. The vagus and sympathetic supply nerves. In man each lung is pyramidal in form, its base resting on the diaphragm and its apex rising about an inch above the collar-bone. The right lung is divided into an upper, a middle, and a lower lobe; the left simply into an upper and a lower. At the inner side of each lung, a little above the middle, the bronchus and blood-vessels enter, forming the root of the lung; and except for this attachment the lung lies free in its pleural cavity, which it completely fills. The lung is elastic and always on the stretch. The blood, in passing through the lungs, gives off carbon dioxid to the air in the alveoli, and receives oxygen. This absorption and elimination seems to be a simple mechanical process, and independent of any secreting or other activity of the epithelial cells. In the lower vertebrates there may be but one lung, or one may be much larger than the other. A lung may lie in the general cavity of the body and be of great extent, as in serpents. The lungs are fixed and molded to the ribs in birds, and in this class the air-passages through the lungs expand into great serous sacs which occupy most parts of the body and extend into the hollow bones.

With hys swyrde the bore he stonge Thorow the lyvyr and the longe.
MS. Cantab. Ff. ii. 38, f. 100. (Halliwell.)

And the kynge Ban smote Acolas, that the shulder disseuered from the body so depe that the longes apered.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), ii. 357.

2. In entom., one of the respiratory organs peculiar to those Arachnida whose tracheal system is modified into a number of lamellæ superimposed upon one another like the leaves of a book. They are also called pulmonary lamellæ and respiratory leaflets.—3. In pulmonate mollusks, a modification of the integument subserving aërial respiration: more fully called external lung. Huxley.—4†. pl. A bellows-blower; a chemist's servant.

That is his fire-drake,
His Lungs, his Zephyrus, he that puffs his coals.
B. Jonson, Alchemist, ii. 1.

At the top of one's lungs, with the utmost strength of one's voice.—Brown induration of the lungs. See induration.—Collier's lung, in pathol., anthracosis.—To try one's lungs, to raise one's voice to its utmost pitch.

I once had the good luck to hear old Christopher North try his lungs in the open air in Scotland. Such laughter and such hill-shaking merry-heartedness I may never listen to again in the Lochs.
J. T. Fields, Underbrush, p. 196.

lunge[1] (lunj), n. [Formerly longe, lounge; by apheresis from alonge, allonge (appar. taken as a longe): see allonge.] 1. In fencing, a thrust.

In a desperate lounge, which Leicester successfully put aside, Tressilian exposed himself at disadvantage.
Scott, Kenilworth, xxxix.

2. Any sudden forward movement of a person or thing resembling the lunge of a fencer; a plunge; a lurch: as, the lunge of a coach. [Colloq.]

He . . . made so sudden a lunge forward that he threatened to upset the boat. Harper's Mag., LXXIX. 111.

lunge[1] (lunj), v.; pret. and pp. lunged, ppr. lunging. [< lunge, n.] I. intrans. 1. To thrust, as in fencing, with the sword or foil; make a thrust forward; plunge.

When the grenadiers were lunging,
And like hail fell the plunging Cannon shot.
G. H. McMaster, The Old Continentals.

He . . . caught up the snuffers, and before applying them to the cabbage-headed candle, lunged at the sleeper.
Dickens, Little Dorrit, iv.

2. To hide; skulk. [Prov. Eng.]

II. trans. To cause to move in a plunging or jumping manner, as a horse held by a long rein, for exercise or training.

The coachman was lunging Georgy round the lawn on the gray pony. Thackeray, Vanity Fair, xlvi.

The place [a watercourse] should be widened gradually, and the water dammed up, the colt being always lunged over it before being ridden. Encyc. Brit., XII. 189.

lunge[2] (lunj), n. Same as longe[2].

lunged (lungd), a. [< lung + -ed[2].] 1. Having lungs; technically, in zoöl., pulmonate: common in compounds, as strong- or weak-lunged.—2. Drawing in and expelling air like the lungs. [Poetical.]

The smith prepares his hammer for the stroke,
While the lung'd bellows hissing fire provoke.
Dryden, tr. of Juvenal's Satires, x.

lunger (lun'jėr), n. One who lunges or thrusts.

To do him justice . . . a swifter lunger never crossed a sword. Bulwer, Zanoni, ii. 1.

lung-fever (lung'fē″vėr), n. Pneumonia.

lung-fish (lung'fish), n. A dipnoan; any fish of the order Dipnoi or Dipneusta.

How difficult a matter it is to decide whether the lung-fish of Brazil and Senegambia belongs to the amphibia or to the fishes. Pop. Sci. Mo., XXX. 678.

lung-flower (lung'flou″ėr), n. The marsh-gentian, Gentiana Pneumonanthe: a translation of its specific name.

lung-grown (lung'grōn), a. In med., having lungs that adhere to the pleura.

lungi, n. See loonghee.

lungie, n. See longie.

lungis†, n. [Also lungies; < OF. longis, an idle, stupid, dreaming fellow, appar. adopted and associated with long, long, from Longis, a proper name, < L. Longius or Longinus, the name in the old mystery plays, and in the apocryphal gospel of Nicodemus, of the centurion who thrust his spear into the body of Christ, the name being appar. suggested by Gr. λόγχη, a lance, in John xix. 34: see lance[1]. Hence perhaps lounge[1].] A long, awkward fellow; a dull, drowsy man.

If he be cleanelye, then terme they him proude; if meane in apparell, a slouen; if talle, a lungis.
Lyly, Euphues, Anat. of Wit, p. 115.

How dost thou, Ralph? Art thou not shrewdly hurt? the foul great lungies laid unmercifully on thee.
Beau. and Fl., Knight of Burning Pestle, ii. 6.

lungless (lung'les), a. [< lung + -less.] Having no lungs; not pulmonate, as certain inferior animals.

lung-lichen (lung'lī″ken), n. Same as lung-wort, 3.

lung-moss (lung'môs), n. Same as lungwort, 3.

lungoor (lung'gör), n. [Hindi langūr.] A monkey of northern India, Semnopithecus schistaceus, resembling and related to the entellus monkey or hanuman; the white-bearded ape. Also langoor, langhur.

lung-strongle (lung'strong″gl), n. The strongle which infests the human lungs, Strongylus bronchialis.

lung-struck (lung'struk), a. Suffering from disease of the lungs. [Colloq.]

Aix-les-Bains and Matlock, where the lung-struck world passes July and August.
Pall Mall Gazette, Oct. 13, 1882. (Encyc. Dict.) lung-tester (lung'tes″tėr), n. A bag-shaped instrument for determining expiratory power; a spirometer.

lung-woe†, n. [ME. longe-woo; < lung + woe.] Consumption; phthisis.

The longe-woo cometh ofte of yvel eire,
The stomake eke of eire is overtake.
Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 13.

lung-worm (lung'wėrm), n. A worm parasitic in the lungs.

lungwort (lung'wėrt), n. 1. A European boraginaceous plant, Pulmonaria officinalis. It is named from a supposed resemblance of its spotted leaves to the appearance of the human lungs, on account of which it was formerly used in pulmonary diseases.
2. An American plant, Mertensia Virginica, of the same family, at first referred to Pulmonaria. Pneumaria maritima is the sea-lungwort.—3. A lichen, Sticta pulmonaria, somewhat like a human lung in shape, formerly regarded as a lung-remedy: same as hazel-crottles.—Bullock's or cow's lungwort, the mullen, Verbascum Thapsus, formerly used as a remedy for lung-disease in cattle, because its leaf resembles a dewlap.—Clown's lungwort. (a) Bullock's lungwort. (b) The toothwort, Lathræa Squamaria, a reputed remedy for diseases of the lungs.—French or golden lungwort, the wall-hawkweed, Hieracium murorum.—Sea-lungwort. See def. 2.—Smooth lungwort, a plant of the genus Mertensia, as distinguished from Pulmonaria, which is rough.—Tree-lungwort, Sticta pulmonaria. See def. 3.

luniform (lū'ni-fôrm), a. [< L. luna, the moon, + forma, form.] Resembling the moon in form; especially, crescentic; lunate or lunulate: said of parts the longitudinal section of which is between crescentiform and semiglobose.

lunisolar (lū-ni-sō'lăr), a. [< L. luna, the moon, + sol, the sun: see solar.] Depending jointly on the motions or actions of the moon and the sun: as, the lunisolar cycle.—Lunisolar period, any one of the periods in the reckoning of time which depend on the relative motions of the sun and moon.—Lunisolar precession, in astron., that part of the annual precession of the equinoxes which depends on the joint action of the sun and moon.—Lunisolar year, a period of 532 years, found by multiplying the cycle of the sun (28 years) by the cycle of the moon (19 years), and characterized by the recurrence of eclipses in the same order as in the previous lunisolar period. Also called Dionysian period.

lunistice (lū'nis-tis), n. [< NL. lunistitium, < L. luna, the moon, + status, a standing, < stare, pp. status, stand: see state. Cf. solstice, armistice.] In astron., the moment of the moon's greatest northing and southing in her monthly revolution.

lunistitial (lū-ni-stish'al), a. [< lunistice (NL. lunistitium) + -al.] Pertaining to a lunistice.—Lunistitial points, the points of the moon's orbit furthest from the equinoctial.

lunitidal (lū-ni-tī'dal), a. [< L. luna, the moon, + E. tide + -al: see tidal.] Relating to that part of the tidal movement which is dependent on the moon.—Lunitidal interval, the interval between the moon's passage over the meridian and the time of high water at any place, considered solely with reference to the moon's influence. It is the "establishment" of any port, uncorrected for the half-monthly inequality due to the sun's action. The lunitidal interval thus corrected is the mean or corrected "establishment" of the port.

lunkhead (lungk'hed), n. A heavy, stupid fellow. Bartlett. [Colloq., U. S.]

lunnite (lun'īt), n. [Named after Rev. F. Lunn, who analyzed it.] A name sometimes used collectively to include the related copper phosphates dihydrite, ehlite, pseudomalachite, etc.

lunstock†, n. An obsolete form of linstock.

lunt (lunt), n. [< D. lont, a match, = G. lunte, a match, formerly a lamp-wick, = Sw. lunta = Dan. lunte, a match. Cf. link[3].] 1†. A match, torch, or port-fire anciently used for discharging cannon.—2†. The lock and appurtenances of a match-lock gun. See quotation under snapwork.—3. A lively combustion; fire and smoke in general. [Scotch and North. Eng.]

She fuff't her pipe wi' sic a lunt. Burns, Halloween.

lunt (lunt), v. i. [< lunt, n. Cf. link, v.] To emit smoke; flame; be on fire. [Scotch.]

The luntin pipe an' sneeshin mill
Are handed round wi right guid will.
Burns, The Twa Dogs.

★lunula (lū'nū-lä), n.; pl. lunulæ (-lē). [L., dim. of luna, the moon: see luna. Cf. lunule.] Something which is shaped like a little moon or narrow crescent; a lunule or lunulet.

The patrician order wore shoes of black leather (calceus patricius), ornamented with an ivory crescent, and hence called lunula. Encyc. Brit., VI. 457.

Specifically—(a) The free crescentic edge and adjoining thin part of a semilunar valve of the heart. (b) The small white semilunar mark at the base of the human fingernails. (c) A crescentic impression on some bivalve shells; a lunule. (d) A small semicircular or crescentic spot of color; a lunulet. (e) [cap.] A generic name given by Hitchcock to ichnolites of uncertain character. (f) In ★math., a lune.

lunular (lū'nū-lär), a. [< L. lunula + -ar[3].] Having a form like that of the new moon; shaped like a small crescent; lunulate.

Lunularia (lū-nū-lā'ri-ä), n. [NL. (Micheli, 1729), so called in allusion to the lunate form of the gemmæ-bearing receptacles, < L. lunula, a little moon: see lunule.] A genus of Hepaticæ or liverworts, typical of the tribe Lunularieæ. The thallus is oblong, with rounded lobes, distinctly areolate and porose. The carpocephalum is cruciately divided into one to six, usually four, horizontal segments, which are tubular and one-fruited; the capsule is exserted on a long ped cel, and is four- to eight-valved. The only species, L. cruciata, is introduced into greenhouses.

Lunularieæ (lū'nū-lā-rī'ē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Lunularia + -eæ.] A former tribe of Hepaticæ or liverworts, established by Nees von Esenbeck, 1833–8, and typified by the genus Lunularia.

lunulate (lū'nū-lāt), a. [< NL. lunulatus, < L. lunula, a little moon, new moon: see lunule.] 1. Shaped like a new moon; narrowly crescent-ed.—2. In zoöl., having one or several small crescentic markings. P. L. Sclater.

lunulated (lū'nū-lā-ted), a. Same as lunulate.

lunule (lū'nūl), n. [< L. lunula, a little moon, ★dim. of luna, the moon: see luna, lune[1].] Something in the shape of a little moon or crescent. (a) In conch., the lunula, a crescentic impression on each valve of many bivalve shells, in front of the umbo, forming with its fellow an oval or somewhat cordate figure; it is conspicuous in the Veneridæ and many related forms. (b) In entom., a lunulate mark or line on the center of the lower wing, found in many moths. (c) In geom., a lune. See lune[1], 2. (d) A crescent-shaped mark at the root of a nail.—Frontal lunule, in entom., a curved space immediately above the antennæ, characteristic of the flies of the suborder Cyclorhapha, wanting in the Orthorhapha. It is related to the bladdery inflation of the front by means of which these flies force open the larval envelop.

lunulet (lū'nū-let), n. [< lunule + -et.] In entom., a small crescent-shaped spot or mark on a surface.

lunulite (lū'nū-līt), n. [< NL. Lunulites, q. v.] A fossil bryozoan of the genus Lunulites.

Lunulites (lū-nū-lī'tēz), n. [NL., < L. lunula, a little moon: see lunule.] A genus of fossil Bryozoa. Species range from the Upper Cretaceous to the Tertiary.

luny (lū'ni), a. [Abbr. from lunatic, and often spelled loony, with ref. to loon[1]. Cf. lune[1], 3.] Lunatic; crazy; silly and erratic: usually applied to partial or temporary aberration, and to persons afflicted with partial lunacy. Used also as a noun. [Colloq.]

His fits [epileptic] were nocturnal, and he had frequent "luny spells," as he called them.
E. C. Mann, Psychol. Med., p. 424.

Lupa (lū'pä), n. [NL. (Leach, 1814), < L. lupa, a she-wolf, fem. of lupus, a wolf: see Lupus[1].] A genus of crabs of the family Portunidæ. The common edible crab of the United States has been called L. diacantha; it is now known as Callinectes hastatus.

Lupercal (lū'pėr-kal), a. and n. [< L. Lupercalis, pertaining to Lupercus (neut. pl. Lupercalia, the feast of Lupercus; neut. sing. as noun Lupercal, a grotto on the Palatine hill sacred to Lupercus) or Inuus, regarded, under the name Lupercus, as a protecting deity of shepherds, as 'he who wards off the wolves,' < lupus, a wolf, + arcere, ward off, keep off.] I. a. Pertaining to Lupercus or to the Lupercalia.

II.† n. Same as Lupercalia. [An erroneous use.]

You all did see that on the Lupercal
I thrice presented him a kingly crown,
Which he did thrice refuse.
Shak., J. C., iii. 2, 100.

Lupercalia (lū-pėr-kā'li-ä), n. pl. [L.: see Lupercal.] One of the most ancient of Roman festivals, celebrated every year in the middle of February. The origin of the festival is older than the legend of Romulus and the wolf, with which, as with the Greek cult of Pan, it was sought later to connect it. It was originally a local purification ceremony of the Palatine city, in which human victims were sacrificed in the Lupercal cave near the Porta Romana, after having been conducted around the walls. In historic times the victims were goats and a dog, and the celebrants ran around the old line of the Palatine walls, striking all whom they met with thongs cut from the skins of the slaughtered animals. These blows were reputed to preserve women from sterility. The divinity of the Lupercalia was the old Etrurian god Inuus, akin to Mars.

Lupercalian (lū-pėr-kā'li-an), a. [< Lupercalia + -an.] Of or pertaining to the ancient Roman festival of the Lupercalia.

Lupinæ (lū-pī'nē), n. pl. [NL., < Lupus[1] + -inæ.] A subfamily of Canidæ, distinguished from Vulpinæ or foxes; wolves. It corresponds to Caninæ in a narrow sense.

lupinaster (lū-pin-as'tėr), n. The bastard lupine, Trifolium Lupinaster, a Siberian plant with purple or white flowers, very large for the genus, and lupine-like leaves. The species has sometimes been regarded as forming a separate genus (Lupinaster).

lupine[1] (lū'pin or -pīn), a. [= F. lupin = Sp. Pg. It. lupino, < L. lupinus, belonging to a wolf, < lupus, a wolf: see Lupus[1]. Cf. lupine[2], n.] 1. Like a wolf; wolfish; ravenous.—2. In zoöl., pertaining to the series or group of canine animals which contains the wolves, jackals, and dogs, as distinguished from the foxes; thoöid. In lupine animals the skull has frontal sinuses which affect the profile of the head and the contour of the cranial cavity, and the pupil of the eye is usually round. See vulpine, ★alopecoid, and thoöid.

lupine[2] (lū'pin), n. [= D. lupijn = G. lupine, < F. lupin = Sp. It. lupino = Russ. lupinŭ, < L. lupinus, lupinum, a lupine, orig. masc. and neut. respectively of lupinus, belonging to a wolf: see lupine[1], a. The reason of the name is unknown.] A plant of the genus Lupinus. The white lupine, L. albus, of southern Europe and the Orient, has been cultivated from antiquity. Its seeds serve as a pulse, and its herbage is valuable for fodder and green manure. In Portugal it is used, under the name of tramoso, to choke out obstinate weeds. The scented yellow lupine, L. luteus, of the Mediterranean region, is used in central Europe to improve sandy soils. Various other species have similar uses, among them the Egyptian L. Termis, resembling L. albus, and L. varius, with flowers chiefly blue. The tree-lupine, L. arboreus, of Pacific North America, has been used with success to bind shifting sand. It is a shrub growing 10 feet high, and sending its roots more than 20 feet deep. The ornamental lupines are extremely numerous. L. albus, L. luteus, and L. varius, mentioned above, were formerly common in gardens, but have been somewhat superseded by species from western America. Among these are the tree-lupine and the many-leafed lupine (L. polyphyllus), also L. subcarnosus of North America. The wild lupine of the eastern United States is L. perennis, a plant with a long showy raceme of purple flowers, common in sandy soil.—Bastard lupine. See lupinaster.

Flowering Plant of Lupine (Lupinus perennis). a, flower; b, fruit, showing the dehiscence.

lupinin (lū'pi-nin), n. [< Lupinus + -in[2].] A bitter glucoside ($C_{29}H_{32}O_{16}+7H_2O$) extracted from the leaves of Lupinus albus and L. luteus.

Lupinus (lū-pī'nus), n. [NL. (Linnæus, 1753), < lupus, a wolf, in allusion to its destroying or exhausting land.] A large genus of leguminous plants of the family Fabaceæ and the tribe Genisteæ. It is characterized by having the leaves simple or digitately many-foliate; the divisions of the calyx longer than the tube; the wings of the corolla often united at the apex, the keel beaked; and a compressed coriaceous or fleshy legume. More than 100 species have been described; they occur in North and South America, the Mediterranean region, and tropical Africa, being especially abundant on the western coast of America, about 70 species having been described from that region. They are herbs or undershrubs with terminal or axillary racemes of showy blue or purple flowers, rarely yellow or white, and often fragrant. Numerous species are cultivated for their beauty and for use. See lupine[2]. ★ lupous (lū'pus), a. [< L. lupus, a wolf (see Lupus[1]), + -ous.] Wolfish; like a wolf. [Rare.]

lupulinous (lū-pū-lī'nus), a. [< lupuline + -ous.] Same as lupuline.

lupulite (lū'pū-līt), n. [< NL. lupulus, hop (see lupulin), + -ite[2].] Same as lupulin, 1.

lupulus (lū'pū-lus), n. [NL. (Tournefort), a fish, a hook, lit. the hop-plant, etc., also a skin-disease; dim. of L. lupus, the hop-plant, a particular use of lupus, a wolf (so called perhaps because it 'strangles' the shrubbery upon which it may climb).] The hop-plant, Humulus Lupulus: still occasionally used. ★

Lupus[1] (lū'pus), n. [NL., < L. lupus, a wolf, = Gr. λύκος = Goth. wulfs, etc., = E. wolf: see wolf.] 1. (a) A genus of Canidæ, comprising the wolves, but having no characters by which it can be distinguished from Canis. In this nomenclature the common gray wolf of North America is called Lupus occidentalis. (b) [l. c.] The specific designation of the common wolf, Canis lupus.—2. An ancient southern constellation, the Wolf, representing a beast held by the hand of the Centaur. It has two stars of the third magnitude.—3. [l. c.] In pathol.: (a) Lupus vulgaris, a tuberculosis of the skin, presenting clinically reddish-brown patches made up of papules, tubercles, and flat infiltrations. These patches proceed to ulceration and subsequent cicatrization. They occur mostly on the face, but may occur on mucous surfaces as well as on the skin of the extremities, or even (rarely) of the trunk. Anatomically there is tubercular tissue containing tubercle-bacilli. (b) Lupus erythematosus, a chronic dermatitis, beginning in one or more papules which grow so as to cover a large patch. The color is pinkish to violaceous, and the surface is scaly. It does not ulcerate, but heals with central cicatrization and atrophy. It occurs most frequently on the face, but also elsewhere. It is more frequent in women than in men.—Lupus metallorum, the alchemical name of stibnite, or sulphid of antimony.

lute[1] (lūt), n. [< ME. lute (= D. luit = MLG. lūte = MHG. lūte, G. laute = Sw. luta = Dan. luth), < OF. lut, leut, F. luth = It. liuto, leuto, liudo (> NGr. λαούτον; ML. lutana), < Sp laúd, orig. alaúd* = Pg. alaude, a lute, < Ar. al'ūd, a lute, < al, the, + 'ūd, a lute, harp, lit. wood, timber, whence also the senses 'stick,' 'staff,' etc.] A mediæval musical instrument, the type of the class which has strings stretched over a resonant body and a long fretted neck, and which is played by twanging or snapping the strings with the fingers. The back of the body was either flat, as in the modern guitar, or, more often, rounded or pear-shaped, like that of a mandolin. The front of the body, or belly, had one or more sound-holes. The strings were usually of catgut, arranged in pairs of unisons, and divided into two groups, one of which lay over the finger-board, so as to be stopped upon the frets, while the other lay beside the finger-board, so as to be played unstopped for the bass. The number of strings varied considerably, as did the tuning or accordatura, a common tuning for the six upper pairs of strings was and for the bass strings

The frets were arranged so as to yield semitones. The tone was sweet, but light and incapable of much variation. The construction of the instrument was not strong enough to make the tuning sure or stable. In the effort to obtain varied and striking effects, many modifications were attempted, such as the archlute, the chitarrone, the harplute, and the theorbo, in which the number of strings was increased, the bass strings attached to a second neck above the first one, or metal strings introduced. A group or family of lutes of different sizes was also elaborated for concerted music; but the mechanical and acoustical feebleness of the type prevented the results from being permanently satisfactory. Great care was often expended, however, upon the wood and the decoration of lutes, so that many of them were very beautiful in appearance. Music for the lute was written in a peculiar system of letters or numerals called tablature. Historically the lute is connected with the Egyptian nefer, and perhaps with the Hebrew nebel, and it continued in use in Europe till about 1750; its existing relatives are the guitar, the mandolin, and the banjo.

Lute.

Lutheran (lū′thėr-an), a. and n. [= Sp. It. Luterano = Pg. Lutherano (cf. F. Luthérien, G. Lutheranisch, etc.), < NL. Lutheranus, of Luther, < Lutherus, G. Luther, Luther.] I. a. Of or pertaining to Martin Luther, the reformer (1483–1546), or to the Evangelical Protestant Church of Germany which bears his name, or to the doctrines taught by Luther or held by the Evangelical Lutheran Church.—Lutheran Bible. See Bible, 1.—Lutheran Church, the Protestant Church of Germany, established by Martin Luther and other reformers in the sixteenth century. It was named the Evangelical Church by Luther, to designate it as the ancient Christian church reformed and reorganized according to the Gospel. Protestants were at first called Lutherans in reproach by the opponents of the Reformation, and the name was generally accepted, notwithstanding the protestations of Luther against it. The church is historically known as the Evangelical Lutheran Church, in distinction from the Roman Catholic Church and from the Reformed or Calvinistic Church and other Protestant churches. The dogmatic symbols of the Lutheran Church are nine in number. Three of them are those of the early Christian church, namely the Apostle's Creed, the Nicene Creed, and the Athanasian Creed. The six others are the products of the Reformation. These are the Augsburg Confession (1530), the Apology of the Augsburg Confession (1530), the Schmalkald Articles (1537), the two Catechisms of Luther (1529), and the Formula of Concord (1577). These Confessions, together with the ecumenical creeds above mentioned, form the Book of Concord of 1580, and constitute the symbolical books of the Lutheran Church. The Augsburg Confession, however, is the only symbol which has been universally adopted by all branches of the Lutheran Church, some of which accept no other as binding. The creed of the church includes the doctrines of justification by faith alone, universal depravity, the vicarious atonement, regeneration, progressive sanctification, a true sacramental but not a material presence of Christ in the Lord's Supper, and the use of both the Bible and the sacraments as means of grace. In its manner of worship the Lutheran Church is liturgical, but it recognizes no organized hierarchy, with different ranks of ministry, jure divino. In the established churches of Denmark, Norway, and Sweden, which are Lutheran in doctrine, there are bishops or superintendents (see episcopacy), and in Sweden there is an archbishop; but their authority is derived from the bodies which appoint them, and their powers are very limited. Where Lutheranism is the established religion the sovereign is recognized as the head of the church, which is governed by consistories appointed by the government and composed of both clergymen and laymen. Throughout most of Germany (in Prussia and in some other countries) the Protestant state establishment is the United Evangelical Church, a union of former Lutheran and Reformed (Calvinist) churches, and dissenting Lutherans are commonly called Old Lutherans. In the United States the Lutheran Church at present consists of five general independent organizations. Each of these is governed by a general representative body, named respectively the General Synod, the General Council, the United Synod of the South, the Synodical Conference (Missouri Lutherans), and the United Norwegian. These general bodies consist of both clerical and lay delegates, elected by the district synods of which they are composed. There are also nineteen independent Lutheran synods in the United States.

II. n. A disciple or follower of Luther; one who adheres to the doctrines of Luther; a member of the Lutheran Church.

Middleton, Father Hubbard's Tales.

luxuret, n. [ME., < OF. luxure, < L. luxuria, luxury: see luxury.] Luxury.

He the forfete of luxure Shall tempre. Gower, Conf. Amant., vii.

luxuriance (lug-zū′ri-ans), n. [< F. luxuriance; as luxurian(t) + -ce.] The state of being luxuriant; abundant or excessive growth or quantity; strong, vigorous growth; exuberance.

The whole leafy forest stands display'd
In full luxuriance to the sighing gales.
Thomson, Spring, l. 93.

luxuriancy (lug-zū′ri-an-si), n. [As luxuriance: see -cy.] Same as luxuriance.

luxuriant (lug-zū′ri-ant), a. [= F. luxuriant = Sp. lujuriante = Pg. luxuriante = It. lussuriante, < L. luxurian(t-)s, ppr. of luxuriare, be rank or luxuriant: see luxuriate.] 1. Exuberant in growth; abundant: as, luxuriant foliage.

See vines luxuriant verdur'd leaves display,
Supporting tendrils curling all the way.
Parnell, Gift of Poetry.

2. Exuberant in quantity; superfluous in abundance.

Prune the luxuriant, the uncouth refine,
But show no mercy to an empty line.
Pope, Imit. of Horace, II. ii. 174.

English poetry . . . is nothing at present but a combination of luxuriant images. Goldsmith, Vicar, viii.

3. Supplied in great abundance; replete.

To the north-east spreads St. Leonard's Forest, luxuriant with beech and birch and pine, sinking and rising to woody dingles and slopes. E. Dowden, Shelley, I. 6.

4. In bot., having the floral envelop so multiplied as to destroy the essential parts: said of a flower: opposed to mutilated. =Syn. 1 and 2. Luxurious, Luxuriant. See luxurious.

luxuriantly (lūg-zū'ri-ant-li), adv. In a luxuriant manner or degree; exuberantly.

luxuriate (lūg-zū'ri-āt), v. i.; pret. and pp. luxuriated, ppr. luxuriating. [< L. luxuriatus, pp. of luxuriare (> It. lussuriare = Sp. lujuriar = Pg. luxuriar = OF. luxurier), be rank or luxurious, indulge in luxury, < luxuria, luxury: see luxury.] 1. To grow exuberantly or in superfluous abundance.—2. To feed or live luxuriously: as, the herds luxuriate in the pastures. —3. Figuratively, to indulge without stint; revel in luxury or abundance; take delight: as, to luxuriate in description.

During the whole time of their being together, they luxuriate in telling one another their minds on whatever subject turns up. T. Hughes, Tom Brown at Rugby, i. 1.

luxuriation (lug-zū-ri-ā'shon), n. [< luxuriate + -ion.] The act of luxuriating; the process of growing exuberantly.

luxuriety† (luk-ṣū-rī'e-ti), n. [< luxuri(ous) + -ety.] Same as luxuriance. [Rare.]

One may observe a kind of luxuriety in the description which the holy historian gives of the transport of the men of Judah upon this occasion. Sterne, Works, IV. xi.

luxurious (lug-zū'ri-us), a. [< F. luxurieux = Pr. luxurios = Sp. lujurioso = Pg. luxurioso = It. lussurioso, < L. luxuriosus, rank, luxuriant, profuse, excessive, immoderate, < luxuria, rankness, luxury: see luxury.] 1. Luxuriant; exuberant.

The work under our labour grows,
Luxurious by restraint: what we by day
Lop overgrown, or prune, or prop, or bind,
One night or two with wanton growth derides.
Milton, P. L., ix. 209.

2. Characterized by indulgence in luxury; given to luxury; voluptuous; indulging freely or excessively in material pleasures or objects of desire: as, a luxurious life; luxurious cities.

All these the Parthian . . . holds,
From the luxurious kings of Antioch won.
Milton, P. R., iii. 297.

Victims of luxurious ease. Cowper, Task, i. 625.

3. Ministering to luxury; contributing to free or extravagant indulgence.

Those whom last thou saw'st
In triumph and luxurious wealth.
Milton, P. L., xi. 788.

4. Abounding in that which gratifies the senses; exuberant in means of indulgence or enjoyment; affording abundant material pleasure.

Venus . . . rose not now, as of old, in exposed and luxurious loveliness. Macaulay, Petrarch.

Soothed by the sweet luxurious summer time,
And by the cadence of that ancient rhyme.
William Morris, Earthly Paradise, I. 352.

5†. Characterized by lust; libidinous.

She knows the heat of a luxurious bed.
Shak., Much Ado, iv. 1. 42.

=Syn. 2. Epicurean, self-indulgent, sensual.—2-4. Luxurious. Luxuriant. These words are now never synonymous. Luxurious means given to luxury or characterized by luxury: as, luxurious people; a luxurious life; a luxurious table. Luxuriant means exuberant in growth: as, the luxuriant vegetation of the tropics; by figure, a luxuriant style in composition. Luxurious implies blame, except where it is used by hyperbole for that which is exceedingly comfortable, etc.: as, a luxurious bed. Luxuriant does not come enough into the field of the moral for either praise or blame.

luxuriously (lug-zū'ri-us-li), adv. In a luxurious manner; deliciously; voluptuously.

luxuriousness (lug-zū'ri-us-nes), n. The state or quality of being luxurious.

luxurist† (luk'ṣū-rist), n. [< luxury + -ist.] One who is given to luxury. Temple.

luxury (luk'ṣū-ri), n.; pl. luxuries (-riz). [< ME. luxurie (also luxure, q. v.), < OF. luxurie, luxure, F. luxure = Pr. luxuria = Sp. lujuria = Pg. luxuria = It. lussuria, < L. luxuria, rankness, luxuriance (of vegetation), friskiness, wantonness (of animals), profuse or extravagant living, < luxus, extravagance, luxury: see *lux*2.] 1†. Luxuriance; exuberance of growth.—2. A free or extravagant indulgence in pleasure, as of the table; voluptuousness in the gratification of any appetite; also, the free expenditure of wealth for the gratification of one's own desires, as in costly dress and equipage.

Luxury does not consist in the innocent enjoyment of any of the good things which God has created to be received with thankfulness, but in the wasteful abuse of them to vicious purposes, in ways inconsistent with sobriety, justice, or charity. Clarke, Works, II. cxiv.

First Necessity invented stools,
Convenience next suggested elbow chairs,
And Luxury th' accomplish'd Sofa last.
Cowper, Task, i. 88.

3. That which is delightful to the senses, the feelings, etc.; especially, that which gratifies a nice and fastidious appetite or taste; a dainty: as, a house filled with luxuries; the luxuries of the table.

Rhyme, that luxury of recurrent sound. Prof. Blackie.

4. Exuberant enjoyment; complete gratification or satisfaction, either physical or intellectual.

Learn the luxury of doing good.
Goldsmith, Traveller, l. 22.

The luxury of returning to bread again can hardly be imagined by those who have never been deprived of it.
Lady Holland, Sydney Smith, vii.

5†. Lust; lewd desire; lasciviousness; indulgence in lust.

Fie on sinful fantasy!
Fie on lust and luxury!
Shak., M. W. of W., v. 5 (song).

I fear no strumpet's drugs, nor ruffian's stab,
Should I detect their hateful luxuries.
B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour, Ind.

=Syn. 2 and 4. Epicurism, effeminacy, sensuality, delicacy, gratification, pleasure, enjoyment, delight. See luxurious.

luz (luz), n. [Heb.] A bone in the human body which the Rabbinical writers affirmed to be indestructible, and which is variously said to have been one of the lumbar vertebræ, the sacrum, the coccyx, a sesamoid bone of the great toe, or one of the triquetrous or Wormian bones of the cranium. It is probable that this superstition is the origin of the technical name of the sacrum or "sacred" bone.

luzern†, luzerne†, n. Same as *lucern*2.

luzonite (lū'zon-īt), n. [< Luzon (see def.) + ★*-ite*2.] A mineral closely related to enargite, found in the island of Luzon in the Philippines.

Luzula (lū'zū-lä), n. [NL., < OIt. luzziola, lucciola, a glow-worm (cf. It. lucciola, a firefly, lucciolato, a glow-worm): see Luciola.] A name given by de Candolle in 1805 to Juncoides, a genus of monocotyledonous plants of the Juncaceæ, or rush family. It is characterized by the stems growing in tufts; linear, grass-like, radical leaves, or sometimes with a few on the stem; a 1-celled ovary, with 3 erect ovules in the center; and a style which is 3-cleft at the apex. There are about 40 species, growing everywhere in temperate regions, and in the mountainous parts of the tropics. See wood-rush.

Luzuriaga (lū-zū-ri-ā'gä), n. [NL., named after D. Ign. de Luzuriago, a Spanish botanist.] A name given by Ruiz and Pavon in 1802 to Enargea, a genus of liliaceous plants, characterized by sessile alternate leaves with numerous fine nerves, and flowers of medium size, usually solitary in the axils, the segments of the perianth distinct and spreading, and a 3-celled ovary with light-colored seeds. The stems are woody and branching, and the flowers white on delicate pedicels, at length producing a berry-like fruit. There are 3 species, of which 2 are Chilean, and the third grows in Magellan's Land and New Zealand.

Luzuriageæ (lū-zū-ri-ā'jē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Bentham and Hooker, 1883), < Luzuriaga + -eæ.] A former tribe of liliaceous plants, based on Luzuriaga of Ruiz and Pavon, which is preoccupied by Enargea of Banks. The tribe consisted of 7 genera, of which one has been removed by Engler, who otherwise virtually retains it as a natural group. These plants have an erect, branching, woody stem, sometimes climbing above; flowers in the axils of the leaves, in fasciculate cymes, or solitary at the tips of the branches. They are exclusively confined to the southern hemisphere.

lyt†, v. i. An obsolete form of *lie*1.

-ly1. [< ME. -ly, -li, -lich, -liche, earliest ME. -lic, < AS. -līc = OS. -līk = OFries. -līk = MD. D. lijk = MLG. -līk, -lich = OHG. -līh, MHG. -līch, -līch, G. -lich = Icel. -līkr, -legr = Dan. -lig = Sw. lik = Goth. -leiks; a common Teut. adj. suffix, 'like,' 'having the form of,' orig. an independent word, namely AS. līc, etc., body, form: see *like*1. Cf. *like*2, adj., as used in composition, of similar effect, but etymologically different, manly, e. g., being ult. < AS. manlīc* (in adv. manlīce), < mann, man, + līc, body, form, while manlike (with similar compounds) is not found in AS., but corresponds to AS. mann, man, + gelīc, like, < līc, body: see *like*1, *like*2.] A common adjective suffix, forming, from nouns, adjectives signifying 'of the form or nature of' or 'like' the thing denoted by the noun: as in manly, womanly, godly, lordly, princely, of the nature of, like, or suited to a man, woman, etc.; bodily, earthly, daily, weekly, monthly, yearly, etc., belonging to or being of the body, the earth, a day, etc.; lovely, heartly (obs.), etc. Such adjectives, implying 'like,' are often accompanied by more definite adjectives in -like: as, manlike, womanlike, etc. The suffix is also used with some adjectives, as goodly, lowly, etc., and with some verbs, as comely, seemly, etc. They are usually accompanied by adverbs now of the same form. See *-ly*2.

-ly2. [< ME. -ly, -li, -lich, -liche, < AS. -līce = OS. -līko = OFries. -līke, -like = MD. D. -lijk = MLG. -līke, -līche = OHG. -līhho, MHG. -liche, G. -lich = Icel. -lika, -liga = Sw. -ligen = Dan. -ligt = Goth. -leiko; a common Teut. adverbial suffix, meaning 'in a manner' indicated by the adj. in -līc (*-ly*1) from which the adverb is derived, being the instr. case of the adj.; e. g., AS. manlīce, in a manly manner, instr. case of manlīc*, manly. Thus, while the adj. suffix *-ly*1 and the adverb suffix *-ly*2 are now identical in form, they are orig. distinct, the adverb suffix being derived, with a case-ending now lost, from the adj. suffix.] A common adverbial suffix, forming from adjectives adverbs signifying 'in a manner' denoted by the adjective: as, quickly, slowly, coldly, hotly, etc., loudly, harshly, etc. It is the most common adverbial suffix. In adverbs from nouns, as manly, womanly, etc., the adverb has the same form as the adjective in *-ly*1, from which it is derived. The suffix is sometimes used with adjectives in *-ly*1, as in seemlily, surlily, godlily, etc. Its use with primary adjectives, with no current adjective in -ly intervening (quickly, etc.), is more recent, but is now the prevalent one.

lyam†, n. See *lime*4.

lyart†, a. and n. See *liard*1.

Lycæna (lī-sē'nä), n. [NL., < Gr. λύκαινα, a she-wolf, fem. of λύκος = L. lupus, a wolf, = E. wolf, q. v.] The typical genus of Lycænidæ. There are upward of 300 species, distributed all over the world. They are small, delicate creatures, some of much beauty of form and coloring, known as coppers and blues.

Lycænidæ (lī-sen'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Lycæna + -idæ.] A family of butterflies, represented by such genera as Lycæna, Chrysophanus, and Thecla. They are generally of small size, delicate form, and very beautiful colors. Some are known as blues or coppers, and others as hairstreaks. The technical characters are: minute tarsal claws, fore legs ambulatorial, hind tibiæ with one pair of spurs, antennæ scarcely hooked at the tip, and the last joint of the palpi small and naked. The caterpillars have minute feet and retractile head, and resemble wood-lice. The chrysalis is short, obtuse at each end, girt about the middle, and attached by the tail. There are about 40 genera and upward of 1,200 species.

Lycalopex (lī-ka-lō'peks), n. [NL., < Gr. λύκος, a wolf, + ἀλώπηξ, a fox: see alopecia.] A genus of Canidæ established by Burmeister, containing most of the neotropical canines; the South American fox-wolves. These animals have the structural characters of dogs and wolves, but their tails are long and bushy, and they otherwise resemble foxes in general appearance. Several species are described, as L. antarcticus, L. azaræ, L. cancrivorus, etc. The last-named is the maikong or crab-eating fox-wolf.

lycanthrope (lī-kan'thrōp), n. [< ML. lycanthropus, lycanthropos, < Gr. λυκάνθρωπος, a 'wolf-man,' or man-wolf, were-wolf, < λύκος, a wolf, + ἄνθρωπος, a man. Cf. were-wolf.] 1. A man superstitiously supposed to be possessed of the power of transforming himself at pleasure into a wolf, and to be endowed while in that shape with its savage propensities; a were-wolf.

A French judge named Boguet, at the end of the sixteenth century, devoted himself especially to the subject [the assuming of animal forms], burnt multitudes of lycanthropes, wrote a book about them, and drew up a code in which he permitted ordinary witches to be strangled before they were burnt, but excepted lycanthropes, who were to be burned alive. Lecky, Rationalism, I. 97.

2. A person affected with lycanthropy; one who imagines himself to be a wolf, and acts in conformity with his delusion.

lycanthropi, n. Plural of lycanthropus.

lycanthropia (lī-kan-thrō'pi-ä), n. [ML.: see lycanthrop-y.] Same as lycanthropy.

This kind is called Lycanthropia, sir; when men conceive themselves wolves. Ford, Lover's Melancholy, iii. 3.

lycanthropic (lī-kan-throp'ik), a. [< lycanthrop-y + -ic.] Of or pertaining to lycanthropy; characteristic of lycanthropy.

In a fit of lycanthropic madness, she came upon two children. S. Baring-Gould, Were-wolves, vi.

lycanthropist (lī-kan'thrō-pist), n. [< lycanthrop-y + -ist.] Same as lycanthrope.

In mediæval times . . . persons named Garnier or Grenier were generally assumed to be lycanthropists.
Encyc. Brit., XV. 91.

lycanthropous (lī-kan'thrō-pus), a. [< lycanthrop-y + -ous.] Relating or pertaining to lycanthropy.

lycanthropus (lī-kan-thrō'pus), n.; pl. lycanthropi (-pī). [ML., also lycanthropos: see lycanthrope.] Same as lycanthrope.

The swift lycanthropi that walks the round,
We'll tear their wolvish skins, and save the sheep.
Middleton and Rowley, Changeling, iii. 3.

lycanthropy (lī-kan'thrō-pi), n. [< ML. lycanthropia, < Gr. λυκανθρωπία, a madness in which one imagines himself a wolf, < λυκάνθρωπος, a man-wolf: see lycanthrope.] 1. The supposed power of certain human beings to change themselves or others temporarily or permanently into wolves or other savage animals. See werewolf.—2. The belief that certain persons change themselves into wolves or other wild beasts. This belief is common among savage races, and still lingers among the ignorant of some civilized peoples. 3. A kind of erratic melancholy or madness, in which the patient supposes himself to be a wolf. See lycanthrope.

Lycaon[1] (lī-kā'on), n. [NL., < L. Lycaon, < Gr. Λυκάων, a mythical king of Arcadia, father of Callisto, who was transferred to the sky as the constellation of the Bear.] A name of the constellation Boötes (which see).

Lycaon[2] (lī-kā'on), n. [NL., < L. lycaon, < Gr. λυκάων, an animal of the wolf kind, < λύκος = L. lupus, a wolf: see Lupus.] A genus of canine quadrupeds of the family Canidæ, having but four toes on the fore feet, instead of five as in the rest of the Canidæ, resembling the hyenas in this respect; the South African hunting-dogs, hyena-dogs, or painted hyenas. L. pictus or venaticus is a fierce animal as large as a mastiff, with oval erect ears, bushy tail, and long limbs, and spotted with white, black, and yellow in an irregular manner. It hunts its prey in packs.

Lycaste (lī-kas'tē), n. [NL. (Lindley, 1842), < Lycaste, < Gr. Λυκάστη, a fem. name.] A genus of orchidaceous plants of the tribe Vandeæ and the subtribe Cyrtopodicæ. It is characterized by having erect, partially spreading sepals, and the lateral lobes of the lip broad or sickle-shaped, attached to the base or apex of the claw, the middle one small or elongated, often ciliate. The column is rather long, and the stalks of the pollen-masses are long and linear. They are epiphytes with the short few-leafed stems sheathing at the base, forming a fleshy pseudobulb from which rise the erect scapes, bearing one, rarely two or three, large and showy flowers. There are about 30 species, natives of tropical America, and ranging from Peru to Mexico and the West Indies; many are very beautiful, and are common in cultivation.

lyceum (li-sē'um), n. [= F. lycée = Sp. liceo = Pg. lyceo = It. liceo, < L. lycēum, lycīum, < Gr. Λύκειον, the Lyceum: so named from the neighboring temple of Apollo, < Λύκειος, an epithet of Apollo, either as the 'wolf-slayer,' < λύκος, a wolf; or as the 'Lycian god,' < Λύκιος, Lycian, < Λυκία, Lycia; or as the 'god of light,' < λύκη*, light; cf. λευκός, light, white, L. lux, light: see light[1].] 1. [cap.] An ancient public gymnasium with covered walks outside of Athens, near the river Ilissus, where Aristotle taught philosophy; hence, the Peripatetic school of philosophy. See Aristotelian.—2. A school for higher education preparatory to a university course. Compare college, 2 (f).

There are two lyceums for boys and girls, a realschule, a military school for cadets, a theological seminary, and two girls' colleges. Encyc. Brit., XIX. 410.

3. A public building or hall appropriated to instruction by lectures or disquisitions.—4. An association for literary improvement.

lycht, lyche[1]†, n. Variants of like[1].

lyche[2]†, a. and adv. An obsolete assibilated form of like[2].

lych-gate (lich'gāt), n. An archaic spelling of lich-gate.

lychnapsia (lik-nap'si-ą), n. [< Gr. λυχναψία, lamplighting, < λυχνάπτης, a lamplighter, < λύχνος, a lamp, + ἅπτειν, touch.] In the Gr. Ch., a series of seven prayers for pardon and protection during the night, forming part of the office called lychnic.

The Priest, standing before the holy doors, saith the lychnapsia. J. M. Neale, Eastern Church, i. 896.

lychnic (lik'nik), n. [< LGr. λυχνικόν, the time of lamplighting, < Gr. λύχνος, lamp: see light[1].] In the Gr. Ch., an office, consisting of psalms and prayers, accompanying the lighting of the lamps or candles, originally introductory to, but now incorporated in, vespers on occasion of a vigil.

lychnides, n. Plural of lychnis, 1.

lychnidiate (lik-nid'i-āt), a. [< lychnis (lychnid-) + -i- + -ate[1].] In entom., giving out light; phosphorescent: formerly used of the head of the lantern-fly and certain allied insects, from the erroneous supposition that this is luminous at night.

lychnis (lik'nis), n. [L. lychnis, a rose of a bright-red color, also a gem, < Gr. λυχνίς, a plant with a bright-scarlet flower; related to λύχνος, a lamp.] 1. Pl. lychnides (-ni-dēz). A ruby, sapphire, or carbuncle.—2. [cap.] [NL.] A genus of caryophyllaceous plants, type of the tribe Lychnideæ. They are characterized by a 10-nerved calyx, or rarely one with many parallel nerves, and commonly 3 styles and a 3- or 6-valved capsule. They are usually erect herbs with opposite leaves and terminal cymes of showy flowers. About 35 species are recognized, natives mainly of the warm and temperate regions of the northern hemisphere. The names campion and lamplower are common to all plants of this genus. Several species are pretty wild flowers of the old world, and several are common garden flowers. L. Chalcedonica, the scarlet lychnis, is perhaps the best known; it is a rather coarse plant with dense fascicles of deep-scarlet flowers, also called Jerusalem or Maltese cross, etc., and in the United States sometimes sweet-william. Another garden species is L. Coronaria, the rose-campion or mullen-pink. Viscaria alpina, sometimes referred here, shares with plants of the genus Silene the name of catchfly. L. Flos-cuculi, the cuckoo-flower, crow-flower, or ragged-robin, with dissected petals, common in Europe, is also cultivated, at least in double forms. L. alba, with white flowers opening in the evening, has been introduced from Europe into the United States, as has also Agrostemma Githago, the corn-cockle, referred to this genus by some authors; the latter is common in grain-fields. L. dioica, the red campion, has also been introduced into the eastern and central United States. See campion. 3. A plant of the genus Lychnis, especially L. Chalcedonica.

lychnites (lik-nī'tēz), n. [L., < Gr. λυχνίτης (sc. λίθος), Parian marble (see def.), < λύχνος, a lamp: see lychnic: so called, according to a notion ascribed by Pliny to Varro, because it was quarried (underground) by lamplight.] Parian marble: so called by Pliny. What rock or mineral was really meant by Pliny is not known, and there have been various theories in regard to it. Some think that selenite was the mineral intended; others that the name had reference to the brilliancy of the marble.

Lychnophora (lik-nof'ō-rą), n. [NL. (Martius, 1822), < Gr. λύχνος, a lamp, + φορός, bearing.] A genus of Brazilian shrubs belonging to the family Asteraceæ and the tribe Vernonieæ, and type of the subtribe Lychnophoreæ, characterized by having the heads aggregated into compound terminal clusters on a common fleshy receptacle, and the pappus with two rows of chaff, the outer short and persistent, the inner narrow, partially twisted, and caducous. The genus contains 17 species of branching shrubs, with a resinous wood, and alternate entire leaves with revolute margins, the glomerule of heads sessile at the tips of the branches.

Lychnophoreæ (lik-nō-fō'rē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Bentham and Hooker, 1873), < Lychnophora + -eæ.] A subtribe of composite plants under the tribe Vernonieæ, characterized by having the one- or few-flowered heads aggregated to form a dense cluster, and the pappus chaffy, either single or double, or rarely bristly. It includes 12 genera, of which the type is Lychnophora, and 61 species, chiefly Brazilian. Called Lychnophorinæ in the system of Engler and Prantl.

lychnoscope (lik'nō-skōp), n. [< Gr. λύχνος, a lamp, a light, + σκοπεῖν, view.] In arch., a small opening like a window, usually placed in the south chancel-wall of a church, and lower than the other windows, for what purpose is not strictly known. Also called low side window. Gwilt. "This is generally a small window in a church under a larger one. . . . The term itself is (like hagioscope) only of this [19th] century, and may have been coined on the erroneous idea that the windows were constructed that lepers (or anchorets) might behold the altar lights. On the other hand, that idea may be correct. Another theory is that of a confessional." N. and Q., 6th ser., IX. 289.

Lycian (lis'i-an), a. and n. [< L. Lycia, < Gr. Λυκία, Lycia (Λύκιος, L. Lycius, Lycian, pl. Λύκιοι, L. Lycii, the Lycians) (see def.), + -an.] I, a. Of or pertaining to Lycia, a mountainous district in southwestern Asia Minor, projecting into the Mediterranean sea, and inhabited in ancient times by a distinct race. See II.—Lycian architecture, the ancient architecture characteristic of Lycia, preserved especially in abundant series of rock-cut tombs, in which the assemblage of a system of construction in wood is closely reproduced in stone. Quadrangular obelisks, such as the harpy tomb of Xanthos, also abound, as well as stone sarcophagi, in which, as in the examples first mentioned, carpenters' work is faithfully copied. Later examples present imitations of Greek temple-façades, etc. The early architecture is of especial importance as throwing a probable light upon some of the forms through which Greek architecture was developed.

Lycian Architecture.
Tomb now in the British Museum.

II. n. An inhabitant of Lycia; especially, one of a race inhabiting ancient Lycia, Aryan or Indo-European in language, as is shown by important inscriptions in a peculiar character recently recovered and elucidated. The Lycians seem to have exerted considerable influence in early days on the Greeks, especially through their worship of Apollo. Interesting monuments of their architecture and sculpture have been brought together in European museums, notably in the British Museum. Some sculptures found in Lycia vie in refinement with the riper archaic art of Attica. See harpy monument, under harpy.

Lycinæ (li-sī'nē), n. pl. [NL., < Lycus + -inæ.] A subfamily of Lampyridæ having the middle coxæ distant and no epipleuræ, typified by the genus Lycus.

Lycium (lis'i-um), n. [NL. (Linnæus, 1737), < Gr. λύκιον, a kind of thorn.] A genus of solanaceous plants of the tribe Atropeæ, characterized by a 3- to 5-toothed or -lobed calyx, a funnel-shaped, campanulate, or urn-shaped corolla, stamens which are either exserted or included, and a slightly juicy and usually few-seeded berry. They are shrubs, often spine-bearing at the nodes, with entire leaves, the latter usually small; and they bear white, purple, rose-colored, sometimes scarlet or yellowish flowers, solitary in the axils or rarely fascicled. About 70 species have been described, but this number may be much reduced; they are found throughout warm and temperate regions, and many are cultivated. The common name of plants of the genus is box-thorn, applying especially to L. barbarum, a plant with lilac flowers and scarlet or orange berries, well adapted for training on walls or trellises. The leaves of this plant having been recommended for use as tea, it receives also the names Barbary tea-plant and Duke of Argyll's tea-tree. L. Afrum, the African tea-tree, is a spiny species with violet flowers. L. vulgare of the Mediterranean region, slightly thorny with little branches, and having green-purple flowers and bright-red berries, is the matrimony-vine, often cultivated, and sometimes becoming wild in America. L. Europæum is sometimes utilized for hedges, as may be also other species.

Lycodes (lī-kō'dēz), n. [NL. (Reinhardt, 1838), < Gr. λυκώδης, wolfish, < λύκος, a wolf, + εἶδος, form.] The typical genus of Lycodidæ, with numerous species, of northern seas, as L. vahli of the North Atlantic. They are among various fishes known as eel-pouts.

lycodid (lī-kō'did), n. and a. I. n. A fish of the family Lycodidæ.

II. a. Relating or belonging to the Lycodidæ; lycodoid.

Lycodidæ (lī-kod'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Lycodes + -idæ.] A family of teleocephalous fishes, typified by the genus Lycodes; the eel-pouts. They are characterized by a more or less anguilliform shape, tapering backward, elongated dorsal and anal fins confluent with the caudal and invested with a thick skin, ventrals jugular and rudimentary or suppressed, and branchial apertures lateral, not confluent. They inhabit arctic and cold temperate seas, mostly at considerable depths. Some of them, probably all, are viviparous, as Zoarces viviparus. The genera are about 6, the species 30. The family is also called Zoarcidæ.

lycodoid (lī-kō'doid), a. and n. [< NL. Lycodes + -oid.] I. a. Pertaining to the Lycodidæ or Lycodoidea, or having their characters.

II. n. A fish of the family Lycodidæ or superfamily Lycodoidea.

Lycodoidea (lī-kō-doi'dē-ą), n. pl. [NL. (Gill), < Lycodes + -oidea.] The Lycodidæ rated as a superfamily.

Lycodon (lī'kō-don), n. [NL.: see lycodont.] The typical genus of Lycodontidæ, having the anterior teeth of both jaws caniniform.

lycodont (lī'kō-dont), a. and n. [< Gr. λυκόδους (λυκοδοντ-), a canine tooth, lit. 'wolf-tooth,' < λύκος, wolf, + ὀδούς (ὀδοντ-) = E. tooth.] I. a. Having caniniform teeth, as a snake; belonging to the Lycodontidæ.

II. n. A snake of the family Lycodontidæ.

Lycodontidæ (lī-kō-don'ti-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Lycodon (Lycodont-) + -idæ.] In Günther's system of classification, a family of colubriform serpents, typified by the genus Lycodon. The body is moderately thick; the head is oblong, with a flat top and generally a flattened and broadly rounded snout; the anterior teeth of both jaws are generally longest, and there are no grooved teeth. It contains 14 genera, mostly of Africa and the East Indies. Some of the commonest snakes of India belong here. Also Lycodontinæ, as a subfamily of Colubridæ.

lycodontine (lī-kō-don'tin), a. and n. [< lycodont + -ine[1].] Same as lycodont.

Lycoperdaceæ (lī″kō-pėr-dā'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Corda, 1842), < Lycoperdon + -aceæ.] A family of gasteromycetous fungi, typified by the genus Lycoperdon.

Lycoperdon (lī-kō-pėr'don), n. [NL., < Gr. λύκος, a wolf, + πέρδεσθαι, break wind.] A genus of gasteromycetous fungi, founded by Tournefort in 1700, and typical of the family Lycoperdaceæ. It is characterized by having the globular or pear-shaped membranaceous peridium double, the outer part of which breaks up into warts, spines, etc., while the inner part is more or less firm. The spores are globose, sometimes short-caudate, and colored, escaping at maturity through an irregular apical opening in the peridium. The species, of which about 100 are known, are very widely distributed, and sometimes are of considerable size. They are popularly known as puffballs. L. gemmatum, the common puffball, acts mechanically as a styptic, by means of its brown spores. In a young state it is edible. See basidium, cut, fig. c.—Lycoperdon nuts, the name, given by the herbalists, under which certain subterranean fungi of the genus Elaphomyces were formerly known and sold.

Lycoperdon.

Lycopersicon (lī-kō-pėr'si-kon), n. [NL., < Gr. λυκοπερσικόν* (as if < λύκος, a wolf, + περσικός, the peach: see peach[1]), a false reading of λυκοπέρσιον, an Egyptian plant with a strong-smelling yellow juice.] A genus of plants of the family Solanaceæ and the tribe Solaneæ. It differs from Solanum, to which it is referred by some authors, by having long, acuminate, connate anthers, opening on the inside by a longitudinal fissure. They are unarmed herbs with irregularly pinnate leaves, weak stems, five- or rarely six-parted flowers, with a rotate corolla, and growing in few-flowered cymes. The fruit is a fleshy globose or pear-shaped berry, usually red or yellow, and with numerous seeds embedded in the pulp. There are three or four species, natives of South America, but now widely cultivated and to some extent naturalized elsewhere. The most important is L. Lycopersicum, the common tomato, formerly called love-apple, which has been very much modified by culture. Its fruit, naturally of two or three cells, is often much complicated by a consolidation of blossoms. See tomato.

lycopod (lī'kō-pod), n. [< NL. Lycopodium, q. v.] A plant of the family Lycopodiaceæ.

lycopode (lī'kō-pōd), n. [< NL. Lycopodium, q. v.] A highly inflammable yellow powder made up of the spores of species of Lycopodium, especially L. clavatum and L. selago.

Lycopodiaceæ (lī-kō-pō-di-ā'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Michaux, 1803), < Lycopodium + -aceæ.] A family of pteridophytic plants, belonging to the order Lycopodiales, and typified by the genus Lycopodium. The family includes only two genera, Lycopodium and Phylloglossum (which see), the former constituting the club-mosses, from which it is known as the club-moss family. The two genera differ in certain essential respects and have been made to constitute respectively the subfamilies Lycopodieæ and Phylloglosseæ.

lycopodiaceous (lī-kō-pō-di-ā'shius), a. [< NL. Lycopodiace(æ) + -ous.] Belonging to or resembling the Lycopodiaceæ.

Lycopodieæ (lī″kō-pō-di'ē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Goebel(?), 1882), < Lycopodium + -eæ.] A subfamily of Lycopodiaceæ, containing the genus Lycopodium.

Lycopodineæ (lī″kō-pō-din'ē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Swartz, 1806), < Lycopodium + -ineæ.] A group of pteridophytic plants, practically equivalent to the order Lycopodiales.

lycopodite (lī-kop'ō-dīt), n. [< NL. Lycopodium, q. v., + -ite[2].] A fossil plant of the family Lycopodiaceæ.

Lycopodium (lī-kō-pō'di-um), n. [NL., so named from the appearance of the roots; < Gr. λύκος, a wolf, + πούς (ποδ-) = E. foot.] A genus of pteridophytic plants, the type of the family Lycopodiaceæ. They are low plants, usually of moss-like aspect, with evergreen, one-nerved leaves arranged in one to sixteen ranks. The sporangia are coriaceous, reniform, compressed, one-celled, dehiscing transversely, situated in the axils of unaltered leaves or in terminal bracteate spikes. The spores are copious and minute, with three lines radiating from the apex. The genus is very widely distributed, and contains 94 species, of which 16 occur in the United States. L. obscurum is the well-known ground-pine; L. clavatum is the common club-moss, or running pine, which is extensively employed in decorations. This species has also been called stag's-horn, buck's-horn, fox's-claws, foxtail, etc. L. Selago is sometimes called fir-moss, foxfeet, and tree-moss. Many fossil species have been found, those occurring in the Paleozoic strata being preferably called Lycopodites.

Lycopodium obscurum.

Lycopsis (lī-kop'sis), n. [NL., < L. lycopsis, < Gr. λύκοψις, the bugloss, a plant like the alkanet, < λύκος, a wolf, + ὄψις, appearance.] A genus of boraginaceous plants, of the tribe Anchuseæ, distinguished from Anchusa by having the corolla-tube curved instead of straight. They are annual hairy or bristly herbs, with alternate leaves, five-parted flowers, with five scales in the throat of the corolla, and fruit of four ovoid, erect nutlets. The flowers are small, violet or blue, and grow in terminal, leafy-bracted, scorpioid racemes. Three or four species are known, natives of Europe, northern Africa, and central and western Asia. One species, L. arvensis, the small bugloss, is a common weed in cultivated sandy fields in Europe, and is now established from Canada to Virginia in North America.

Lycopus (lī'kō-pus), n. [NL. (Linnæus, 1753), so named from the appearance of the leaves; < Gr. λύκος, wolf, + πούς = E. foot.] A genus of labiate plants of the tribe Saturejeæ and the subtribe Menthinæ. It is characterized by a four- or five-toothed calyx, a corolla-limb with four divisions, the two anterior stamens perfect with the cells of the anthers at length diverging, and the nutlets sharply angled, and truncate at the apex. They are small herbs, growing in marshy places, with sharply toothed leaves, and small flowers in dense axillary whorls. About 15 species have been enumerated, 12 or 13 occurring in North America; they are also found in the temperate regions of the old world. L. Virginicus is a common American species with some medicinal properties, called bugleweed. L. Americanus, another common American species, was formerly identified with L. Europæus, the water-hoarhound or gipsy-herb (gipsy-wort), which is the ordinary European species, sometimes furnishing a substitute for quinine.

Lycornis (lī-kôr'nis), n. [NL., < Gr. λύκος, a wolf, + ὄρνις, a bird.] A genus of South American coots of the family Rallidæ and subfamily Fulicinæ, having the head carunculate. Bonaparte, 1854. Also spelled Licornis.

Horned Coot (Lycornis cornuta).

Lycosa (lī-kō'-sä), n. [NL., < Gr. λύκος, a kind of spider, lit. wolf: see Lycæna.] The typical genus of Lycosidæ. L. piratica is an example. L. tarantula, or Tarantula apuliæ, is the well-known tarantula of southern Europe.

Lycosidæ (lī-kos'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Lycosa + -idæ.] A family of citigrade hunting-spiders; the wolf-spiders or tarantulas. They are active predatory spiders, capturing their prey by chasing, and spinning no web. The legs are long, especially the hinder pair, and the cephalothorax is narrowed in front; the ocelli are usually in three rows; the spinnerets are three pairs; the falces are vertical. The leading genera are Lycosa and Dolomedes.

lycotropal (lī-kot'rō-pal), a. [< Gr. λύκος, a hook, + τρόπος, a turning: see trope.] In bot., curved downward like a horseshoe: applied to an orthotropal ovule.

Lycus (lī'kus), n. [NL. (Fabricius, 1787), < Gr. λύκος, a wolf.] 1. A genus of beetles of the family Malacodermidæ, having the head prolonged like a rostrum with the antennæ at its base, and the final joints of the antennæ as long as the preceding ones. It is a large genus, the species of which are mainly African, although two are found in North America, and a few in the East Indies and Australia.

2. A genus of butterflies. Hübner, 1816.

Lyda (lī'dä), n. [NL. (Fabricius, 1804), < Gr. Λυδός, a Lydian: see Lydian.] A genus of sawflies of the hymenopterous family Tenthredinidæ, and typical of the subfamily Lydinæ, having the fore wings with two marginal cells and the long antennæ setaceous in both sexes. The group is large and wide-spread, with 30 European and over 50 North American species.

Lyda nevadensis. (Twice natural size.)

lyddite (lid'īt), n. [< Lydd, in Kent, England.] An explosive, consisting of picric acid melted and cast into a shell. It is difficult to detonate.

Lydella (lī-del'ä), n. [NL., dim. of Lyda, q. v.] A genus of tachina-flies, of the family Tachinidæ, founded by Robineau-Desvoidy in 1830. L. doryphoræ, the only American species, has been placed in the genus Phorocera. It is parasitic upon the Colorado potato-beetle, and is probably more effectual than any other insect in checking this pest in Missouri. It resembles the common house-fly, but is distinguished by its brilliant silvery-white face. Riley, 1st Rep. Ins. Mo., p. 111.

Lydella doryphoræ. (Cross shows natural size.)

lydent†, n. A Middle English form of leden.

Lydian (lid'i-an), a. and n. [< L. Lydia, < Gr. Λυδία, < Λυδός, a Lydian.] I. a. Of or pertaining to Lydia, an ancient country of Asia Minor, bordering on the Ægean sea, or to its inhabitants: as, the Lydian empire (including under Crœsus, its last king, famous for his wealth, a large part of Asia Minor); Lydian coins; Lydian luxury.—Lydian mode. See mode[1].—Lydian stone, the name given by ancient authors to the touch-stone. It occurs as early as the time of Bacchylides (about 470 B. C.). The use of the Lydian stone for testing the quality of gold is minutely described by Theophrastus, and is also noticed at some length by Pliny.

II. n. An inhabitant of ancient Lydia.

lye[1]†, v. i. An obsolete spelling of lie[1].

lye[2]†, v. and n. An obsolete spelling of lie[2].

lye[3] (lī), n. [Formerly also lie, ley; < ME. ley, ⋆< AS. leáh = MD. looghe, D. loog = MLG. LG. loge = OHG. louga, lauga, MHG. louge, G. lauge, lye; prob. akin to Icel. laug, a warm bath, hence also a hot spring (much used in comp., e. g. laugar-dag (= Sw. lördag = Dan. löverdag, Saturday), 'bath-day,' i. e. Saturday, the day appropriated by the Scandinavians to that exercise; laugar-aptan, laugar-nátt, Saturday evening, Saturday night, etc.).] Water impregnated with alkaline salt imbibed from the ashes of wood by the process of leaching; also, some solution of an alkali, as potash, which is itself the product of leached lye concreted by evaporation. Crude lye is used in making some coarse kinds of soap, for cleaning certain things, as inked printing-types and -rollers (though for these benzine is now more common), and for various other purposes. In dilution it is used in a preparation of maize called hulled corn (which see, under hull, v. t.) and also lyed corn.

lye[4]†, n. A variant of lay[8].

lye[5]†, n. An obsolete variant of lee[5].

lyed (līd), a. [< lye[3] + -ed[2].] Treated or prepared with lye.

The air is to be carefully excluded from the surface of fruits left standing after having been either lyed or washed. Sci. Amer., N. S., LIX. 356.

Lyencephala (lī-en-sef′a-lą), n. pl. [NL., irreg. < Gr. λύειν, loose, + ἐγκέφαλος, brain: see encephalon.] In Owen's classification, the lowest of four subclasses of Mammalia, including the marsupials and monotremes, or Didelphia and Ornithodelphia; the implacental mammals. The name indicates the loose or slight connection of the right and left hemispheres of the cerebrum, in consequence of the small size, but not absence, of the main commissure or corpus callosum. It is correlated with Lissencephala, Gyrencephala, and Archencephala.

lyencephalous (lī-en-sef′a-lus), a. [As Lyencephala + -ous.] Pertaining to the Lyencephala, or having their characters.

lyerman, n. See lyreman.

lyes†, n. pl. A Middle English variant of lees. See lee[5]. Chaucer.

lyf†, lyfly†, etc. Middle English forms of life, lively, etc.

Lygæidæ (lī-jē′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Lygæus + -idæ.] A family of heteropterous insects, typified by the genus Lygæus, belonging to the tribe of land-bugs, or Geocores. The genera are many, mostly tropical or subtropical, and the family is usually divided into 9 subfamilies. These bugs are small or of moderate size, with 3-jointed tarsi and 4-jointed antennæ.

Lygæus (lī-jē′us), n. [NL., < Gr. λυγαῖος, shadowy, gloomy, < λύγη, twilight.] The typical genus of Lygæidæ, founded by Fabricius in 1794. It is characterized by a conical head with projecting eyes in contact with the prothorax; between the eyes is a pair of ocelli. Species are numerous, and are widely distributed in temperate and tropical countries, especially in South America. L. fasciatus is a common one, red, banded and dotted with black. L. equestris, L. saxatilis, and L. familiaris inhabit Europe.

Lygæus fasciatus.
(Twice natural size.)

Lygodiaceæ (lī-gō-di-ā′sē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Presl, 1845), < Lygodium + -aceæ.] A former family of ferns based upon the genus Lygodium. Lygodium is now placed in the family Schizæaceæ.

Lygodieæ (lī-gō-dī′ē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Bronguiart, 1843), < Lygodium + -eæ.] A tribe of ferns, typified by the genus Lygodium.

Lygodium (lī-gō′di-um), n. [NL. (Swartz, 1801), < Gr. λυγώδης, like a willow twig, < λύγος, a willow twig, withy, + εἶδος, form.] A widely diffused genus of ferns with climbing stipes. The spore-cases are ovoid, solitary or occasionally in pairs, in the axils of large imbricated scale-like indusia. The fully developed barren fronds are either palmate or pinnate. Of the 25 species known, only one, L. palmatum, the climbing fern, is a native of the United States, occurring from New Hampshire south to Florida. It has flexible, twining stipes, from 1 to 3 feet long, and short alternate 2-forked branches or petioles, each fork bearing a round-cordate palmately 4- to 7-lobed pinnule. Eighteen fossil species have been described, ranging from the Cretaceous to the Miocene. They are common in the Tertiary deposits of western America.

Lygosoma (lī-gō-sō′mą), n. [NL., < Gr. λύγος, a withy, + σῶμα, body.] A genus of scincoid lizards.

lying[1]† (lī′ing), n. [Verbal n. of lie[1], v.] A place where one lies.

The place for the bodye to be interred wche was devised over againste the lyeing of Q— Kathorine on the right side of the Quyre.
168*b Register book of Peterborough Cathedral.* (N. and Q., [7th ser., IV. 121.)

lying[1] (lī′ing), p. a. [Ppr. of lie[1], v.] Being prostrate. See lie[1].—Lying panel. See panel.—Lying to†, adjacent to.

Neither bee there wanting woods heere . . . and parkes; for many there are lying to Noblemen's and gentlemen's houses replenished with game.
Holland, tr. of Camden, p. 459. (Davies.) lying[2] (lī′ing), n. [Verbal n. of lie[2], v.] Falsehood; untruthfulness.

lying[2] (lī′ing), p. a. [Ppr. of lie[2], v.] Mendacious; false; deceptive: as, a lying rumor.

What was it? A lying trick of the brain!
Tennyson, Maud, xxiii. 2.

lying-down (lī′ing-doun′), n. Same as lying-in.

lying-in (lī′ing-in′), n. and a. [Verbal n. of lie in: see lie[1], v.] I. n. Confinement in childbed.

II. a. Pertaining to childbirth; obstetrical: as, a lying-in hospital.

lyingly (lī′ing-li), adv. In a lying manner; falsely; by telling lies.

lying-to (lī′ing-tō′), n. See to lie to, under lie[1].

lyket. A Middle English form of like[1], like[2], like[3].

lykwake†, n. See likewake.

Lyle gun. See gun[1].

lylliet, n. An obsolete form of lily.

lym[1]†, n. An obsolete form of limb[1].

lym[2]†, n. See lime[4].

lymail†, n. See limail.

lymbo†, n. An obsolete spelling of limbo.

lyme[1]†, n. An obsolete spelling of lime[1].

lyme[2]†, n. See lime[5].

lyme-grass (līm′grȧs), n. [< lyme (? obs. spelling of lime[1]—no obvious application) + grass.] A coarse grass of the genus Elymus, especially E. arenarius, having the inflorescence in simple spikes, very rarely branched, the spikelets two or three together, and the glumes two, both on the same side of the spikelet, with or without awns, inclosing from 1 to 7 florets. There are about 40 species having an extensive geographical range; nearly all are inhabitants of the temperate zones.

Lymexylon (lī-mek′si-lon), n. [NL., < Gr. λίμη, maltreatment, ruin, + ξύλον, wood.] The typical genus of Lymexylonidæ, having five abdominal segments and entire elytra. The species make cylindrical borings in oak, and L. navale is notorious for the injury it thus causes to ship-timber. Also written Lymexylum, and improperly Limexylon.

Lymexylonidæ (lī-mek-si-lon′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Lymexylon + -idæ.] A small but important family of pentamerous Coleoptera, of the series Clavicornia. It is characterized by serrate 11-jointed antennæ inserted on the sides of the deflexed and posteriorly narrowed head, slender legs with contiguous coxæ (except in Atractocerus), prominent ungrooved hind coxæ, prominent conical front coxæ without trochanter, and the first ventral segment not elongated. Also Lymexylidæ.

lymiter†, lymitour†, n. Obsolete forms of limiter.

Lymnæa, Lymnea, n. See Limnæa.

lymnite, n. See limnite, 1.

Lymno-. For words beginning thus, see Limno-.

lymph (limf), n. [= F. lymphe = Pg. lympha = Sp. It. linfa, < L. lympha, clear water, a fountain (NL. lymph), also personified, Lympha, a rural deity; a poet. word (so spelled appar. as associated, erroneously, with nympha, < Gr. νύμφη, a nymph, esp. a water-nymph, poet. also water, OL. lumphia, a water-nymph), OL. Lumpha, orig. lumpa* (?) = Oscan dium pa, connected with limpidus, clear, limpid: see limpid.] 1. Pure, clear water, or any fluid similarly transparent. [Poetical.]

A fountain bubbled up, whose lymph serene Nothing of earthy mixture might distain. Trench.

2. In physiol., a fluid in animal bodies, contained in certain vessels called lymphatics. Lymph is, like the blood, an alkaline fluid, consisting of a plasma and corpuscles, and coagulates by the formation of fibrin. The lymph differs from the blood in its corpuscles being of the colorless kind, and in the very small proportion of its solid constituents, which amount to only about 5 per cent. of its weight. Lymph may, in fact, be regarded as blood minus its red corpuscles and diluted with water so as to be somewhat less dense than the serum of blood, which contains about 8 per cent. of solid matter.—Humanized lymph, vaccine lymph taken from a human being: opposed to bovine lymph, its original source.—Vaccine lymph, the matter collected in a cowpox vesicle. When transferred either from the cow or a person having the disease from being vaccinated, it produces the same disease in others, and gives comparative immunity from smallpox.

lymphad (lim′fad), n. [Prob. a corruption of Gael. longfhada, a galley, < long, a ship, + fada, long.] A galley with one mast and usually a yard upon it. Representations of such a galley, with three or more oars fixed in place for rowing, are common in Scotch heraldry. [Scotch.]

"Our loch ne'er saw the Cawmil lymphads," said the bigger Highlander. . . . "She doesna value a Cawmil mair as a Cowan." Scott, Rob Roy, xxix.

lymphadenitis (lim-fad-e-nī′tis), a. [NL., < lympha, lymph, + Gr. ἀδήν, a gland, + -itis.] Inflammation of a lymphatic gland.

lymphadenoid (lim-fad′e-noid), a. [< NL. lympha, lymph, + Gr. ἀδήν, a gland, + εἶδος, form.] Resembling or pertaining to a lymphatic gland: as, lymphadenoid tissue.

lymphadenoma (lim-fad-e-nō′mą), n.; pl. lymphadenomata (-mą-tą). [NL., < lympha, lymph, + Gr. ἀδήν, a gland, + -oma.] 1. A hyperplastic lymphatic gland.—2. Hodgkin's disease; pseudo-leucemia.—3. Lymphosarcoma.

lymphadenomatous (lim-fad-e-nom′a-tus), a. [< NL. lympha, lymph, + Gr. ἀδήν, a gland, + -oma (cf. adenoma); as lymphadenoma(t-) + -ous.] Of, pertaining to, or characterized by lymphadenoma.

Lymphadenomatous glands may be hard, and scrofulous ones soft, but the converse is usually found.
Lancet, No. 3448, p. 633.

lymphæduct (lim′fē-dukt), n. [< NL. lymphæ, gen. of lympha, lymph, + L. ductus, conveyance, pipe, canal: see duct, and cf. aqueduct.] A lymphatic vessel or duct. Also lymphoduct.

lymphæmia (lim-fē′mi-ą), n. [NL., < lympha, lymph, + Gr. αἷμα, blood.] In pathol., lymphatic leucæmia.

lymphangeitis (lim-fan-jē-ī′tis), n. Same as lymphangitis.

lymphangiectasis (lim-fan-ji-ek′tą-sis), n. [NL., < lympha, lymph, + Gr. ἀγγεῖον, a vessel, + ἔκτασις, extension, dilatation.] Dilatation of the lymphatic vessels. Also lymphangiectasia.

lymphangiectatic (lim-fan″ji-ek-tat′ik), a. [< lymphangiectasis (-at-) + -ic.] Pertaining to lymphangiectasis.

lymphangioitis (lim-fan″ji-ō-ī′tis), n. Same as lymphangitis.

lymphangioma (lim-fan-ji-ō′mą), n.; pl. lymphangiomata (-mą-tą). [NL., < lympha, lymph, + Gr. ἀγγεῖον, a vessel, + -oma.] A tumor composed of lymphatic vessels.

lymphangitis (lim-fan-jī′tis), n. [NL., < lympha, lymph, + Gr. ἀγγεῖον, a vessel, + -itis.] Inflammation of the lymphatic vessels.

lymphate† (lim′fāt), a. [< L. lymphatus, pp. of lymphare, drive out of one's senses, distract with fear, craze, < lympha, water: see lymph. The connection is uncertain; prob. with ref. to water-nymphs.] Frightened into madness; raving.

lymphated† (lim′fā-ted), a. [< lymphate + -ed[2].] Same as lymphate.

lymphatic[1] (lim-fat′ik), a. and n. [= F. lymphatique = Sp. linfático = Pg. lymphatico = It. linfatico, < NL. lymphaticus, pertaining to lymph, < lympha, lymph: see lymph.] I. a. 1. Containing, conveying, or pertaining in any way to lymph or chyle: as, a lymphatic vessel; a lymphatic gland.—2. Dull; sluggish; slow in thought or action, as if from an excess of lymph in the body.—Lymphatic cachexy, Hodgkin's disease.—Lymphatic cavity. Same as lymph-sinus.—Lymphatic ganglion. Same as lymphatic gland.—Lymphatic gland, one of the glandular bodies, formed mainly of lymphoid tissue, occurring in the course of the lymphatic ducts. They have no proper ducts conveying away a secretion, and their function is probably hematopoietic.—

Lymphatics of Front of Right Arm. g, g, g, three lymphatic glands, or ganglia, as they are sometimes called.

Lymphatics of Leg. G, lymphatic glands; L, lymphatic vessels.

Lymphatic heart. Same as lymph-heart.—Lymphatic temperament. See temperament.—Lymphatic vessel. See II.

II. n. A vessel which conveys lymph. The lymphatics are small transparent vessels arising in the various tissues, provided with valves like the veins, and running toward the heart. They are occasionally interrupted by lymphatic glands, and convey the leakage from the blood-vascular system and the waste of the tissues back into the venous system. The place of discharge for the drainage of the rightside of the head, right arm, and adjacent regions of the trunk is at the junction of the right subclavian and right jugular veins, while the lymph from all the rest of the body through the thoracic duct pours into the blood at the corresponding place on the left side. That part of the lymphatic system which runs from the intestine takes up some of the products of digestion, and the vessels are here called lacteals.

A Lymphatic Vessel laid open, showing valves, magnified.

lymphatic[2]†, a. and n. [< L. lymphaticus, distracted, frenzied, < lymphatus, pp. of lymphare, distracted: see lymphate.] I. a. Making or being distracted or frantic.

Horace either is or feigns himself lymphatick, and shews what an effect the vision of the Nymphs and Bacchus had on him. Shaftesbury, Enthusiasm, § 6.

II. n. A mad enthusiast; a lunatic.

All nations have their lymphaticks of some kind or another. Shaftesbury, Enthusiasm, § 6.

lymph-cell (limf′sel), n. A leucocyte occurring in lymph; a lymph-corpuscle.

lymph-channel (limf′chan″el), n. Any conduit for lymph.—Lymph-channel of a lymphatic gland, the space left between the lymphoid tissue and the capsule and trabeculæ, which is traversed by retiform connective tissue, and in which the lymph circulates. Also called lymph-sinus.

lymph-corpuscle (limf′kôr″pus-l), n. One of the corpuscles of lymph; a lymph-cell.

lymph-heart (limf′härt), n. A lymphatic vessel which is rhythmically contractile. Such vessels are generally enlarged near their opening into veins, where they acquire a muscular investment which enables them to pulsate. They are chiefly developed in the lower vertebrates. Also called lymphatic heart.

lymphoduct (lim′fō-dukt), n. [< NL. lympha, lymph, + L. ductus, a conveyance: see lymphæduct.] Same as lymphæduct.

lymphography (lim-fog′ra-fi), n. [< NL. lympha, lymph, + Gr. -γραφία, < γράφειν, write.] A description of the lymphatic vessels, their origin and uses.

lymphoid (lim′foid), a. [< lymph + -oid.] 1. Having the character or nature of lymph; resembling lymph; lacteal.—2. Of or pertaining to lymph.—3. Of the nature of lymphoid tissue.—Lymphoid cells, rounded cells found in lymphoid tissue and resembling white blood-corpuscles, except that the nucleus is larger in comparison with the protoplasm.—Lymphoid cords, the rounded cords of lymphoid tissue presenting themselves in the medullary portions of lymphatic glands.—Lymphoid nodules, any nodules of lymphoid tissue, such as are found, for example, in many mucous membranes.—Lymphoid tissue, a tissue formed of branching cells united into a network, the interstices of which are filled with lymphoid cells. Such tissue forms the greater part of the lymphatic glands and such allied structures as the solitary and agminate glands of the intestine; it envelops the smaller arteries of the spleen, and forms the Malpighian corpuscles; there are masses of it in the tonsils; it forms the thymus in the infant; it occurs extensively in a diffuse form throughout the mucous membrane of the alimentary canal; and it presents itself in serous membranes, on the bronchial mucous membrane, and elsewhere.

lymphoidal (lim-foi′dal), a. [< lymphoid + -al.] Same as lymphoid.

lymphoma (lim-fō′mä), n.; pl. lymphomata (-ma-tä). [NL., < lympha, lymph, + -oma.] A hyperplastic mass of lymphoid tissue. The name has been applied also to lymphosarcoma, and, as general lymphoma, to Hodgkin's disease.

lymphomatous (lim-fom′a-tus), a. [< lymphoma(t-) + -ous.] Pertaining to or of the nature of a lymphoma.

lymphosarcoma (lim″fō-sär-kō′mä), n.; pl. lymphosarcomata (-ma-tä). [NL., < lympha, lymph, + sarcoma, q. v.] A sarcoma which in the combination of retiform cells with lymphoid cells presents the structure of a lymphatic gland.

lymphotomy (lim-fot′ō-mi), n. [< lymph(atic) + Gr. τομή, a cutting.] Dissection of the lymphatics.

lymph-sac (limf′sak), n. Same as lymph-sinus.

lymph-sinus (limf′sī″nus), n. A large or dilated lymphatic vessel. Aiso called lymph-sac and lymphatic cavity.

lymph-space (limf′spās), n. Any cavity in the tissues containing lymph.

lymph-vessel (limf′ves″el), n. Any lymphatic vessel.

lymphy (lim′fi), a. [< lymph + -y[1].] Containing or like lymph.

lymptwiggt (limp′twig), n. A dialectal corruption of lapwing. C. Swainson. [Prov. Eng. (Exmoor).]

lynt, n. An obsolete spelling of line[1], lin[2].

lynaget, n. An obsolete variant of lineage.

lyncet (lins), n. [< OF. lynce, < L. lynx, lynx: see lynx.] A lynx.

The sharp-eyed lynce.
Greene, Maiden's Dream (Prudence). (Davies.)

lyncean (lin-sē′an), a. [< Gr. λύγκειος, pertaining to a lynx, < λύγξ (λυγκ-), a lynx: see lynx.] 1. Pertaining to the lynx.—2. Lynx-eyed; sharp-sighted.—Lyncean Academy (It. Accademia dei Lincei, Academy of the Lyncei, Lyncei being the plural of L. Lynceus: see lynceous), an association for the promotion of arts and sciences, existing in Rome from 1609 to about 1632. It has since been revived, and is now called the Reale Accademia dei Lincei.

lynceoust, a. [< Gr. λύγκειος, sharp-sighted, < λύγξ (λυγκ-), lynx: see lynx.] Sharp-sighted; lynx-eyed.

But yet, in the end, their secret driftes are laide open, and linceus eyes, that see through stone walls, have made a passage into the close coverture of their hypocrisie.
Nashe, Pierce Penilesse (1592). (Halliwell.)

★Lynceus (lin-sē′us), n. [NL., also Linceus: see lynceous.] A name sometimes given to the constellation Lynx.

lynch[1], n. See linch[1].

lynch[2] (linch), v. t. [< lynch(-law).] To punish by lynch-law; punish summarily, for a crime or public offense of any kind, without authority of law; specifically, to punish with death in this manner. See lynch-law.

The prison was burst open by the mob, and George was lynched, as he deserved. Emerson, English Traits, ix.

lynchet, n. See linchet.

lynch-law (linch′lâ), n. [Earlier Lynch law (1839), orig. Lynch's law; not found before 1817; said, without contemporary evidence, to have meant orig. the kind of law administered by Charles Lynch (1736-96), a Virginia planter, who early in the Revolution, with his neighbors, Robert Adams and Thomas Calloway, undertook to protect society and support the revolutionary government in the region where he lived, on the Staunton river, by punishing with stripes or banishment such lawless or disaffected persons as were accused. According to tradition, Tories brought before this informal court were often hung up by their thumbs until they cried, "Liberty forever!"; but the penalty of death was never inflicted. The origin of the term is often erroneously ascribed to his brother, John Lynch, the founder of Lynchburg in Virginia, who remained a Quaker all his life. The notion that the term originated in the action of a mayor of Galway in Ireland, one James Fitzstephen Lynch, who is said to have executed the law upon his own son by hanging him, in 1493, is erroneous.] The administration of summary punishment, especially death, for a crime or public offense, without authority of law. It implies lawless concert or action among a number of members of the community, to supply the want of criminal justice or to anticipate its delays, or to inflict a penalty demanded by public opinion, though in defiance of the laws.

Such is too often the administration of law on the frontier, Lynch's law, as it is technically termed, in which the plaintiff is apt to be witness, jury, judge, and executioner, and the defendant convicted and punished on mere presumption.
Irving, Tour on the Prairies, p. 35, quoted in Bartlett's [Americanisms.

lyncine (lin′sin), a. [< L. lynx (lync-), lynx, + -ine[1].] Resembling a lynx; pertaining to the genus Lynx; lyncean.

lyndt, lyndet. See lind.

lyndent, n. An obsolete form of linden.

lynet, n. An obsolete spelling of line[1], line[2].

Lyngbya (ling′bi-ä), n. [NL. (Agardh, 1824), named after Hans Christian Lyngbye (1782–1837), a Danish botanist.] A large genus of blue-green algæ, typifying Kuetzing's family Lyngbyeæ, which is ordinarily placed in the family Oscillatoriaceæ. Some of the species inhabit fresh running water, others stagnant, and a few salt water. They consist of delicate threads or filaments, each provided with a distinct sheath, which are simple and destitute of heterocysts. The spores are unknown, and propagation takes place by means of hormogones which slide out of the sheaths. There are about fifty fresh-water species, and a dozen brackish or salt-water species. Sometimes written Lyngbia.

Lyngbyeæ (ling-bī′ē-ō), n. pl. [NL. (Kuetzing, 1843), < Lyngbya + -eæ.] A former family of algæ. Lyngbya is placed by Thuret and Farlow in the suborder Nostochineæ (the Nematogeneæ of Cohn in part); by Wolle and Bennett in the family Oscillatoriaceæ; and by Cooke in the family Lyngbyeæ, which is made of equal rank with the Nostoceæ.

lyngwortt (ling′wėrt), n. Same as lungwort.

lyntont, n. An obsolete variant of lintel.

lyntquhitet, n. An obsolete form of lintwhite.

lynx (lingks), n. [Formerly also linx; < ME. ★lynx = OF. lincs, F. lynx = Sp. lince = Pg. lince, lynce = It. lince, < L. lynx, < Gr. λύγξ (λυγκ-), a lynx, = Lith. luszis = Sw. lo, a lynx, = (with additional formative -s) Dan. los = AS. lox = OS. lohs = D. losch = OHG. MHG. luhs, G. luchs, a lynx; prob. so called with ref. to its bright eyes, < Gr. √ λυκ in λύχνος, a lamp, λεύσσειν, see, etc., L. √ luc, in lucere, shine, lux, light, Teut. √ luh, be light: see light[1]. For the Teut. forms, cf. the similar forms of fox.] 1. A wild cat with a short tail, penciled ears, and 28 teeth, belonging to the family Felidæ and genus Lynx, such as the caracal, the loup-cervier, and others. There are a number of species, inhabiting Europe, Asia, Africa, and North America. They are of moderate size among Felidæ, but considerably larger than any house-cat, with a short body, a very short tail, large and long limbs, usually bearded cheeks and tufted ears, and spotted, marbled, or clouded coloration. Some have been known from time immemorial, and famed for their supposed sharp-sightedness, which probably is no greater than that of other cats. The common European lynx is L. lynx; L. cervaria, L. pardina, L. isabellina, etc., are other Old World species or varieties. The Persian lynx is the caracal, L. caracal. (See cut under caracal.) The common wildcat of North America is the bay lynx, L. rufus, which runs into several varieties. The Canada

Lynx (Lynx canadensis).

lynx, L. canadensis, is a larger, much more robust and shaggy wildcat, resembling the lynx of northern Europe or Siberia; the general complexion is gray or hoary, with clouded or obsolete spottings.

2. [cap.] A genus of Felidæ lacking the front upper premolar of the true cats; the lynxes. The dental formula is: 3 incisors, 1 canine, 2 premolars, and 1 molar in each upper and lower half-jaw—in all, 28 teeth, instead of 30 as in Felis.

3. [cap.] A small northern constellation introduced by Hevelius in 1690, the name being chosen because the sharp-sightedness of a lynx is required to distinguish any of its stars. It is placed between the Great Bear and Auriga, north of the Twins. Its ten brightest stars are of the fifth magnitude.

lynx-eyed (lingks′īd), a. Having acute sight.

lyomer (lī′ō-mėr), n. A fish of the order Lyomeri.

Lyomeri (lī-om′ē-rī), n. pl. [NL., pl. of lyomerus: see lyomerous.] An order of ateleocephalous fishes. They have rudimentary branchial arches (none of which are modified as branchiostegal or pharyngeal) situated far behind the skull, deficient especially in nasal and vomerine elements, and articulating with the first vertebra by a basioccipital condyle alone; only two cephalic arches, both freely movable, an anterior dentigerous one, and a posterior suspensorial one, the latter consisting of hyomandibular and quadrate bones; no opercular elements or maxillary bones; an imperfect scapular arch, limited to a single cartilaginous plate, remote from the skull; and separately ossified but imperfect vertebræ. The order includes a few remarkable deep-sea forms constituting the families Eurypharyngidæ and Saccopharyngidæ.

lyomerous (lī-om′ē-rus), a. [< NL. lyomerus, < Gr. λύειν, loose, + μέρος, part.] Loose-jointed; loosely put together; specifically, pertaining to the Lyomeri, or having their characters.

lyon, n. An obsolete spelling of lion.—Lyon court, a court in Scotland which has jurisdiction in questions regarding coat-armor and precedency. It is presided over by the lyon king-at-arms, who is virtually supreme in all matters of heraldry in Scotland. The name is derived from the lion on the royal shield.—Lyon dollar. See dollar.—Lyon king-at-arms. See king-at arms.

Lyonetia (lī-ō-net′i-ä), n. [NL., named after P. Lyonet (1707–89), a Dutch naturalist.] The typical genus of Lyonetidæ. L. clerckella is an example. Hübner, 1816.

Lyonetidæ (lī-ō-net′i-dē), n. pl. [NL. (Staudinger, 1871), < Lyonetia + -idæ.] A family of microlepidopterous insects of the tineine series, having erect hair on the hinder part of the head, no ocelli or labial palpi, and antennæ long and thin with broadened basal joint. They fly at evening, and rest with the wings roof-shaped, the body elevated in front, and the antennæ laid back. The larvæ have 16 feet, and are either leaf-miners or live between leaves spun together. The family contains about half a dozen genera, of which Cemiostoma and Bucculatrix are the most prominent.

lyonnaise (lē-ō-nāz′), a. [F., fem. of Lyonnais: see Lyonnese.] Lyonnese: specifically applied in cookery to a style of serving potatoes, etc., with a sauce of butter, parsley, and sometimes onions.

Lyonnese (lī-ō-nēs′ or -nēz′), a. and n. [< F. Lyonnais; < Lyon, Lyons.] I. a. Of or pertaining to the city of Lyons in France, or its inhabitants.

II. n. A native of Lyons.

Lyons blue. See blue.

Lyopomata (lī-ō-pō′ma-tä), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. λύειν, loose, + πῶμα, lid, cover.] An order of Brachiopoda, one of two into which the class is usually divided, the other being Arthropomata. Formerly called Inarticulata.

lyopomatous (lī-ō-pom′a-tus), a. [As Lyopomata + -ous.] Hingeless, as the valves of a brachiopod; ecardinal or inarticulate; specifically, pertaining to or having the characters of the Lyopomata.

Lyperanthus (lī-pē-ran′thus), n. [NL. (R. Brown, 1810), so called in allusion to the somber appearance of the flowers; < Gr. λυπηρός, painful, + ἄνθος, a flower.] A Tasmanian genus of orchidaceous plants of the tribe Neottieæ and the subtribe Diurideæ, characterized by the posterior sepal being broad and concave and the lateral ones narrow, the claw of the lip broad, and the blade ovate or lanceolate, recurved, and papillose, while the column is quite long and is not winged. A single species is recognized, a terrestrial herb, usually with a short rhizome. The stem normally bears a number of leaves, and the flowers are few and medium-sized, growing in a bracted raceme. The name flower-of-sadness is given to the species L. nigricans, which is common in cultivation.

Lyperia (lī-pē′ri-ạ), n. [NL. (Bentham, 1835), so called in allusion to the dull color of the flowers, and the fact that they are closed and scentless during the day and expanded and fragrant at night; < Gr. λυπηρός, painful, < λύπη, pain.] A genus of scrophulariaceous plants of the tribe Manuleæ, characterized by a five-parted calyx, a corolla-tube which is usually slender at the apex and gibbous or incurved at the base, and four included stamens. They are shrubs or woody herbs, with the lower leaves opposite and the upper alternate, often clustered in the axils. The flowers are axillary or in terminal spikes or racemes; when fresh, they are usually yellow or purple, but turn black in drying. There are about 30 species, indigenous to Africa and the Canary Islands. The flowers of L. atropurpurea, from the Cape of Good Hope, afford a fine orange dye and have a medicinal use. They are known by the name of African saffron.

Lyra (lī′rạ), n. [NL. < L. lyra, < Gr. λύρα, a lyre, also a constellation so called: see lyre[1].]

The Constellation Lyra.

1. An ancient northern constellation, representing the lyre of Hermes or of Orpheus. Also called the Harp. The brightest star of this constellation is Vega (α Lyræ). It is the seventh in order of brightness in the heavens and the third brightest in the northern hemisphere, being half a magnitude brighter than a standard star of the first magnitude. It forms, with two small stars near it, an equilateral triangle, one of the most striking configurations of the summer sky. Vega, Arcturus, and Polaris form a large triangle, nearly right-angled at Vega.

2. [l. c.; pl. lyræ (-rē).] In anat., a tract of the brain beneath the corpus callosum, on the under surface and between the divergent posterior pillars of the fornix. There the fibers are so arranged as to present certain longitudinal and transverse lines, fancifully likened to the strings of a lyre. The lyra is merely the appearance or formation of a surface, not a distinct part of the fornix. It is also known as the psalterium or corpus psalloides.

3. In zoöl.: (a) A genus of fishes. Willughby, 1686. (b) A genus of brachiopods. Cumberland, 1816.—4. [l. c.] See lira[2].

lyraid (lī′rạ-id), n. [< Lyra + -id[2].] One of the meteors sometimes observed about April 20th: so named because they appear to radiate from the constellation Lyra.

lyrate (lī′rāt), a. [< NL. lyratus, < L. lyra, a lyre: see lyre[1].] Resembling a lyre; having the form or curves of a lyre; lyre-shaped. In ornith., applied to the tail of the lyre-bird, Menura superba, and of the blackcock, Tetrao or Lyrurus tetrix; in entom., to insects or parts which approach the form of a lyre or lyrate leaf. —Lyrate leaf, a leaf of a plant divided transversely into several lobes, which increase in size toward a large terminal one.

Lyrate Leaf of Salvia lyrata.

lyrated (lī′rā-ted), a. Same as lyrate.

lyrately (lī′rāt-li), adv. In the form of a lyre; in a lyrate manner. G. Bentham, Notes on Compositæ.

lyra-way (lī′rạ-wā), n. The kind of tablature in which lute-music was customarily written. See tablature.

lyrawise (lī′rạ-wīz), adv. In the manner customary for lute-music: applied to certain kinds of tablature.

lyre[1] (līr), n. [< F. lyre = Sp. It. lira = Pg. lyra, < L. lyra, < Gr. λύρα, a lyre, lute, also lyric poetry and music, the constellation Lyra, a sea-fish.] 1. In music: (a) A stringed instrument of Egyptian origin, which became the national instrument of ancient Greece. It belonged essentially to the harp family. It resembled closely the cithara, which was derived from Asia, and, like it, consisted of a hollow body, sometimes made of a tortoise-shell, from which two branching horns projected upward, carrying a cross-piece or yoke; the strings, whose number varied from three to ten or more, but was most characteristically seven, were stretched between the yoke and the body, a bridge being provided on the latter for their attachment. The instrument, held by the left arm, sometimes resting on the knee, was played with a plectrum in the right hand, and also by the fingers of the left hand. The tuning of the strings was probably various, though doubtless tetrachordal from very early times. The strings of an eight-stringed lyre were named hypate, the 'highest' string (probably as the lyre was usually held), which was the longest and gave the lowest sound; parhypate, the next string to hypate; lichanos, the forefinger-string; mese, the middle string; paramese, the next string to mese; trite, the third string (from the bottom); paranete, the next string to nete; and nete, the 'last' or 'lowest' string, which was the shortest and gave the highest sound. From these terms came most of the names of tones in the various Greek tonal systems. (See tetrachord.) The lyre was the instrument most used by the Greeks for accompanying singing and recitation; hence the terms lyric and lyrical. It is doubtful whether it was used unaccompanied by the voice.

Ancient Greek Lyre.—From a cup painted by Duris. (Berlin Museum.)

To me in vain the bold Mæonian lyre
Awakes the numbers fraught with living fire.
Falconer, Shipwreck, iii.

(b) An element in the name of some instruments of the viol class, as the arm-lyre or lira da braccio, and the knee-lyre or lira da gamba. See lira[2]. (c) A kind of metallic harmonica, mounted on a lyre-shaped frame, occasionally used in military music. (d) A kind of rebec used by the modern Greeks. See rebec.—2. [cap.] A constellation. See Lyra, 1.—3. A verse of the kind commonly used in lyric poetry.—4. The Manx shearwater, Puffinus anglorum. [Orkney and Shetland.]—5. A grade of isinglass: a trade-name.—Æolian lyre. See Æolian[1].—Greek lyre. See def. 1 (a).

lyre[2]†, n. An obsolete form of leer[1].

lyre[3]†, n. See lire[2].

lyre-bat (līr′bat), n. A kind of bat, Megaderma lyra.

lyre-bird (līr′bėrd), n. An Australian passerine bird of the family Menuridæ and genus Menura. There are two species, M. superba and M. alberti, in both of which the male has the beautiful and extraordinary lyrate tail shown in the figure. The tail is raised and displayed when the bird is courting, after the manner of the peacock and the turkey. The plumage is somber, and the bird would not be particularly noticeable were it not for the unique structure of the tail. The body is about as large as that of the domestic hen, and the air of the bird is gallinaceous, though it is a member of the order Passeres. It lives in the scrub, is shy and solitary, has its lurking-places like grouse, nests on the ground, and is said to lay but one egg. Also called lyretail and lyre-pheasant.

Lyre-bird (Menura superba).

lyreman (līr′man), n.; pl. lyremen (-men). A cicada or harvest-fly; a homopterous insect of the family Cicadidæ, such as Cicada tibicen.

lyre-pheasant (līr′fez″ant), n. The lyre-bird.

lyretail (līr′tāl), n. The lyre-bird.

lyre-tailed (līr′tāld), a. Having a lyrate tail: as, the lyre-tailed nightjar, Hydropsalis forcipata.

lyre-turtle (līr′tėr″tl), n. The leatherback or trunk-turtle, Dermochelys coriaceus. See cut under leatherback.

lyric (lir′ik), a. and n. [= F. lyrique = Sp. lírico = Pg. lyrico = It. lirico, < L. lyricus, < Gr. λυρικός, lyric, of or for a lyre, as a noun a lyric poet (L. neut. lyricum, a lyric poem), < λύρα, a lyre: see lyre[1].] I. a. 1. Pertaining or adapted to the lyre or harp; fit to be sung to an accompaniment; hence, pertaining to or characteristic of song; suggestive of music or song.

Æolian charms and Dorian lyrick odes.
Milton, P. R., iv. 257.

2. Writing for or as if for the lyre, or with musical effect; composing songs, or poems of a song-like character: as, a lyric poet.—Lyric poetry, among the ancients, poetry sung to the lyre; in modern usage, poetry composed for musical recitation, or distinctively that class of poetry which has reference to and delineates the poet's own thoughts and feelings, as opposed to epic or dramatic poetry, which details external circumstances and events.—Lyric stage, the opera; operatic representations collectively.

II. n. 1†. A composer of lyric poems.

The greatest conqueror in this nation, after the manner of the old Grecian lyricks, did not only compose the words of his divine odes, but set them to musick himself.
Addison.

2. A lyric composition or poem.—3. A verse of the kind commonly used in lyric poetry.

lyric† (lir′ik), v. t. [< lyric, n.] To sing in a lyrical way. Davies.

Parson Punch makes a very good shift still, and lyrics over his part in an anthem very handsomely.
Tom Brown, Works, II. 249. (Davies.)

lyrical (lir′i-kạl), a. [< lyric + -al.] Same as lyric.

Lyrical emotion of every kind . . . requires the Saxon element of our language. De Quincey.

lyrichord (lir′i-kôrd), n. [< L. lyra, a lyre, + chorda, a string: see chord, cord[1].] An upright form of harpsichord.

lyricism (lir′i-sizm), n. [< lyric + -ism.] 1†. A lyrical composition.

They must have our lyricisms at their fingers' ends.
Gray.

2. A lyrical utterance or mode of expression. [Rare.]

lyricist (lir′i-sist), n. [< lyric + -ist.] A lyric poet; one versed in lyrical composition. [Rare.]

lyrie (lī′ri), n. The armed bullhead or pogge, Agonus cataphractus.

lyrifer (lir′i-fėr), n. [< NL. lyrifer: see lyriferous.] A vertebrate of the superclass Lyrifera.

Lyrifera (lī-rif′e-rạ), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of lyrifer: see lyriferous.] A superclass of skulled vertebrates distinguished by the development of a scapular arch in the form of a lyrate apparatus curved forward. It includes the classes Pisces proper and Selachii, or typical teleostomous fishes and selachians.

lyriferous (lī-rif′e-rus), a. [< NL. lyrifer, < L. lyra, a lyre, + ferre = E. bear[1].] Having a lyriform scapular arch; of or having the characteristics of the Lyrifera.

lyriform (lī′ri-fôrm), a. [< L. lyra, a lyre, + forma, form.] Lyrate; lyre-shaped.

The tail is . . . lyriform. A. Newton.

lyrism (lir′izm), n. [< Gr. λυρισμός, playing on the lyre, < λυρίζειν, play on the lyre: see lyrist.] The art or act of playing the lyre; hence, musical performance generally. [Rare.]

The lyrism, which had at first only manifested itself by David's sotto voce performance of "My love's a rose without a thorn," had gradually assumed a rather deafening and complex character. George Eliot, Adam Bede, liii.

lyrist (lir′ist), n. [< F. lyriste, < L. lyristes, < Gr. λυριστής, a lyrist, λυρίζειν, play on the lyre, < λύρα, a lyre: see lyre[1].] A performer on the lyre; a composer, singer, or reciter of lyrics.

From her wilds Ierne sent
The sweetest lyrist of her saddest wrong.
Shelley, Adonais, st. 30.

Lyrurus (lī-rō′rus), n. [NL., < Gr. λύρα, a lyre, + οὐρά, a tail.] A genus of Tetraonidæ, including the blackcock or black grouse, Lyrurus tetrix, in the male of which the tail is lyrate; the lyre-tailed grouse. Swainson, 1831.

lysigenetic (lis″i-jē-net′ik), a. [< lysigenous, after genetic.] Same as lysigenous.

In the outer portion of this [the tissue of the squash-tendril], the vascular bundles already referred to arise, while the inner portion remains as a pith region, and often shrinks away from the center, developing a lysigenetic air cavity. Amer. Jour. Sci., 3d ser., XXXI. 51.

Forms of Lyres.

lysigenous (lī-sij'e-nus), a. [Irreg. < Gr. λύσις, a setting free, + -γενής, born, produced: see -gen and -genous.] In bot., produced by the absorption or destruction of contiguous cells: applied to certain cavities or intercellular spaces in plants.

Lysiloma (lis-i-lō'mä), n. [NL. (Bentham, 1844), prob. so named in allusion to the inner portion of the pod, which breaks away from the thickened margin; < Gr. λύειν (sigmatic stem λυσι-), loose, + λῶμα, a border.] A genus of leguminous plants of the family Mimosaceæ and the tribe Ingeæ, characterized by bipinnate leaves, usually a small number of stamens, and the valves of the flat, straight pod breaking away from the persistent sutures. They are trees or shrubs from tropical America and the Antilles, much resembling the acacias of the same region, with small leaflets and numerous small flowers growing in round heads or cylindrical spikes. There are about 10 species, of which the most important economically is L. Sabicu of Cuba, furnishing an extremely hard and durable timber known as sabicu-wood, or horse-flesh mahogany. It is used in shipbuilding and for various structural purposes; also as a substitute for boxwood in making shuttles. L. latisiliqua, called wild tamarind, extends into Florida, and its wood is locally useful in building boats and ships.

Lysimachia (lis-i-mā'ki-ä), n. [NL., < L. lysimachia, < Gr. λυσιμάχιον, a medicinal herb; later Λυσιμάχιος or Λυσιμάχειος βοτάνη, regarded as named from Λυσίμαχος, Lysimachus, King of Thrace, but appar. earlier regarded (as the E. translation loosestrife, and the statement of Pliny that the plant has a soothing effect upon oxen that will not draw in the same yoke, show) as directly (as the proper name indeed is) < Gr. λύειν (sigmatic stem λυσι-), loose, + μάχη, strife.] A large genus of dicotyledonous sympetalous plants, belonging to the family Primulaceæ, the primrose family, and to the tribe Lysimachieæ, characterized by a capsule which opens longitudinally, a 5- or 6-parted corolla which is longer than the calyx, and stamens affixed to the base of the corolla. They are erect or creeping herbs, with entire leaves, which are opposite, alternate, or whorled, and yellow, white, or rose-colored flowers, generally solitary in the axils or in racemes. About 70 species are known, natives of the temperate and subtropical regions of the northern hemisphere, tropical and southern Africa, Australia, and South America. (See loosestrife.) The European L. nemorum is the yellow pimpernel. L. Nummularia, the moneywort, also called creeping-jenny, herb-twopence, etc., is a trailing vine with roundish leaves and bright-yellow flowers, common in Europe, and often planted in baskets, rockwork, etc., in America; L. quadrifolia, sometimes called crosswort, is a delicate and handsome American species. Tournefort, 1700, adopted by Linnæus.

Lysimachieæ (lis-i-mā-kī'ē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Endlicher, 1836), < Lysimachia + -eæ.] A tribe of plants of the order Primulaceæ, the primrose family, of which Lysimachia is the type, characterized by the lobes of the regular corolla being convolute in estivation, the stamens inserted on the petals, a superior ovary, and semi-anatropous ovules. It embraces 11 genera and about 92 species, principally natives of temperate and subtropical regions.

lysimachust (lī-sim'a-kus), n. [See Lysimachia.] Loosestrife.

> Yellow lysimachus, to give sweet rest
> To the faint shepherd, killing, where it comes,
> All busy gnats, and every fly that hums.
> Fletcher, Faithful Shepherdess, ii. 2.

★ lysimeter (lī-sim'e-tėr), n. [< Gr. λύσις, a dissolving, + μέτρον, a measure.] An instrument for measuring the natural percolation of rain through a given depth of soil.

Lysippan (lī-sip'an), a. [< L. Lysippus, < Gr. Λύσιππος, < λύειν (λυσι-), loose, + ἵππος, a horse.] Of or pertaining to the ancient Greek sculptor Lysippus, of Sicyon, who flourished between 372 and 316 B. C., or to the school of art founded by him. The works of this school are characterized by abandonment of the dignified repose of earlier sculptures, and by the portrayal of action and muscular strain and power and the personal element, or portraiture, as distinguished from the ideal. (See pathos.) Lysippus made the proportions of his statues more slender than those of his predecessors' works, the heads being notably smaller. His figure called the Apoxyomenos, or athlete using the strigil, of which a good copy is preserved in the Vatican, is identified as his celebrated canon, or exemplar of the perfect human figure, and is to be paralleled with the widely different proportions of the Doryphorus, the canon of Polycletus. The followers of Lysippus exaggerated the faults of his tendency, and leaned toward the extraordinary and pretentious. See Hellenistic, and compare doryphorus.

The Lysippan Canon.— The Apoxyomenos, or Athlete using the Strigil. (Vatican Museum.)

Lysippian (lī-sip'i-an), a. Same as Lysippan.

★ Lysippic (lī-sip'ik), a. Same as Lysippan.

lysis (lī'sis), n. [L., < Gr. λύσις, a loosening, < λύειν, loose: see loose.] 1. In med., the gradual recession of a disease, as distinguished from crisis, in which the change for the better is more abrupt.—2. In arch., a plinth or step above the cornice of the podium of some Roman temples. When present in a columnar edifice, it constitutes the stylobate proper.

Lysodactylæ (lī-sō-dak'ti-lē), n. pl. [NL., prop. Lysidactylæ*, < Gr. λύειν (λυσι-), loose, + δάκτυλος, finger, toe.] In Sundevall's classification of birds, a superfamily of scutelliplantar Passeres, represented by the family of tyrant flycatchers or Tyrannidæ: a division of the Exaspideæ, as distinguished from those which are called Syndactylæ.

Lysopteri (lī-sop'tę-rī), n. pl. [< Gr. λύειν (λυσι-), loose, + πτερόν, wing.] An order of extinct ganoid fishes, containing the platysomids and paleoniscids, characterized as actinopterous fishes with the median fin-rays not joined to the interhemal and interneural bones and not coinciding with them in number, and with no suboperculum. Heterocerci is a synonym. E. D. Cope, Amer. Nat., XIV. 439.

lysopterous (lī-sop'tę-rus), a. Pertaining to the Lysopteri, or having their characters.

lyssa (lis'ä), n. [NL., < Gr. λύσσα, Attic λύττα, raving, frenzy, madness (of persons and dogs).] Canine madness; rabies; hydrophobia.

Lyssacina (lis-a-sī'nä), n. pl. [NL.] A suborder of hexactinellid silicious sponges with isolated or irregularly cemented spicules: contrasted with Dictyonina. Also Lyssakina.

lyssacine (lis'a-sin), a. Having isolated spicules, as a sponge; specifically, of or pertaining to the Lyssacina. Also lyssakine.

lysshet, v. An uncertain word, occurring in the following passage. If the form lyssheth is correct, it is probably a variant of lussheth, from *lush*2, in a sense like flout; otherwise lyssheth may be a scribal error for lysheth, 'laugheth.'

> She lyssheth and scorneth the wepynges of hem the which she hath makyd wepe with hir fre wille.
> Chaucer, Boëthius, ii. meter 1.

lyssophobia (lis-ō-fō'bi-ä), n. [NL., < Gr. λύσσα, canine madness, + φόβος, fear.] A nervous state produced by morbid dread of having contracted rabies.

lyst†. An obsolete form of *list*1, *list*2, etc.

Lystra (lis'trä), n. [NL. (Fabricius, 1783), < L. Lystra, < Gr. Λύστρα, a city in Lycaonia.] A genus of lantern-flies of the family Fulgoridæ, containing about 15 beautiful and highly colored tropical species, as the South American L. lanata, the woolly lantern-fly, so called because it secretes long strings of a waxy substance which looks like wool.

lyte†, a. and n. See *lite*1 lytel†, a. and adv. An obsolete form of little.

lyterian (lī-tē'ri-an), a. [< Gr. λυτήριος, loosing, delivering, < λυτήρ, a deliverer, < λύειν, loose: see lysis.] In med., terminating a disease; indicating the solution of a disease.

lyth†, n. See lithe.

lythe1†, a. and v. An obsolete form of *lithe*1.

lythe2 (līŦH), n. [Also laithe, laits; origin obscure.] The coalfish. [Scotch and North. Eng.]

> The small boat was cleverly run alongside the jetty, . . . and Miss Sheila, with a heavy string of lythe in her right hand, stepped, laughing and blushing, onto the quay.
> W. Black, Princess of Thule, ii.

lyther†, a. See *lither*1.

Lythraceæ (lith-rā'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Lindley, 1836), < Lythrum + -aceæ.] A family of dicotyledonous choripetalous plants, the loosestrife family, belonging to the order Myrtales. It is characterized by valvate calyx-lobes, petals usually wrinkled, and an ovary which is generally free, with from two to an indefinite number of cells, the latter with numerous ovules. They are herbs, shrubs, or trees, with entire leaves, opposite on the stem or rarely alternate. The family embraces 2 tribes, Lythreæ and Nesæeæ, about 24 genera and 450 species, the majority of which are natives of the tropics, especially in America; a few are found in temperate regions or dispersed throughout the world. Important genera are Parsonsia, Lagerstræmia, and Lythrum.

lythraceous (lith-rā'shius), a. [NL. Lythrum + -aceous.] Pertaining to the family Lythraceæ, or having their characters.

lythrad (lith'rad), n. Any plant of the loosestrife family, Lythraceæ.

Lythreæ (lith'rē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Lindley, 1846), < Lythrum + -eæ.] A tribe of dicotyledonous choripetalous plants of the family Lythraceæ, the loosestrife family, consisting of shrubs or trees, rarely herbs, characterized by a herbaceous or coriaceous calyx, which is usually many-ribbed, and flowers generally large and almost always with wrinkled petals. The tribe embraces 12 genera and over 358 species. Most of the important genera of the family belong to this tribe.

Lythrum (lith'rum), n. [NL. (Linnæus, 1753), so called in allusion to the purple color of most of the flowers; < Gr. λύθρον, λύθρος, gore.] A genus of dicotyledonous choripetalous plants of the family Lythraceæ and the tribe Lythreæ. It is characterized by a straight striate calyx having from 8 to 16 teeth, with minute intermediate teeth; from 4 to 8 petals; and a two-celled capsule with longitudinal placentæ, both ovary and capsule being wholly included in the tube of the calyx. They are herbs or small shrubs, with entire, generally opposite leaves, and purple or rose-colored, rarely white, flowers, either solitary in the axils of the leaves or in few-flowered cymes. The genus includes about 24 species, found in all parts of the world. It shares with Lysimachia the name of loosestrife, and sometimes with Epilobium the name of willow-herb. The best-known species is L. Salicaria, the purple or spiked loosestrife. See loosestrife.

lytle†, a. and adv. An obsolete form of little.

lytta (lit'ä), n. [NL., < Gr. λίττα, λίσσα, frenzy, rage, canine madness; also the 'worm' under a dog's tongue, supposed to produce madness: see lyssa.] 1. A long vermiform rod of cartilage or fibrous tissue in the middle line and under surface of the tongue of a carnivore; the glossohyal of a carnivore; the so-called "worm" of a dog's tongue. It is vulgarly supposed to be a parasite, and is often extracted by dog-fanciers. Compare lyssa. 2. [cap.] A Fabrician genus of Coleoptera: same as Cantharis.

lyvert, n. An obsolete form of *liver*2.

lyveret†, n. An obsolete form of leveret.

lyverey†, n. An obsolete form of *livery*2.

M

1. The thirteenth letter and tenth consonant in the English alphabet. It had a corresponding position in the Latin and Greek alphabets, and in their source, the Phenician. The conspectus of forms in these three alphabets, with the Egyptian characters from which many believe the M to be derived (see A), is as follows:

Egyptian. Hieroglyphic. | Hieratic. | Phenician. | Early Greek and Latin.

M represents a labial nasal sound, the corresponding nasal to b and p, as n to d and t, and ng to g and k. That is to say, in its production the lips are pressed together, or form a mute closure, as in p and b, and the vocal chords are set in sonant vibration, as in b; but the passage from the pharynx into the nose is open, so that the tone rings in the nasal as well as in the oral cavity, and this gives the peculiar quality which we term nasal. (See nasal.) Since the nose is incapable of complete closure (except by external means, as the fingers), the sound thus produced is resonant and continuable, and hence m and n are ordinarily reckoned as semivocal, or liquid, or the like. But m does not win, like n, an actual vowel value in English syllabication; though in vulgar pronunciation words like elm, spasm, etc., are sometimes resolved into el-um, spaz-um, etc. The sound m, especially as initial, is a very stable element in Indo-European language-history: compare mean[1], mind, Latin mens, Greek μένος, Sanskrit √ man; or mother, oldest traceable form mātar (compared with the altered father, brother, oldest pātar, bhrātar). M has no varieties of pronunciation, and is silent only in a few foreign words, as mnemonic; it is doubled under the same circumstances as the consonants in general, as in dimmer, dimming, dimmed, etc., from dim.

2. As a numeral, in the Roman system, M denotes 1,000. With a dash or stroke over it (M̄), it stands for a thousand times a thousand, or 1,000,000.—3. As a symbol: (a) In the mnemonic words of logic (see mood[2]), m indicates a transposition (metathesis) of the premises in the reduction. (b) Formerly, M was a brand impressed on one convicted of manslaughter and admitted to the benefit of clergy.—4. As an abbreviation: (a) In titles, M. stands for Magister or Master, as in A. M.; for Medicinæ or Medicine, as in M. D.; or for Member, as in M. C., member of Congress, and M. P., member of Parliament. (b) In mech., m. stands for mass. (c) In dental formulæ, in zoöl., m. stands for molar, and dm. for deciduous molar. (d) In math., M or μ stands for modulus; in higher geom., m or μ for the degree of a curve. (e) In astron. and metrol., m. stands for minute (of time), and for meter; mm. for millimeter; and μ for micron or micromillimeter. (f) In musical notation, M. stands for mano (main), mezzo, metronome, and in organ-music for manual. See M. D., M. M., M. S. (g) In a ship's log-book, m. is an abbreviation of mist.—5. In printing, the square or quadrate of any body of type: more commonly spelled out, em (which see).—To have an M under (or by) the girdle†, to have the courtesy of addressing by the title Mr., Miss, Mrs., etc.; show due respect by using the titles Mr., Mrs., etc. [Colloq.]

> Miss. The devil take you, Neverout! besides all small curses.
>
> Lady A. Marry, come up! What, plain Neverout! methinks you might have an M under your girdle, miss.
>
> Swift, Polite Conversation, i.

ma[1]†, a. and adv. A Middle English form of mo.

ma[2] (mä), n. [A childish name, usually mama: see mama.] A shorter or childish form of mama.

ma[3] (mä), conj. [It. (= F. mais), but, < L. magis, more: see magister.] In music, but: used especially in the phrase ma non troppo, but not too much, to limit various indications of musical tempo and style, as allegro ma non troppo, quick, but not too much so, etc.

ma[4] (mä), n. [Polynesian.] A sling used by Polynesian islanders, made from finely braided fibers of cocoanut-husk or of similar material.

M. A. See A. M. (a).

maa (mä), n. A dialectal form of mew[1]. [Shetland.]

maad†. An obsolete past participle of make[1]. Chaucer.

maalin (mä'lin), n. A dialectal form of merlin. [Shetland.]

★ma'am (mäm), n. [Also mam, vulgarly marm, mum; contr. of madam.] A common colloquial contraction of madam, used especially in answers, after yes and no, or interrogatively, when one expects or has not distinctly heard a question.

ma'am-school (mäm'sköl), n. A school kept by a woman; a dame-school. [New Eng.]

> I found a girl some eighteen years old keeping a ma'am-school for about twenty scholars.
>
> S. G. Goodrich, Recollections of a Lifetime, iv.

maat†, a. A form of mate[2]. Chaucer.

mab (mab), n. [A dial. var. of mob[1].] A slattern. [Prov. Eng.]

mab (mab), v. i.; pret. and pp. mabbed, ppr. mabbing. [A dial. var. of mob[1]; cf. mab, n.] To dress negligently; be slatternly. [Prov. Eng.]

Maba (mā'bä), n. [NL. (J. R. Forster, 1776), the name of the plant in Tonga-Tabu.] A genus of dicotyledonous sympetalous plants belonging to the Diospyraceæ, or ebony family, characterized by dicœcious flowers, almost always three-parted, from three to an indefinite number of stamens, and three styles, sometimes united below. They are shrubs or trees, usually of very hard wood, with small entire leaves, and flowers either solitary or in cymes. About seventy species are known, natives of the warm regions of the globe. The ebony-wood of Cochin-China and Coromandel is believed to be the product of a tree of this genus. M. geminata and M. laurina, called Queensland ebony, furnish, with other species of the region, desirable substitutes for ebony. M. buxifolia has been called East Indian satinwood. The genus is found in a fossil state in many Tertiary deposits, the fruiting calyx on its peduncle being all that is usually preserved. Eight species are thus known. They have been described under the name Macreightia, now regarded as a section of Maba. One of these fossil species occurs in Colorado.

mabblet†, v. t. A variant of mobble[2].

mabby (mab'i), n. [< Carib mabi: see mabi, in the supplement, and mobby.] Same as mobby, 1.

Mac. [< Gael. mac = Ir. mac = W. map, mab, also ap, ab, a son, = Goth. magus, a son: see may[2]. Cf. ap.] An element, usually a conjoined prefix, in many Scotch and Irish names of Celtic origin, cognate with the Welsh Ap-, signifying 'son,' and being thus equivalent to the Irish O', the English -son or -s, and the Norman Fitz-. The prefix is either written in full, Mac-, or abbreviated to Mc- or M'-, which in works printed in the British Isles almost invariably appears as M'- — the contracted form being followed by a capital letter, while Mac- takes a capital after it but rarely. Thus a name may be variously spelled as Macdonald (rarely MacDonald), M'Donald, or McDonald; so Mackenzie, M'Kenzie, or McKenzie, etc. In catalogues, directories, etc., names with this prefix, whether written Mac-, M'-, or Mc-, are commonly entered in the alphabetical place of Mac-. Sometimes used separately for persons whose names begin with this prefix.

> The Fitzes sometimes permitted themselves to speak with scorn of the O's and Macs, and the O's and Macs sometimes repaid that scorn with aversion. Macaulay.

Macaberesque (ma-kā-bėr-esk'), a. [< Macaber (see def.) + -esque. Cf. ML. Machabæorum chorea, as if the 'dance of the Maccabees.'] Pertaining to or of the character of the so-called "Dance of Death," a favorite subject in the literature, art, and pantomime of Europe in the middle ages and early Renaissance: apparently based on a series of dialogues of death attributed to Macaber, an old German poet of whom nothing is known. See dance of death, under dance.

macaco[1] (ma-kā'kō), n. [Also macauco: F. (Buffon) mococo. Perhaps the same as macaco[2]. See maki.] 1. The ring-tailed lemur, the species of Lemur earliest known, described under this name by Buffon; the L. catta of Linnæus.—2. The technical specific name of the ruffed lemur, L. macaco. Hence—3. Any lemur; a maki.—4. The so-called yellow lemur or kinkajou, Cercoleptes caudivolvulus: a misnomer. See cut under kinkajou.

macaco[2] (ma-kā'kō), n. [Formerly macaquo, etc.; Pg. macaco: said to be of African (Kongo) origin. Marcgrave. Poss. Tupi macaca, carried to the Kongo by the Portuguese.] A macaque. See Macacus.

macaco-worm (ma-kā'kō-wėrm), n. [macaco[2] + worm.] The larva of a dipterous insect of South America, Dermatobia noxialis, which infests the skin of animals, including man.

Macacus (ma-kā'kus), n. [NL. (F. Cuvier) (Macaca, Lacépède, 1801): see macaco[2].] A genus of old world catarrhine monkeys of the family Cercopithecidæ or Cynopithecidæ; the macaques. The genus formerly included monkeys between the doucs (Semnopithecinæ) and the baboons or drills (Cynocephalinæ). It was next restricted to species inhabiting the Last Indies, having cheek-pouches, ischial callosities, and a fifth tubercle on the back molar, such as the wanderoo (M. silenus), the bonnet-macaque (M. sinicus), the rhesus monkey (M. rhesus), the common toque (M. cynomolgus), etc. It is now restricted to species resembling the last-named. The leading genera which have been dissociated from Macacus are Cercocebus, Inuus, Theropithecus, Cynopithecus, and Cercopithecus.

★macadam (mak-ad'am), n. [Short for Macadam pavement: see macadamize.] Macadamized pavement.

> There are many varieties of pavement in London, from primitive macadam to the noiseless asphalte.
> Contemporary Rev., LIV. 432.

Macadamia (mak-a-dā'mi-ä), n. [NL. (F. von Müller, 1857), named after John Mac Adam.] A genus of dicotyledonous apetalous plants belonging to the family Proteaceæ and the tribe Grevilleæ, characterized by having two pendulous ovules, seeds with unequal and fleshy cotyledons, anthers on short filaments inserted a little below the laminæ, and a ring-like four-lobed or four-parted disk. There is only one species, M. ternifolia, the Queensland nut-tree. It is a small tree with a dense foliage made up of whorled serrate leaves, and flowers pedicellate in pairs, in terminal or axillary racemes, the pedicels not connate. The trees of this species produce a firm, fine-grained wood, and an edible nut with the taste of hazel, an inch or more in diameter.

macadamization (mak-ad″am-i-zā'shon), n. [< macadamize + -ation.] The process of laying carriage-roads according to the system of John Loudon Macadam, a Scottish engineer (1756–1836), who carried it out very extensively in England. In the common process, the top soil of the roadway is removed to the depth of 14 inches. Coarse cracked stone is then laid in to a depth of 7 inches, and the interstices and surface-depressions are filled with fine cracked stones. Over these as a bed is placed a layer 7 inches deep of road-metal or broken stone, of which no piece is larger than ½ inches in diameter. This is rolled down with heavy steam- or horse-rollers, and the top is finished with stone crushed to dust and rolled smooth. Also spelled macadamisation.

macadamize (mak-ad'am-īz), v. t.; pret. and pp. macadamized, ppr. macadamizing. [< Macadam, the name of the inventor, + -ize. The F. macadamiser is from E.] To cover (a road or path) with a layer of broken road-metal. See macadamization. Also spelled macadamise.

macadamizer (mak-ad'am-ī-zėr), n. One who lays macadamized roads. Also spelled macadamiser.

Macaja butter. See Cocos.

macaque (ma-kak'), n. [< F. macaque, < macaco, macaquo, a native name: see macaco[2], Macacus.] A monkey of the genus Macacus; one of the several kinds of monkeys coming between baboons and the African mangabeys. The term has undergone the same restriction of meaning as Macacus; and most of the macaques, in a former sense of the word, have received special names. The Javan macaque, M. cynomolgus, with beetling brows and tail about as long as the body, is a fair example of the arboreal forms. The munga, M. sinicus of India, is known as the bonnet-macaque, from the top-knot which parts in the middle. The bunder, or rhesus macaque, M. rhesus, is a very common Indian species. The bruh, or pig-tailed macaque, M. nemestrinus, is a long-limbed form inhabiting Tenasserim, with the tail of moderate length. In the Celebes black macaque, M. maurus, the tail is a mere stump. Some of these monkeys reach the snow-line in Tibet, as M. thibetanus. A remarkable species, the wanderoo, M. silenus, with a tufted tail and the face set in an enormous frill of long gray hair, inhabits Malabar. Sometimes spelled macake.

Macaria (mā-kā′ri-ạ), n. [NL., < Gr. μακάριος, μάκαρ, blessed, happy.] In zoöl., a name of various genera. (a) A genus of spiders. Koch, 1795. (b) The typical genus of Macariidæ or Macariinæ, erected by Curtis in 1826. They are delicate, slender-bodied moths of grayish color, whose larvæ are slender with heart-shaped head. It is a large and wide-spread genus, occurring abundantly in Europe and America. M. liturata is the tawny-barred angle of English collectors, to whom M. notata is known as the small peacock-moth. (c) A genus of ladybirds or coccinellids, confined to South America, having the third and fifth joints of the antennæ very small. Also Micaria. Dejean, 1834.

Macarian (mā-kā′ri-ạn), a. [< Macarius (see def.) (< Gr. μακάριος, blessed) + -an.] 1. A follower of the monastic system or customs of the elder Macarius of Egypt, or of the younger Macarius of Alexandria, contemporary monks of the fourth century, who were noted for their severe asceticism.—2. A follower of the Monothelite Macarius, patriarch of Antioch in the seventh century.

Macariidæ (mak-ạ-rī′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Macaria + -idæ.] A family of geometrid moths, typified by the genus Macaria. Also called Macaridæ. They are also classed as a subfamily, Macariinæ, of Geometridæ.

macarism (mak′ạ-rizm), n. [< Gr. μακαρισμός, blessing, < μακαρίζειν, bless.] A beatitude. J. A. Alexander, Commentary on Matthew, p. 110.

macarize (mak′ạ-rīz), v. t.; pret. and pp. macarized, ppr. macarizing. [< Gr. μακαρίζειν, bless, pronounce happy, < μάκαρ, blessed, happy.] To bless; pronounce happy; wish joy to; congratulate. [Rare.]

The word macarize has been adopted by Oxford men who are familiar with Aristotle, to supply a word wanting in our language. "Felicitate" and "congratulate" are (in actual usage) confined to events. . . . It may be said that men are admired for what they are, commended for what they do, and macarized for what they have.
Whately, On Bacon's Essay on Praise (ed. 1887).

★ macaroni (mak-ạ-rō′ni), n. and a. [Formerly also maccaroni, mackeroni, macheroni; = F. macaroni = Sp. macarrones = Pg. macarrão, < OIt. maccaroni, It. maccheroni, macaroni, orig. a mixture of flour, cheese, and butter, prob. < maccare, bruise, batter, < L. macerare, macerate: see macerate. Cf. macaroon, from the same source. In ref. to the secondary uses of the word (cf. It. maccarone, now maccherone, a fool, blockhead), it is to be noted that it is common to name a droll fellow, regarded as typical of his country, after some favorite article of food, as E. Jack-pudding, G. Hanswurst ('Jack Sausage'), F. Jean Farine ('Jack Flour').] I. n. 1. A kind of paste or dough prepared, originally and chiefly in Italy, from the glutinous granular flour of hard varieties of wheat, pressed into long tubes or pipes through the perforated bottom of a vessel furnished with mandrels, and afterward dried in the sun or by low heat. The same material, called Italian paste, is also made into a thread-like product called vermicelli, and into sticks, lozenges, disks, ribbons, etc. Macaroni cooked in various ways, constitutes a leading article of food in Italy, especially in Naples and Genoa, and it is much used elsewhere. Imitations of it are made in other countries from ordinary flour, which is much less suitable.

He doth learn to make strange sauces, to eat anchovies, maccaroni, bovoli, fagioli, and caviare.
B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, ii. 1.

2. A medley; something extravagant or calculated to please an idle fancy.—3†. A London exquisite of the eighteenth century; a fop; a dandy; a member of the Macaroni Club. See II., 1.

Macaroni and Lady in dress of 1770–1775.

Lady Falkener's daughter is to be married to a young rich Mr. Crewe, a macarone, and of our loo.
Walpole, To Hertford, May 27, 1764.

You are a delicate Londoner; you are a macaroni; you can't ride. Boswell, Tour to Hebrides, p. 84.

Sure never were seen two such beautiful ponies;
Other horses are clowns, but these macaronies.
Sheridan, School for Scandal, ii. 2.

[Hence arose the use of the word in the contemporary doggerel of "Yankee Doodle"—

[He] stuck a feather in his cap,
And called it macaroni— and its application as a name, in the American revolution, to a body of Maryland troops remarkable for their showy uniforms.]

4. A crested penguin or rock-hopper: a sailors' name. See penguin, and cut under Eudyptes.

II.† a. 1. Consisting of gay or stylish young men: specifically [cap.] applied to a London club, founded about the middle of the eighteenth century, composed of young men who had traveled and sought to introduce elegances of dress and bearing from the continent.

On Saturday, at the Maccaroni Club (which is composed of all the travelled young men who wear long curls and spying-glasses) they played again.
Walpole, To Hertford, Feb. 6, 1764.

2. Of or pertaining to macaronis or fops; exquisite.

Ye travell'd tribe, ye macaroni train,
Of French friseurs and nosegays justly vain.
Goldsmith, Epilogue spoken by Mrs. Bulkley and Miss [Catley.

Daft gowk in macaroni dress,
Are ye come here to shaw your face?
Fergusson, On seeing a Butterfly in the Street.

macaronian (mak-ạ-rō′ni-ạn), a. and n. [< macaroni + -an.] Same as macaronic.

macaronic (mak-ạ-ron′ik), a. and n. [= F. macaronique = Sp. macarrónico = Pg. macarronico = It. maccheronico; as macaroni + -ic.] I. a. 1. Of or pertaining to the food macaroni.—2†. Pertaining to or like a macaroni or fop; hence, trifling; vain; affected.—3. In lit., using, or characterized by the use of, many strange, distorted, or foreign words or forms, with little regard to syntax, yet with sufficient analogy to common words and constructions to be or seem intelligible: as, a macaronic poet; macaronic verse. Specifically, macaronic verse or poetry is a kind of burlesque verse in which words of another language are mingled with Latin words, or are made to figure with Latin terminations and in Latin constructions. The term was brought into vogue by the popular satirical works in this style of the Mantuan Teofilo Folengo (died 1544). It is probable that this use of the word has reference to the varied ingredients which enter into the preparation of a dish of macaroni.

A macaronic stage seems very often to mark the decline of an old literature and language, in countries exposed to powerful foreign influences.
G. P. Marsh, Lects. on Eng. Lang., v.

II. n. 1. A confused heap or mixture of several things. Cotgrave.—2. Macaronic verse.

tion of medieval machicolated construction, without openings.

machicoulis (ma-shi-kö'lē), n. [< F. máchicoulis, máchecoulis, OF. maschecoulis (in ML. machicollamentum), prob. < masche, F. mâche, mash (melted matter) (cf. machefer, iron-dross, slag), + coulis, a flowing: see mash[1] and cullis[1].] Same as machicolation.

machina (mak'i-nä), n. [L.: see machine.] A machine: used only as a Latin word.—Deus ex machina. See machine, 5.—Machina Electrica, an obsolete constellation, formed by Bode in 1797 out of parts of the Whale, Sculptor, Fornax and Phœnix, and intended to represent an electrical machine.

machinal (mak'i-nal), a. [< L. machinalis, pertaining to machines, < machina, a machine: see machine.] Pertaining to a machine or machines. Bailey.

machinate (mak'i-nāt), v.; pret. and pp. machinated, ppr. machinating. [< L. machinatus, pp. of machinari (> OF. F. machiner, > E. machine: see machine, v.), contrive, plan, devise, plot, scheme, < machina, a machine, contrivance, device, scheme: see machine.] I. trans. To plan, contrive, or form, as a plot or scheme: as, to machinate mischief.

Such was the perfidiousness of our wicked and restless Countrymen at home, who, being often receiv'd into our Protection, ceas'd not however to machinate new Disturbances. Milton, Letters of State, June, 1658.

II. intrans. To lay plots or schemes.

Though that enemy shall not overthrow it, yet because it plots, and works, and machinates, and would overthrow it, this is a defect in that peace. Donne, Sermons, xii.

machination (mak-i-nā'shon), n. [= OF. machinacion, F. machination = Pr. machinacion = Sp. maquinación = Pg. maquinação = It. macchinazione, < L. machinatio(n-), < machinari, contrive: see machinate.] 1. The act of machinating, or of contriving a scheme for executing some purpose, particularly a forbidden or an evil purpose; underhand plotting or contrivance.—2. That which is planned or contrived; a plot; an artful design formed with deliberation; especially, a hostile or treacherous scheme.

machinator (mak'i-nā-tor), n. [= F. machinateur = Sp. Pg. maquinador = It. macchinatore, < L. machinator, a contriver, inventor, < machinari, contrive: see machinate.] One who machinates; one who schemes with evil designs.

He hath become an active and earnest agitator, a murmurer and a machinator. Scott, Ivanhoe, xxxv.

★machine (ma-shēn'), n. [= D. machine = G. maschine = Dan. maskine = Sw. maskin, < F. machine = Sp. máquina = Pg. maquina, machina = It. macchina = Turk. makina, < L. machina, a machine, engine, contrivance, device, stratagem, trick, < Gr. μηχανή, a machine, engine, contrivance, device; cf. μῆχος, means. Perhaps akin to AS. macian, E. make: see make[1]. Cf. mechanic, etc.] 1. An engine; an instrument of force.

With inward arms the dire machine [wooden horse] they load. Dryden, Æneid, ii. 25.

2. In mech., in general, any instrument for the conversion of motion. Thus, a machine may be designed to change rapid motion into slow motion, as a crowbar; or it may be intended to convert a reciprocating rectilinear motion into a uniform circular motion, etc. The lever, the wedge, the wheel and axle, the pulley, the screw, and the inclined plane are termed the simple machines. In practical mechanics the word has a restricted meaning: a single device, as a hammer, chisel, crowbar, or saw, or a very simple combination of moving parts, as tongs, shears, pincers, etc., for manual use, although comprised in the strict technical definition of machine, is always called a tool (which see); a device for applying or converting natural molar motion, like that of falling water, or of winds (as a water-wheel or windmill), or for converting molecular motion into molar motion (as a steam-engine, gas-engine, air-engine, or electric engine), is more generally, though not uniformly, called a motor. The distinction between the words tool and machine becomes quite indefinite with increased complication of parts. Such machines as are used in shaping materials in the construction of the parts of other machines, and many of those which perform work, such as sawing, boring, planing, riveting, etc., formerly done only by hand and still performed manually to a greater or less extent, are variously called machines, machine-tools, engine-tools, or simply tools, although their structure may involve much complexity; the terms machine-tool and engine-tool are more frequently employed, the latter being preferable as being more in accord with best usage. Machines receive general or special names from the work they perform or are designed to execute, either with reference to departments of the arts or of industry, as agricultural machines, hydraulic machines, wood-working machines, etc., or to their specific work, as planing-machines, sawing-machines, mowing-machines, etc.

This science will define a machine to be, not, as usual, an instrument by means of which we may change the direction and intensity of a given force, but an instrument by means of which we may change the direction and velocity of a given motion. Ampère, tr. by Willis.

3. A vehicle or conveyance, such as a coach, cab, gig, tricycle, bicycle, etc. [Great Britain.]

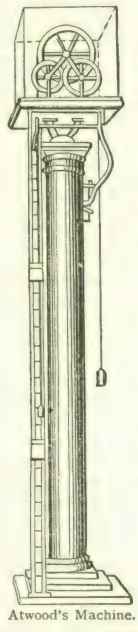
A pair of bootikins will set out to-morrow morning in the machine that goes from the Queen's Head in the Gray's Inn Lane. Walpole, Letters, IV. 12. (Davies.)

He had taken a seat in the Portsmouth machine, and proposed to go to the Isle of Wight.
Thackeray, Virginians, lxii.

4. A fire-engine. [Colloq., U. S.]—5. In the ancient theater, one of a number of contrivances in use for indicating a change of scene, as a rotating prism with different conventional scenery painted on its three sides, or a device for expressing a descent to the infernal regions, as the "Charonian steps," for representing the passage of a god through the air across the stage (whence the dictum deus ex machina, applied to the mock supernatural or providential), etc. Such machines were very numerous in the fully developed Greek theater, and were copied in the Roman.

Juno and Iris descend in different Machines: Juno in a Chariot drawn by Peacocks; Iris on a Rainbow.
Congreve, Semele, ii. 1.

6. A literary contrivance for the working out of a plot; a supernatural agency, or artificial action, introduced into a poem or tale; machinery. [Archaic.]



His [Milton's] design is the losing of our happiness; . . . his heavenly machines are many, and his human persons are but two. Dryden, Orig. and Prog. of Satire.

7. Any organization by which power not mechanical is applied and made effective; the whole complex system by which any organization or institution is carried on: as, the vital machine; the machine of government.

Thine evermore, most dear lady, whilst this machine is to him, HAMLET. Shak., Hamlet, ii. 2. 124.

The human body, like all living bodies, is a machine all the operations of which will, sooner or later, be explained on physical principles. Huxley, Lay Sermons, p. 339.

8. A strict organization of the working members of a political party, which enables its managers, through the distribution of offices, careful local supervision, and systematic correspondence, to maintain control of conventions and elections, and to secure a predominating influence in the party for themselves and their associates for their own ends; also, the body of managers of such an organization. [U. S.]—Atwood's machine, an apparatus for illustrating uniformly accelerated motion, consisting of a pulley-wheel turning with very slight friction in a vertical plane and carrying a cord with equal weights suspended from its ends. In the common experiment there is an excess of weight at one end of the cord, due to a plate which rests on the weight and is caught when the latter passes through a fixed ring; the weight is set free from a state of rest at a measured position above this ring, so that the acceleration takes place through a known distance; and the velocity per second after the removal of the excess of weight is observed to be proportional to the square root of the distance through which the acceleration takes place. The machine is named from its inventor, George Atwood (1746–1807), an English mathematician.—Bulldog machine, a combined sounding- and dredging-machine invented during the voyage of H. M. S. Bulldog in 1860, under the command of Sir Francis Leopold M'Clintock. It is an adaptation of Sir John Ross's deep-sea clam, with the addition of Brooke's principle of the disengaging weight. The chief credit of the invention is given to Mr. Steil, assistant engineer on board the Bulldog.—Centrifugal machine. See centrifugal.—Duck machine, in Cornwall, a kind of ventilating-machine on the same principle as the ordinary blowing-engine, furnished with a piston and valves, and usually worked by the pump-rod. Also called Hartz blower.—Dynamo-electric machine. See electric machine, under electric.—Effect of a machine. See effect.—Electric, funicular, geocyclic machine. See the adjectives.—Extemporizing-machine. See extemporize.—Holtz machine. See electric machine, under electric.—Hungarian, hydro-electric, infernal, etc., machine. See the adjectives.—Logical machine, a machine which, being fed with premises, produces the necessary conclusions from them. The earliest instrument of this kind was the demonstrator of Charles, third Earl Stanhope; the most perfect is that of Professor Allan Marquand, which gives all inferences turning upon the logical relations of classes. The value of logical machines seems to lie in their showing how far reasoning is a mechanical process, and how far it calls for acts of observation. Calculating-machines are specialized logical machines.—Reduced inertia of a machine, according to Rankine, the weight which, concentrated at the driving-point, would have the same energy as the machine itself.—To run with the machine, to accompany a fire-engine to a fire, either as a member of the fire company or as a hanger-on: a phrase used when the members of fire-companies (in large cities) were volunteers, and service at fires was gratuitous. [U. S.]

machine (ma-shēn'), v.; pret. and pp. machined, ppr. machining. [< OF. machiner, F. machiner = Pr. machinar = Sp. Pg. maquinar = It. macchinare, < L. machinari, ML. also machinare, contrive, plan, devise, etc., < L. machina, a machine, contrivance: see machine, n. Cf. machinate.] I. trans. 1†. To contrive. Palsgrave. (Halliwell.)—2. To apply machinery to; form or effect by the aid of machinery; especially, to tool or finish by means of a machine.

This side then serves as a basis from which the body may be machined square and true.
W. W. Greener, The Gun, p. 240.

3. To furnish with the machinery of a plot.

It is not, as a story, very cunningly machined.
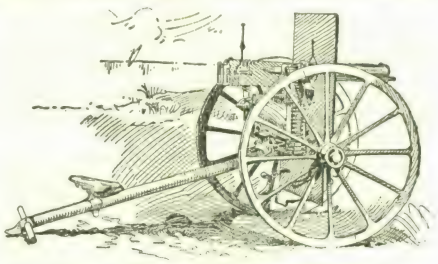
The Academy, June 1, 1889, p. 374.

II. intrans. 1. To be employed upon or in machinery.—2. To act as or in the machinery of a drama; serve as the machine or effective agency in a literary plot.



The stage with rushes or with leaves they strew'd;
No scenes in prospect, no machining god.
Dryden, tr. of Ovid's Art of Love, i. 120.

machine-bolt (ma-shēn'bōlt), n. A bolt with a thread and a square or hexagonal head. E. H. Knight.

machine-boy (ma-shēn'boi), n. In English printing-offices, a boy who serves as helper to a machine-man. In the United States known as feeder or press-boy.

machineel (mach-i-nēl'), n. Same as manchineel.

machine-gun (ma-shēn'gun), n. A gun which, by means of a variously contrived mechanism, delivers a continuous fire of projectiles. Such a gun may have a single barrel, or a series of barrels arranged horizontally or about a central axis. Machine-guns may be divided into two classes: those firing small-arm ammunition (also called mitrailleuses), and those firing shot and shell (called revolving cannon). The rapidity of fire of the most rapid machine-guns of the first class is about 1,000 shots a minute. (See Gatling gun, under gun[1].)

Maxim Field-gun, with bullet-proof shield.

The Maxim gun is a single-barreled machine-gun invented by Sir Hiram Maxim (b. U. S. A., 1840). In it the force of recoil is utilized to load and prepare the next charge for firing, and a water-chamber surrounding the machinery keeps the parts cool. It is a very ingenious and efficient invention. The Lowell battery-gun has four barrels capable of being rotated by a lever, independently of the lock- and breech-mechanism. The firing is confined to one barrel at a time, until this becomes heated or disabled, when it may be rotated to one side in order to bring another barrel into action. One lock only is used. The Taylor machine-gun has five parallel barrels arranged horizontally. The Gardner machine-gun has two to five barrels arranged horizontally. Its mechanism is simple, strong, and effective, but it can fire only about 350 shots a minute. The Farwell machine gun consists of a group of ten steel barrels of 0.45 inch bore, each barrel having its own magazine, containing 30 cartridges. The operations of firing, extracting the empty shells, and reloading are accomplished by a single revolution of a crank. The Hotchkiss revolving cannon is the type of the second class of machine-guns. It combines the advantages of long-range shell-firing with rapidity of action. It has five barrels arranged around a central axis; and the breech is fixed and contains the loading-, firing-, and extracting-mechanism. The rotation is intermittent, and the loading, firing, and extraction of the empty shell are performed while the barrels are at rest. This gun fires from 30 to 80 rounds of explosive shells in a minute, thus delivering from 750 to 2,000 fragments of shell with sufficient force to destroy life. There are many forms of this gun, each designed for a special object. One form, designed for flank defense of the ditches of fortifications, has every barrel rifled with a different twist, so arranged as to produce five different cones of dispersion, thus sweeping the ditch from end to end. The Nordenfelt machine-gun was designed as a defense against torpedo boats. It is made with 2, 3, 4, 5, 7, 10, or 12 barrels, and it can fire either volleys or single barrels. In case a barrel becomes clogged or disabled, the supply of cartridges can be cut off from it and the firing continued with the other barrels. The Colt automatic machine-gun is a single-barreled gun in which the pressure of the powder gases, escaping through a small vent, actuates a lever which automatically puts in operation mechanism that withdraws the cartridge-case and reloads the gun. The cartridges are stripped from feed-belts.

machine-head (ma-shēn'hed), n. A rack and pinion sometimes used in stringed musical instruments, like the double-bass and the guitar, instead of the usual tuning-pegs.

machine-made (ma-shēn'mād), a. Made by a machine or by machinery.

machine-man (ma-shēn'man), n. In English printing-offices, the workman who manages or controls the operations of a printing-machine. In the United States known as the pressman.

machine-minder (ma-shēn'min-dėr), n. The man or boy who has charge of a printing-machine while it is in operation. [Eng.]

machine-oven (ma-shēn'uv″n), n. A bakers' oven, a fruit-evaporator, or an oven for any other use, fitted with a traveling apparatus, rotatory table, reel, or any other mechanical device for aiding the process of baking, or for economizing time or space.

machiner (ma-shē'nėr), n. A coach-horse; a horse that draws a stage-coach. [Eng.]

> Is it not known that steady old machiners, broken for years to double harness, will encourage and countenance their "flippant" progeny in kicking over the traces?
> Lawrence, Sword and Gown, xi.

machine-ruler (ma-shēn'rö-lėr), n. 1. A machine which lines or rules paper according to patterns.—2. A modification of this machine for subdividing accurately scales and the like.

machinery (ma-shē'ne-ri), n [< F. machinerie, machinery, < machine, machine: see machine, n.] 1. The parts of a machine considered collectively; any combination of mechanical means designed to work together so as to effect a given end: as, the machinery of a watch, or of a canal-lock.—2. Machines collectively; a congeries or assemblage of machines: as, the machinery of a cotton-mill is often moved by a single wheel.

> In an insurance policy, machinery includes tools and implements of manufacture.
> Buchanan v. Exchange Fire Ins. Co., 61 N. Y., 26.

> All kinds of labor-saving machinery are in fullest operation. W. M. Baker, New Timothy, p. 172.

3. Any complex system of means and appliances, not mechanical, designed to carry on any particular work, or keep anything in action, or to effect a specific purpose or end: as, the machinery of government.

> As lord and master of the Church he [Henry VIII.] could utilise Church machinery to obtain the divorce and the marriage on which he had set his king's heart.
> Stubbs, Medieval and Modern Hist., p. 254.

4. Specifically, the agencies, particularly if supernatural, by which the plot of an epic or dramatic poem, or other imaginative work, is carried on and conducted to the catastrophe.

> The machinery, Madam, is a term invented by the critics to signify that part which the Deities, Angels, or Dæmons are made to act in a Poem.
> Pope, Letter prefixed to R. of L.

> It is this kind of Machinery which fills the Poems both of Homer and Virgil with such Circumstances as are wonderful but not impossible. Addison, Spectator, No. 315.

Engaging and disengaging machinery. See engage.

machine-shop (ma-shēn'shop), n. A workshop in which machines or parts of machines are made and repaired.

machine-tool (ma-shēn'töl), n. A machine driven by water, steam, or other power, for performing operations formerly accomplished by means of hand-tools, as planing, drilling, sawing, etc., and taking its special name from the kind of work performed, as planing-machine, drilling-machine, etc. Also called engine-tool.

machine-twist (ma-shēn'twist), n. A three-cord silk thread made with a twist from right to left, intended especially for use in the sewing-machine.

machine-work (ma-shēn'wėrk), n. 1. Work done by a machine, as distinguished from that done by hand; specifically, in English printing-offices, press-work done on a machine, in distinction from press-work done on a hand-press.—2. The product of such work; articles manufactured wholly or chiefly by machinery.

machinist (ma-shē'nist), n. [< F. machiniste = Sp. Pg. maquinista = It. macchinista; as machine + -ist.] 1. A constructor of machines and engines, or one versed in the principles of machines; in a general sense, one who invents or constructs mechanical devices of any kind.

> Has the insufficiency of machinists hitherto disgraced the imagery of the poet? or is it in itself too sublime for scenical contrivances to keep pace with?
> Steevens, General Note on Macbeth.

2. One who tends or works a machine. [Rare.]—3. In the rating of the United States navy, an engine-room artificer or attendant.—4. In U. S. politics, an adherent of the machine, or a supporter of its methods. The Nation, XXXVI. 520.—5. In the history of art, one of those Italian painters of about the seventeenth century (a period of artistic decline) who worked mechanically or according to rigid rules.

> He [Franceschini] is reckoned among those painters of the decline of art to whom the general name of machinist is applied. Encyc. Brit., IX. 687.

machinize (ma-shē'nīz), v. t.; pret. and pp. machinized, ppr. machinizing. [< machine + -ize.] To bring into form or order like that of a machine, or by the use of machinery; elaborate or systematize.

> The Times newspaper, . . . by its immense correspondence and reporting, seems to have machinized the rest of the world for his [the traveler's] occasion.
> Emerson, English Traits, iii.

machinule (mak'i-nūl), n. [< NL. machinula, dim. of L. machina, a machine: see machine.] A surveyors' instrument for obtaining a right angle.

macno (mä'kō), n. A fish. Mugil curema, of the mullet family. [Florida.]

machopolyp (mak'ō-pol-ip), n. [< Gr. μάχη, fight, + πολύπους, a polyp: see polyp.] A defensive polypite; a hydroid zoöid which bears cnidocells or stinging-organs, as distinguished from an ordinary nutritive or reproductive zoöid.

macigno (mä-chē'nyō), n. [It.] A division of the Upper Eocene in the southern and southeastern Alps. It is a sandstone containing few fossils other than fucoids: the equivalent of the flysch.

macilency† (mas'i-len-si), n. [= F. macilence = It. macilenza; as macilen(t) + -cy.] The quality or condition of being macilent; leanness. ★Sandys, Ovid, Pref.

macilent† (mas'i-lent), a. [= Sp. Pg. It. macilento, < L. macilentus, lean, meager, < macere, be lean: see emaciate, meager.] Lean; thin; having little flesh.

> Lesse venerous then being macilent or lean.
> Topsell, Beasts (1607), p. 231.

macintosh, n. See mackintosh.

mack[1]† (mak), n. [< OF. macque, maque, make, var. of mace, a club: see mace[1].] A card-game of some kind.

> Att ale howse too sit, at mack or at mall,
> Tables or dyce, or that cardis men call,
> Or what oother game owte of season dwe,
> Let them be punysched without all rescue.
> Sir W. Forrest, quoted in Strutt's Sports and Pastimes, [p. 429.

mack[2] (mak), n. [Origin not ascertained.] A certain bird. See black-mack.

> One Curtius, . . . when he supped on a time with Augustus, toke vp a leane birde of the kinde of blacke mackes out of the dishe.
> Udall, tr. of Apophthegms of Erasmus, p. 274. (Davies.)

Mack[3]†, n. A corruption of Mary or perhaps of Mass (cf. mackin), used alone or (commonly) in the following phrase.—By (the) Mack, by the Virgin Mary (or the Mass).

> Is not my daughter Maudge as fine a mayd,
> And yet, by Mack, you see she troules the bowle.
> Historie of Albino and Bellama (1638), p. 130. (Nares.)

★mackerel[1] (mak'e-rel), n. [Formerly also mackrel, mackrell; = D. makreel = G. makrele = Dan. makrel = Sw. makrill = W. macrell = Ir. macreil, < OF. makerel, maquerel, maquereau, macquereau, macareau, macreau, F. maquereau, OF. also macherel, < ML. macarellus, a mackerel, prob. for maculellus*, lit. 'spotted,' so called from the dark spots with which it is marked, < L. macula, a spot: see macula, macule, macle. Cf. W. brithyll, a trout, < brith, speckled. Cf. mackerel[2].] One of several different fishes of the family Scombridæ, and especially any fish of the genus Scomber. The common mackerel, S. scombrus, is one of the best-known and most important of food-fishes, inhabiting the Mackerel (Scomber scombrus).

North Atlantic on both sides. It attains a length of 18 inches, though usually less; it is lustrous dark-blue above, with many wavy blackish cross-streaks, and is silvery below, with the base of the pectorals dark. The Easter, tinker, or chub mackerel is a closely related species, S. pneumatophorus, so called from possessing a small air-bladder which is lacking in S. scombrus; it is found in both the Atlantic and Pacific oceans. The big-eyed, bull, or coly mackerel is S. colias, a variety of the last, locally named Spanish mackerel in England. The Spanish mackerel of the United States is a scombrid of a different genus, Scomberomorus maculatus, of both coasts of North America, north to Cape Cod and California. It is one of the most valued food-fishes, reaching a considerable size, bluish and silvery above, with bright reflections, the sides with many rounded bronzed spots, the spinous dorsal fin white at base, dark above and anteriorly. Other mackerel of this genus are the cero, S. regalis, and the sierra, S. caballa. Frigate-mackerels are scombrids of the genus Auxis, as A. thazard or A. rochei, of less value as food-fish. The horse-mackerel properly so called is the tunny, Oreynus thynnus, the largest of the scombrids, sometimes attaining a length of over 10 feet and a weight of half a ton, found on both sides of the Atlantic; but this name is extended to various other fishes. (See horse-mackerel.) Several carangoid fishes are loosely called mackerel, as the yellow mackerel, Caranx chrysos. (See mackerel-scad.) The bluefish or skipper, Pomatomus saltatrix, is sometimes called snapping-mackerel.

> Mackerel, on account of its perishable nature, was allowed to be sold on Sunday, as Gay notes: "Ev'n Sundays are prophan'd by Mackrell cries."

Banded mackerel, a carangoid, Seriola zonata, the rudder-fish. [Atlantic coast, U. S.]—Bay-mackerel, the Spanish mackerel. [Chesapeake Bay, U. S.]—Black-spotted Spanish mackerel, the cero or kingfish. Scomberomorus regalis.—Eel-grass mackerel, mackerel of inferior quality taken inshore in the Gulf of St. Lawrence.—Fall mackerel, a variety of the common mackerel which has been described as a distinct species under the name of Scomber grex. In this case the true mackerel is called spring mackerel, S. vernalis. But fall mackerel are simply tinkers, about 10 inches long, of wandering or irregular habits.—Green mackerel, a carangoid fish, Chloroscombrus chrysurus. [Southern coast, U. S.]—Mackerel gale. See gale[2].—Mackerel-latch, in fishing-tackle, a clamp for holding fast the inner end of a line.—Mess mackerel, scraped mackerel with the heads and tails cut off, losing in weight 20 pounds on the barrel, but increasing in value: a trade-name. They are assorted as Nos. 1, 2, and 3.—Mixed mackerel. Same as thimble-eyed mackerel.—Net-mackerel, mackerel of the right size to be meshed.—Overgrown mackerel, mackerel 15 inches or more in length. [Fishermen's term.]—Racer mackerel, a slink mackerel.—Round mackerel, any variety of the common mackerel, as distinguished from horse-mackerel, Spanish mackerel, etc. [Fishermen's term.]—Slink mackerel, a poor, thin mackerel taken among schools of fat ones in the fall of the year. [Nova Scotia.]—Soused mackerel, mackerel either fresh or canned by the usual process, and preserved after an old German recipe employing a pickle of vinegar, spices, and other ingredients.—Spanish mackerel (a) See def. 1. (b) The bonito, Sarda chilensis. [California.]—Spotted mackerel, the Spanish mackerel.—Spring mackerel, the ordinary commercial mackerel of good size and quality, sometimes technically named Scomber vernalis: distinguished from fall mackerel.—Thimble-eyed mackerel, the mized, coly, or chub mackerel. [Local, U. S.]—Tinker mackerel. (a) The chub mackerel. (b) The common mackerel of next to the smallest of the four commercial sizes (large, seconds, tinkers, blinks), which are supposed to indicate respectively four, three, two, and one years of growth. (See also frigate-mackerel.) mackerel[1] (mak'e-rel), v. i.; pret. and pp. mackereled or mackerelled, ppr. mackereling or mackerelling. [< mackerel[1], n.] To fish for or catch mackerel; go on a mackerel voyage.

> At Orleans, some few men who go mackereling in summer stay at home and dig clams in winter.
> Fisheries of U. S., V. ii. 604.

mackerel[2]† (mak'e-rel), n. [< ME. maquerel, < OF. maquerel, F. maquereau, a pander; prob. < MD. maeckelaer, D. makelaar = G. mäkler = Dan. mægler = Sw. mäklare, a broker, agent, equiv. to D. maker = OHG. makhare, an agent, broker, = E. maker (see maker). Commonly regarded, without good reason, as a particular use of maquerel, a mackerel (fish), there being in France a popular belief that the mackerel follows the female shad (called vierges or maids) and brings them to the males. On the other hand, some take the name of the fish to be due to mackerel in this sense: see mackerel[1].] A pander or pimp.

mackerel-bait (mak′ẹ-rel-bāt), n. Jellyfish, a favorite prey of the mackerel: so called by Gaspé fishermen.

mackerel-boat (mak′ẹ-rel-bōt), n. A strong clincher-built craft, having a large foresail, spritsail, and jigger, used in fishing for mackerel.

mackerel-bob (mak′ẹ-rel-bob), n. A kind of bob used in catching mackerel when they are close to the vessel and in large schools.

mackerel-cock (mak′ẹ-rel-kok), n. The Manx shearwater, Puffinus anglorum: so called from its connection with the mackerel-fisheries. [Lambay Island.]

mackereler, mackereller (mak′ẹ-rel-ėr), n. One who fishes for mackerel, or a boat engaged in fishing for mackerel.

mackerel-gaff (mak′ẹ-rel-gaf), n. See gaff[1].

mackerel-guide (mak′ẹ-rel-gīd), n. A local English name of the garfish, Belone belone, from the fact that it comes toward the shore a little before the appearance of mackerel. Day.

mackerel-gull (mak′ẹ-rel-gul), n. A common name in the United States of terns or sea-swallows, from the forked tail. Such species as Sterna hirundo, S. forsteri, S. macrura, etc., are known by this name.

mackereller, n. See mackereler.

mackerel-midge (mak′ẹ-rel-mij), n. The young of the rocklings, gadoid fishes of the genus Gaidropsarus or of Enchelyopus. [Prov. Eng.]

mackerel-mint (mak′ẹ-rel-mint), n. Spearmint, Mentha spicata.

mackerel-pike (mak′ẹ-rel-pīk), n. Any fish of the family Scomberesocidæ: generally called saury.

mackerel-plow (mak′ẹ-rel-plou), n. A knife used for creasing the sides of lean mackerel to make them resemble fish of the first quality. Also called fatting-knife.

mackerel-scad (mak′ẹ-rel-skad), n. A carangoid fish of the genus Decapterus, as D. macarellus, of a silvery color, plumbeous below, with a black spot on the opercle and nearly straight lateral line, inhabiting warm parts of the Atlantic and northward to New England.

mackerel-scales (mak′ẹ-rel-skālz), n. pl. A form of cirro-cumulus cloud in which the cloudlets are without any fleecy texture and somewhat angular in form.

mackerel-scout, n. Same as mackerel-guide.

mackerel-shark (mak′ẹ-rel-shärk), n. One of several kinds of sharks, as Isurus dekayi, or the Mackerel-shark, or Porbeagle (Lamna cornubica).

porbeagle, Lamna cornubica. They have a forked tail like a mackerel, attain a length of 10 feet, and annoy fishermen by biting off their lines. See porbeagle.

mackerel-sky (mak′ẹ-rel-skī), n. A sky in which the clouds have the form called cirro-cumulus—that is, are broken into fleecy masses three, four, or more times as long as they are wide, and arranged in parallel groups. Also called mackerel-back sky.

mackerly (mak′ėr-li), a. [Cf. mackish.] Shapely; fashionable. [Prov. Eng.]

mackeronit, n. An obsolete spelling of macaroni.

mackint, mackins† (mak′in, -inz), n. [A dim. of Mary (cf lakin[2] for ladykin), or of Mass. Cf. Mack[3].] A word used in the old popular oath by the mackins, by our Lady: as, "'Twas well thought on, by the mackins," Gayton.

I would not have my zonne Dick one of those boets for the best pig in my stye, by the mackins!
Randolph, Muses Looking-Glass, iv. 4.

Mackinaw blanket. [So called from Mackinaw, an abbreviated form of Michilli-mackinac, the name of an island in the strait connecting Lakes Michigan and Huron, said to mean in Ojibway 'turtle,' in allusion to its shape.] A name given to the blankets distributed to the Indians of the Northwest by the United States government. The name is or was formerly current chiefly on the upper Great Lakes, and owes its origin to the fact that Fort Mackinaw was for many years the most remote post in the Northwest, so that from this point a large number of Indians received their supplies. Mackinaw blankets were of various sizes, colors, and qualities.

Mackinaw boat. A flat-bottomed, flat-sided boat with sharp prow and square stern, used on the upper Great Lakes and the rivers emptying into them. The advantage of the Mackinaw boat over the birch canoe is that its beam stands rougher handling, and that it can be drawn up on the beach without being unloaded; the disadvantage is that it is too heavy to be carried over portages, as the birch canoe is carried. The largest Mackinaw boats are rowed by four or more persons, and are often rigged with a sail.

Mackinaw trout. See trout.

mackinst, n. See mackin.

mackintosh (mak′in-tosh), n. [Also macintosh; so named from Charles Mackintosh, the inventor.] 1. A garment, particularly an overcoat or cloak, rendered water-proof by a solution of india-rubber, either applied on the surface as a coating or placed between two thicknesses of some cloth of suitable texture.—2. Rubber cloth of the kind used in making a mackintosh.

The bed is covered with a mackintosh sheet.
Lancet, No. 3426, p. 830.

mackish (mak′ish), a. [Origin uncertain; cf. mackerly.] Smart. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

mackle (mak′l), n. [Early mod. E. macull; < F. macle, a spot: see macle, macule.] A spot; specifically, in printing, a blemish in press-work made by a double impression, or by slipping or scraping, or by a wrinkle in the paper. Also macle, macule.

mackle (mak′l), v. t.; pret. and pp. mackled, ppr. mackling. [< F. maculer = Pr. Sp. Pg. macular = It. maculare, < L. maculare, spot, stain: see the noun.] To spot; maculate; blur; especially, in printing, to make a slipped, blurred, or double impression of. Also macule.

macklin† (mak′lin), n. Short for Macklin lace.

Macklin lace†. See lace.

mackninny† (mak′nin-i), n. [< It. macchinine, dim. of macchina, machine.] A puppet-show.

He . . . could . . . represent emblematically the downfall of majesty as in his raree-show and mackninny.
Roger North, Examen, p. 590. (Davies.)

macle (mak′l), n. [< OF. macle, mascle, F. macle = Sp. mácula = Pg. macula = It. macula, macola, < L. macula, a spot, stain. Cf. macula, macule, mackle, mascle[2], mail[1], from the same source.] 1. Same as mackle.—2. In mineral.: (a) A kind of twin crystal. See twin. (b) Chiastolite, cross-stone, or hollow spar, a variety of andalusite, the crystals of which have the axis and angles colored differently from the remainder. See chiastolite. (c) A tessellated appearance in other crystals.—3. In her., same as mascle[2], 3.

Macleayan (mak-lā′an), a. [< Macleay (see def.) + -an.] Pertaining to the Scotch naturalist Macleay.—Macleayan system, a system of classification proposed by Mr. Macleay. Also called the quinarian system. See quinarian.

macled (mak′ld), a. [< macle + -ed[2].] 1. In mineral., twinned.—2. Spotted; more or less regularly marked, like a crystal of chiastolite.

maclée, a. [F., < macle, macle.] Same as mascled.

McLeod case. See case[1].

Maclura (mak-lö′rą), n. [NL., named after W. Maclure: see Maclurites.] 1. A name given by Nuttall in 1818 to Toxylon, a genus of plants belonging to the Moraceæ, or mulberry family, and closely related to the mulberry. It is characterized by the pistillate flowers having a four-parted perianth and growing in quite large heads, and the staminate flowers in short, loose racemes; the fruit is multiple, composed of many small achenia packed closely together upon a globose, rather fleshy receptacle, resembling a warty green orange. There is but a single species, Toxylon pomiferum (M. aurantiaca), the Osage orange, a native of Arkansas and adjacent regions. It is a spreading tree with handsome shining ovate leaves, from 30 to 60 feet in height and 2 feet or less in diameter. Its wood is hard, strong, and flexible, of a satiny texture, the heartwood bright-orange turning brown, the sapwood lighter. It was formerly used by the Indians for bows; hence called by the French settlers bois d'arc (bow-wood), corrupted into bowdark or bodark. It bears cutting back and has formidable thorns, and hence is very extensively used in the United States for hedges. See cut in next column.
2. In conch., same as Maclurites. Ebenezer Emmons, 1843.

maclureite (mak-lör′īt), n. [< Maclure (see Maclurites) + -ite[2].] 1. A variety of aluminous pyroxene found at Wilmington, Delaware.—2. A synonym of chondrodite.—3. A fossil shell of the genus Maclurites. Also maclurite.

Maclurites (mak-lö-rī′tēz), n. [NL. (Menke, 1830) (F. Maclurite—Lesueur, 1818), so called from William Maclure, a noted geologist (1763–1840).] The typical genus of the family Maclurididæ. Also Maclurea, Maclureia, Macluria, Maclurita.

1. Branch of Osage Orange, Toxylon pomiferum (M. aurantiaca), with male flowers. 2. Branch with the female inflorescence. a, a male flower; b, a female flower; c, a female flower laid open; d, a leaf, showing the nervation.

Macluritidæ (mak-lö-rit′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Maclurites + -idæ.] A family of extinct mollusks, of uncertain relationship, but generally referred to the Rhipidoglossa. The shell is discoidal, paucispiral, and with the spire sunk in an umbilical cavity. The operculum is subspiral and furnished with two internal projections, of which one, beneath the nucleus, is very thick and rugose. By Woodward the constituent genus was referred to the heteropod family Atlantidæ; by Tryon, as type of a family, to the scutibranchiate gastropods, between the Bellerophontidæ and Haliotidæ; by others to the family Solariidæ, etc. Various species have been recognized in the Silurian formations. Also Maclureadæ, Maclureidæ, Macluridæ.

Maclurites logani, showing the shell and operculum.

Operculum of Maclurites logani. t t, tubercles.

Macmillanite (mak-mil′an-īt), n. [< Macmillan (see def.) + -ite[2].] A member of the Scottish sect of Cameronians: so called after the Rev. John Macmillan, their first ordained clergyman. See Cameronian, 1.

Macont, n. A variant of Mahound, Mahoun.

maconite (mā′kon-īt), n. [< Macon (see def.) + -ite[2].] A kind of vermiculite found near Franklin in Macon county, North Carolina.

maçonné (mas-o-nā′), a. [F., pp. of maçonner, mason: see mason, v.] In her., divided with lines representing the divisions between blocks of stone: said especially of a house or castle used as a bearing. Also masoned.

macouba, n. See maccouba.

Macquartia (ma-kwär′ti-ą), n. [NL. (Robineau-Desvoidy, 1830), named after P. J. M. Macquart (1778–1855), a French entomologist.] A genus of flies of the family Tachinidæ, or giving name to the family Macquartiidæ. They are of medium and large size, slender, thickly hairy, usually black, often metallic, and are found near streams on the under side of leaves.

Macquartiidæ (mak-wär-tī′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Macquartia + -idæ.] A family of dipterous insects, typified by the genus Macquartia. Also Macquartidæ.

macramé (mak-ra-mā′), n. [It. macrame, said to be of Ar. origin.] An ornamental trimming made by leaving a long fringe of thread and knotting the threads together so as to form geometrical patterns. Also called knotted-bar work.—Macramé cord, a kind of fine cord prepared for the manufacture of macramé lace, and also used for other work, such as netting of various kinds, and for hammocks.—Macramé lace, a kind of knotted work in which elaborate fringes and the like are made in modern imitation of the old knotted point.

macrandrous (mak-ran′drus), a. [< Gr. μακρός, long (see macron), + ἀνήρ (ἀνδρ-), male (in bot. a stamen).] Having elongated male plants, as certain algæ, particularly the Œdogoniaceæ.

macrauchene (mak-râ′kēn), n. [< Macrauchenia.] A member of the Macraucheniidæ.

Macrauchenia (mak-râ-kē′ni-ą), n. [NL., < Gr. μακραύχην, long-necked, < μακρός, long, + αὐχήν, neck.] A genus of fossil perissodactyls founded by Owen in 1838 upon remains of camel-like quadrupeds found in the Tertiary of South America. Two species are named M. patachonica and M. boliviensis. Opisthorhinus is synonymous.

Macraucheniidæ (mak-râ-kē-nī′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Macrauchenia + -idæ.] A family of perissodactyl Ungulata, established upon the genus Macrauchenia. These great ungulates were long-necked, like camels (whence the name), but were more nearly related to the rhinoceros. The cervical vertebræ resemble those of camels in the disposition of the vertebrarterial foramina, but their centra are flat, not opisthocœlous. The fibula articulates with the calcaneum, and each foot is 3-toed. The dental formula is: 3 incisors, 1 canine, 4 premolars, and 3 molars in each upper and lower half-jaw—in all, 44 teeth, in almost continuous series, the canines being small. Two or three upper molars have each a shallow valley extending inward from the anterior part of the inner wall, and all the lower premolars and molars have two crescentic ridges, anterior and posterior. The nearest relatives of the Macraucheniidæ are the Palæotheriidæ and Rhinocerotidæ.

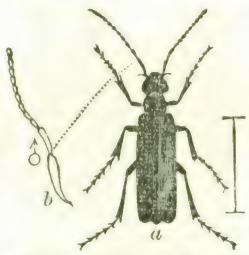
macraucheniiform (mak-râ-kē′ni-i-fôrm), a. [< NL. Macrauchenia + L. forma, form.] Having the form or characters of a macrauchene.



macrencephalic (mak″ren-se-fal′ik or -sef′a-lik), a. [As macrencephal-ous + -ic.] Same as macrencephalous.

macrencephalous (mak-ren-sef′a-lus), a. [< Gr. μακρός, long, + ἐγκέφαλος, the brain: see encephalic.] Having a long or large brain.

macriot, n. [A corrupt form of F. maquereau: see mackerel[2].] Same as mackerel[2].

> Pander, wittol, macrio, basest of knaves.
> Middleton, Anything for a Quiet Life, v. 1.

Macrobasis (mak-rob′a-sis), n. [< Gr. μακρός, long (see macron), + βάσις, a base.] A genus of blister-beetles of the family Meloidæ. There are 14 species in North America, several of which are destructive to garden-vegetables. M. cinerea, the ash-gray blister-beetle, is a common garden-pest, particularly injurious to potatoes and beets. Its larvæ prey upon the eggs of the Rocky Mountain locust. See cut under blister-beetle.

Black-rat Blister-beetle (Macrobasis murina) a, male beetle (line shows natural size); b, enlarged antenna of same.

macrobiosis (mak″-rō-bī-ō′sis), n. [NL., < Gr. μακροβίωσις, long life, < μακρόβιος, having a long life: see macrobiote.] Long life; longevity.

macrobiote (mak-rō′bi-ōt), n. [< Gr. μακροβίοτος, also μακρόβιος, having a long life, < μακρός, long, + βίος, life.] One who lives long; a long-lived person or animal.

> The Thessalian mountaineers were the macrobiotes, the long-livers par excellence, of the Roman Empire.
> F. L. Oswald, Pop. Sci. Mo., XXI. 590.

macrobiotic (mak″rō-bī-ot′ik), a. [< macrobiote + -ic.] Long-lived; having a strong hold on life: specifically applied to the Macrobiotidæ.

macrobiotics (mak″rō-bī-ot′iks), n. [Pl. of macrobiotic: see -ics.] Knowledge relating to long life; the study of longevity.

> Old age, such as [that of Isocrates], was a very rare thing in Greece—a fact which is evident from the Greek work surviving on the subject of macrobiotics.
> De Quincey, Style, note 9.

Macrobiotidæ (mak″rō-bī-ot′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Macrobiotus + -idæ.] A family of Tardigrada, typified by the genus Macrobiotus. They are minute aquatic arachnidans without respiratory organs, forming one group of a number of animalcules known as sloth- or bear-animalcules or water-bears, from their sluggish movements. The form is usually a long oval, and there are four pairs of short clawed legs. These animals are found in moss or fresh water, and resemble rotifers in their power of reviving after desiccation, whence their name.

Macrobiotus (mak-rō-bī′ō-tus), n. [NL., < Gr. μακροβίοτος, having a long life: see macrobiote.] The typical genus of Macrobiotidæ. M. shultzei is an example. See cut under Arctisca.

Macrocameræ (mak-rō-kam′e-rē), n. pl. [NL.: see macrocamerate.] 1. A subtribe of choristidan sponges having large chambers: distinguished from Microcameræ. Lendenfeld.—2. A tribe of ceratose sponges with large sacciform ciliated chambers and soft transparent ground-substance. Lendenfeld.

macrocamerate (mak-rō-kam′e-rāt), a. [< Gr. μακρός, long, + καμάρα, a vaulted chamber: see camera.] Having large chambers, as a sponge; specifically, of or pertaining to either of the groups Macrocameræ.

macrocarpous (mak-rō-kär′pus), a. [< Gr. μακρός, long, + καρπός, fruit.] Having large fruit.

Macrocentri (mak-rō-sen′trī), n. pl. [NL., pl. of Macrocentrus, q. v.] One of two prime sections of the parasitic hymenopterous family Chalcididæ. It includes 13 subfamilies and the largest species in the family, having 5-jointed tarsi, usually many-jointed antennæ, and anterior tibiæ armed with a large curved spur.

Macrocentrus (mak-rō-sen′trus), n. [NL. (Curtis, 1833), < Gr. μακρόκεντρος, having a long sting, < μακρός, long, + κέντρον, a goad, sting: see center[1].] A genus of ichneumon-flies, typical of the subfamily Macrocentrinæ, having the abdomen inserted above the hind coxæ. North America and Europe have each about 6 species. M. delicatus is a common parasite of the codling-moth in the United States.

macrocephalic (mak″rō-se-fal′ik or -sef′a-lik), a. [As macrocephal-ous + -ic.] 1. Of or pertaining to a large head; associated with excessive size of the head: as, macrocephalic idiocy.—2. In anc. pros., having one syllable too many at the beginning: an epithet of dactylic hexameters the first foot of which apparently has a syllable in excess. Also procephalic. See dolichuric.

macrocephalous (mak-rō-sef′a-lus), a. [< Gr. μακροκέφαλος, long-headed, < μακρός, long, + κεφαλή, head.] 1. In zoöl., having a long or large head.—2. In bot., having the cotyledons of a dicotyledonous embryo consolidated, and forming a large mass compared with the rest of the body.

Macrochelys (mak-rok′e-lis), n. [NL., < Gr. μακρός, long, + χέλυς, a tortoise: see chelys.] A genus of snapping-turtles of the family Chelydridæ. M. lacertina is a large alligator-turtle inhabiting the southern United States.

macrochemical (mak-rō-kem′i-kal), a. [< Gr. μακρός, long, large, + E. chemical.] Of or pertaining to chemical tests which may be applied, or reactions which may be observed, with the naked eye: distinguished from microchemical.

Macrochira (mak-rō-kī′rą), n. [NL., < Gr. μακρόχειρ, long-handed (long-armed), < μακρός, long, + χείρ, the hand.] 1. A genus of large maioid crabs, having enormously long legs and a comparatively small body. The giant spider-crab of Japanese waters, a species of this genus, has legs which span 18 feet or more, though the body is only a foot broad and 18 inches long.

2. A genus of dipterous insects.

macrochiran (mak-rō-kī′ran), a. and n. [As macrochire + -an.] I. a. Long-handed; having a long manus or pinion of the wing, as a swift or a humming-bird; specifically, of or pertaining to the Macrochires.

II. n. Any member of the Macrochires; a macrochire.

macrochire (mak′rō-kīr), n. A bird of the group Macrochires.

Macrochires (mak-rō-kī′rēz), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. μακρόχειρ, long-handed (long-armed): see Macrochira.] A group of birds, so named from the length of the terminal as compared with the proximal portion of the wing. As originally used by Nitzsch, 1829, it included the humming-birds and swifts (Trochili and Cypseli), to which are now usually added the goatsuckers (Caprimulgi): nearly synonymous with Cypseliformes.

macrochiropter (mak″rō-kī-rop′tėr), n. Same as macrochiropteran.

Macrochiroptera (mak″rō-kī-rop′te-rą), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. μακρός, long, large, + NL. Chiroptera.] A suborder of Chiroptera, comprising the largest species of the order. It consists of the fruit-bats, or Frugivora, as distinguished from the Microchiroptera, or ordinary bats. Usually Megachiroptera.

macrochiropteran (mak″rō-kī-rop′te-ran), a. and n. I. a. Of or pertaining to the Macrochiroptera.

II. n. One of the Macrochiroptera; a frugivorous bat, or fruit-bat. Also macrochiropter.

macrochoanite (mak-rō-kō′ą-nīt), a. and n. [< NL. Macrochoanites.] I. a. Having long septal funnels, as a cephalopod; of or pertaining to the Macrochoanites.

II. n. One of the Macrochoanites.

Macrochoanites (mak-rō-kō-ą-nī′tēz), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. μακρός, long, + χοάνη, a funnel: see choanite.] A group of cephalopods, containing those nautiloids and ammonoids whose septal funnels are long. Hyatt, Proc. Bost. Soc. Nat. Hist., 1883, p. 260.

Macrocnemum (mak-rok-nē′mum), n. [NL. (P. Browne, 1756), so called in allusion to the long flower-stalk; < Gr. μακρός, long, + κνημη, a leg: see cnemis.] A genus of dicotyledonous sympetalous plants belonging to the Rubiaceæ, or madder family, tribe Cinchoneæ, and subtribe Eucinchoneæ. It is characterized by the placentæ being adnate to the middle partition, a capsule usually septicidal, corolla-lobes with pubescent margins, and a style which is two-cleft at the apex. There are about 9 species, confined to tropical America and the West Indies. They are trees or shrubs with opposite petiolate leaves, deciduous stipules between the petioles, and white or rose-colored flowers in terminal or axillary panicles. Several species are cultivated for ornament, among them M. Jamaicense, with white flowers, called in Jamaica whitethorn.

macrococcus (mak-rō-kok′us), n.; pl. macrococci (-sī). [NL., < Gr. μακρός, long or large, + κόκκος, a berry: see coccus.] A somewhat general term applied to certain bacteria, having reference to the dimensions of the isolated individual cells.

> Cocci: isolated cells which are isodiametric, or at least very slightly elongated in one direction. These are distinguished when necessary, according to their dimensions, into micrococci, macrococci, and monad-forms.
> De Bary, Fungi (trans.), p. 458.

macroconidium (mak″rō-kō-nid′i-um), n.; pl. macroconidia (-ą). [NL., < Gr. μακρός, long, large, + NL. conidium, q. v.] A conidium of large size. See conidium.

macrocosm (mak′rō-kozm), n. [< Gr. μακρός, long, large, great, + κόσμος, world: see cosmos[1]. Cf. microcosm.] 1. The great world; the universe, or the visible system of worlds: opposed to microcosm, or the little world constituted by man. The conception dates back to Democritus (born 460 B. C.). See microcosm.

> The first section shews the use that the Christian virtuoso may make of the contemplation of the macrocosm, and especially of the later discoveries made in the celestial part of it.
> Boyle, Christian Virtuoso, ii.

2. The entire mass of anything of which man forms a part; the whole of any division of nature or of knowledge.

> The macrocosm of society can be inferred from the microcosm of individual human nature.
> N. A. Rev., CXX. 256.

> According to Raymond, man is the microcosm from which the whole macrocosm of theology is evolved.
> J. Owen, Evenings with Skeptics, II. 445.

macrocosmic (mak-rō-koz′mik), a. [< macrocosm + -ic.] Of or pertaining to the macrocosm; of the nature of a macrocosm; comprehensive; immense.

> The world with which alone consciousness has to do is the world as it has been organised and registered in the brain by experience, and the journeys which it makes are no more than the microcosmic representatives of macrocosmic distances.
> Maudsley, Mind, XII. 508.

macrocyst (mak′rō-sist), n. [< Gr. μακρός, long or large, + E. cyst.] A cyst of large size: applied particularly to the archicarp of certain Discomycetes, notably Pyronema.

Macrocysteæ (mak-rō-sis′tē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Kuetzing, 1849), < Macrocystis + -eæ.] A name proposed for a division of marine algæ belonging to the Laminariaceæ, containing the genera Macrocystis, Lessonia, Nereocystis, and Ecklonia. No longer used.

Macrocystis (mak-rō-sis′tis), n. [NL. (Agardh, 1824), < Gr. μακρός, long, + κύστις, a bladder, bag: see cyst.] A genus of gigantic brown seaweeds belonging to the Laminariaceæ. When fully grown the frond consists of a much-branched root, from which arise many filiform simple or branched stems, naked below but furnished above with numerous unilateral lanceolate petiolate leaves, having thin petioles enlarged into pear-shaped or oblong air-cells. The lateral leaves have their edges directed toward the stem, and are so far vertically disposed; and the stem itself when unbroken always terminates in an oblique leaf broader than the rest and having one or more slits in its base. This terminal leaf is the growing-apex, and from the development of the slits in the base new lateral leaves are gradually separated. The spores form dense, cloud-like, irregular patches on small radical leaves. M. pyrifera girds the southern temperate zone in its distribution. The stems, which are the longest known in the vegetable kingdom, vary from 5 feet to several hundred feet in length, and Hooker observed them near the Crozet Islands fully 700 feet long. Harvey.

macrodactyl, macrodactyle (mak-rō-dak′til), a. and n. [< NL. macrodactylus, < Gr. μακροδάκτυλος, long-fingered (long-toed), < μακρός, long, + δάκτυλος, finger, toe.] I. a. Having long toes; specifically, of or pertaining to the Macrodactyli. Also macrodactylic, macrodactylous.

II. n. One of the Macrodactyli.

Macrodactyla (mak-rō-dak'ti-lą), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of macrodactylus: see macrodactyl.] In Latreille's system, the second tribe of the second section of Clavicornes, having simple narrow tibiæ and long five-jointed tarsi, the last joint of which is large, with two strong hooks. Also Macrodactyli.

Macrodactyli (mak-rō-dak'ti-lī), n. pl. [NL., pl. of macrodactylus: see macrodactyl.] 1. Same as Macrodactyla.—2. In Cuvier's system, a group of Grallæ or wading birds, including the jacanas, horned screamers, and mound-birds, with the rails, crakes, coots, and gallinules. It is a heterogeneous group, no longer in use.

macrodactylic (mak″rō-dak-til'ik), a. [As macrodactyl + -ic.] Same as macrodactyl.

Macrodactylidæ (mak″rō-dak-til'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Macrodactylus + -idæ.] A family of Coleoptera, named in 1837 by Kirby from the genus Macrodactylus: now generally merged in Scarabæidæ.

macrodactylous (mak-rō-dak'ti-lus), a. [< NL. macrodactylus, long-toed: see macrodactyl.] Same as macrodactyl.

Macrodactylus (mak-rō-dak'ti-lus), n. [NL. (Latreille, 1825): see macrodactyl.] A genus of lamellicorn beetles, the type of the family Macrodactylidæ. It comprises rather small species, of graceful form and variable colors, with slender legs and the tarsal claws split at the tip. Of its more than 30 species, 3 are North American, of which M. spinosus, erroneously called rose-bug, is very destructive to roses and many fruits of the family Rosaceæ. It is about one third of an inch long, of a yellowish color, with long brown legs, and appears suddenly in June in immense numbers.

macrodiagonal (mak″rō-dī-ag'ō-nal), a. and n. [< Gr. μακρός, long, + διαγώνιος, diagonal: see diagonal.] I. a. Constituting or being the longer diagonal of a rhombic prism; pertaining to the macrodiagonal.—Macrodiagonal axis, in crystal., the longer lateral axis in an orthorhombic crystal.—Macrodiagonal section, a plane passing through the macrodiagonal and vertical axes of a crystal.

II. n. The longer of the diagonals of a rhombic prism.

macrodomatic (mak″rō-dō-mat'ik), a. [< macrodome + *-atic*2.] Of or pertaining to a macrodome.

macrodome (mak'rō-dōm), n. [< Gr. μακρός, long, + δόμος, δῶμα, a house, dome: see *dome*1.] In crystal., a dome parallel to the macrodiagonal axis of an orthorhombic crystal. See *dome*1, 5.

macrodont (mak'rō-dont), a. [< Gr. μακρός, long, + ὀδούς (ὀδοντ-) = E. tooth.] Having large teeth.

macrodontism (mak'rō-don-tizm), n. [< macrodont + -ism.] A form of dentition in which the teeth are large.

Macroglossa (mak-rō-glos'ą), n. [NL., < Gr. μακρός, long, + γλῶσσα, the tongue: see glossa.] 1. A genus of hawk-moths of the family Sesiidæ, having a short abdomen with a large bunch of hair at the tip, like a bird's tail. The wings are short, often opaque, and sometimes glossy. Nearly 100 species are known; they fly by day, and with great swiftness. M. stellatarum is known as the humming-bird hawk-moth (which see, under hawk-moth).

2. Same as Macroglossus.

macroglossate (mak-rō-glos'āt), a. [As Macroglossa + *-ate*1.] Having a long tongue.

Macroglossi (mak-rō-glos'ī), n. pl. [NL., pl. of Macroglossus, q. v.] A division of Pteropodidæ, or fruit-bats, having an extremely long slender tongue. It includes the genera Notopteris, Eonycteris, Melonycteris, and Macroglossus.

macroglossia (mak-rō-glos'i-ą), n. [NL., < Gr. μακρός, long, + γλῶσσα, the tongue: see glossa.] In pathol., hypertrophy of the tongue.

macroglossine (mak-rō-glos'in), a. [As Macroglossa + *-ine*1.] Same as macroglossate.

Macroglossus (mak-rō-glos'us), n. [NL., < Gr. μακρός, long, + γλῶσσα, the tongue: see glossa.] A genus of very small fruit-bats, with the dental formula as in Eonycteris, but the index-finger with a claw. M. minimus is a common Indian species, smaller than the serotine of Europe.

macrognathic (mak-rog-nath'ik), a. [< Gr. μακρός, long, + γνάθος, the jaw: see gnathic.] Having long jaws; prognathous. Applied by Huxley to human skulls of Neolithic age, of a broad or rounded form, with prominent probole and angular or lozenge-shaped facial region, and highly developed and procurrent jaws.

macrognathous (mak-rog'nā-thus), a. Same as macrognathic.

macrogonidium (mak″rō-gō-nid'i-um), n.; pl. macrogonidia (-ą). [NL., < Gr. μακρός, long, large, + NL. gonidium, q. v.] In bot., a large gonidium as compared with others produced by the same species. See gonidium and microgonidium.

macrolepidopter (mak-rō-lep-i-dop'tėr), n. Any member of the group Macrolepidoptera.

Macrolepidoptera (mak-rō-lep-i-dop'te-rą), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. μακρός, long, + NL. Lepidoptera, q. v.] Lepidopterous insects of considerable size, as collectively distinguished from the smaller forms, which are called Microlepidoptera. The name includes all the butterflies or Rhopalocera, and the following six families of moths or Heterocera: Sphingidæ, Sesiidæ, Zygænidæ, Bombycidæ, Noctuidæ, and Geometridæ.

macrolepidopterist (mak-rō-lep-i-dop'te-rist), n. [< Macrolepidoptera + -ist.] One who is versed in the natural history of the Macrolepidoptera.

Macroleptes (mak-rō-lep'tēz), n. pl. [NL. (Swainson, 1839).] A tribe of acanthopterygian fishes distinguished by the development of conspicuous scales and large branchial apertures. It was intended to include the perciform, chætodontoid, labroid, and similar fishes. [Rarely used.]

macrology (mak-rol'ō-ji), n. [< LL. macrologia, < Gr. μακρολογία, long speaking, < μακρολόγος, speaking long, < μακρός, long, + λέγειν, speak: see -ology.] Long and tedious talk; prolonged discourse, with little or nothing to say; superfluity of words. [Rare.]

macromeral (mak'rō-mē-ral), a. [< macromere + -al.] Of or pertaining to a macromere: as, ★macromeral blastomeres.

macromere (mak'rō-mēr), n. [< Gr. μακρός, long, + μέρος, a part.] In embryol., the larger one of two unequal masses into which the vitellus of a lamellibranch, as a fresh-water mussel, divides. The term is now used generally to designate any large blastomere, as opposed to a small blastomere or micromere. See micromere.

macromeric (mak-rō-mer'ik), a. [< macromere + -ic.] Same as macromeral. Huxley.

macromeritic (mak″rō-mē-rit'ik), a. [As macromere + *-ite*2 + -ic.] In lithol., an epithet introduced by Vogelsang to designate the granitoid structure of a rock when developed coarsely enough to be recognizable by the naked eye. Macromeritic is opposed to micromeritic, the latter indicating a crystalline structure too fine to be visible without the aid of the microscope.

macrometer (mak-rom'e-tėr), n. [< Gr. μακρός, long, + μέτρον, measure.] A mathematical instrument for measuring inaccessible heights and objects by means of two reflectors on a common sextant.

macromolecule (mak-rō-mol'e-kūl), n. [< Gr. μακρός, long, + E. molecule.] A molecule consisting of several molecules. G. J. Stoney, 1885.

macromyelon (mak-rō-mī'e-lon), n. [NL., < Gr. μακρός, long, + μυελός, marrow.] Owen's name of the medulla oblongata: same as the myelencephalon of Huxley and the metencephalon of Quain and most anatomists.

macromyelonal (mak-rō-mī'e-lon-al), a. [< macromyelon + -al.] Pertaining to the macromyelon; metencephalic.

macron (mak'ron), n. [< Gr. μακρόν, neut. of μακρός, long, tall, deep, far, large, great, long in time, akin to μῆκος, Doric μᾶκος, length, and prob. = L. macer (macr-), lean, lank: see meager.] In gram., a short horizontal line placed over a vowel to show that it is long in quantity, or, as in English, has a "long" sound: opposed to the breve, or mark of a short vowel. Thus, in Greek ᾱ, ῑ, ῡ, and in Latin ā, ē, ī, ō, ū, the long vowels corresponding to the short vowels ă, ĕ, ĭ, ŏ, ŭ, etc.; in English, ā, ē, ī, ō, ū, the conventional notations of the name-sounds of these vowels. In this dictionary, in the etymologies, the macron is used uniformly to indicate a vowel long in quantity, to the exclusion of the circumflex (except in Greek) and the acute, which are elsewhere often used for the same purpose. Thus the Anglo-Saxon and Icelandic long vowels often, the Icelandic usually, denoted by the acute are uniformly marked with the macron (the acute, in Anglo-Saxon, being retained only as a convenient indication of a diphthong, as in eá, eó, etc.). Also called macrotone.

Macronemeæ (mak-rō-nē'mē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. μακρός, long or large, + νῆμα, a thread, + -eæ.] A name given by Saccardo to various subsections of the Mucedinaceæ, having hyphæ elongated and distinct from the conidia.

Macronucleus (mak-rō-nū'klē-us), n.; pl. macronuclei (-ī). [NL., < Gr. μακρός, long, large, + NL. nucleus.] A large nucleus which may subdivide into or be replaced by smaller nuclei.

Macronyches (mak-ron'i-kēz), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. μακρός, long, + ὄνυξ (ὀνυχ-), claw, talon: see onyx.] In Sundevall's classification of birds, a cohort of Gallinæ, composed of the Australian mound-birds or Megapodidæ.

Macronyx (mak'rō-niks), n. [NL., < Gr. μακρός, long, + ὄνυξ (ὀνυχ-), claw, talon: see onyx.] 1. In ornith., a genus of African larks of the family Alaudidæ, named by Swainson in 1827 on account of the long hind claw. There are several species, as M. capensis.—2. In entom.: (a) A genus of exotic robber-flies of the family Asilidæ. (b) A genus of arctiid moths. Felder, 1874.

macropetalous (mak-rō-pet'ą-lus), a. [< Gr. μακρός, long, + πέταλον, a leaf (petal): see petal.] In bot., having large petals.

macrophthalmous (mak-rof-thal'mus), a. [< Gr. μακρός, long, large, + ὀφθαλμός, eye.] In zoöl., having large eyes.

macrophylline (mak-rō-fil'in), a. [NL., < Gr. μακρός, long, large, + φύλλον, a leaf.] In bot., consisting of elongated, extended leaflets or foliose expansions: opposed to microphylline.

macrophyllous (mak-rō-fil'us), a. [< Gr. μακρόφυλλος, long-leafed, < μακρός, long, + φύλλον, = L. folium, a leaf.] In bot., having large leaves.

Macropina (mak-rō-pī'nä), n. pl. [NL., < Macropus + *-ina*2.] A division of marsupials, containing the kangaroos. J. E. Gray, 1825.

macropinacoid (mak-rō-pin'ą-koid), n. [< Gr. μακρός, long, + πίναξ (πινακ-), a board, tablet, + εἶδος, form.] In crystal., a plane parallel to the vertical and macrodiagonal axes of an orthorhombic crystal. See pinacoid.

macropinacoidal (mak-rō-pin-ą-koi'dal), a. [< macropinacoid + -al.] Of or pertaining to a macropinacoid: as, macropinacoidal planes.

Macropiper (mak'rō-pī-pėr), n. [NL. (F. A. Miquel, 1840), < Gr. μακρός, long, + πίπερι, > L. piper, pepper: see pepper.] A genus of dicotyledonous apetalous plants belonging to the family Piperaceæ and the tribe Pipereæ, characterized by an ovary with one cell and one ovule, flowers imperfect, usually in dense axillary spikes, and the fruit sessile, the berries often having the fleshy bracts and rachis united with them to form a multiple fruit. There are about 6 species, natives of the islands in the Pacific. They are shrubs, with erect stems, and alternate leaves on petioles dilated at the base. Piper methysticum, the Polynesian ava, cava, or kava, has been treated as belonging to the genus Macropiper by some botanists. (See kava.) M. excelsum is the native pepper of New Zealand, the kawakawa, a small aromatic tree, furnishing a tea and bearing yellow berries edible except the seeds.

Branch of Piper (Macropiper) methysticum, with flowers.

macropleural (mak-rō-plö'ral), a. [< Gr. μακρός, long, + πλευρά, side: see pleura.] Having long pleuræ: specifically applied to certain trilobites, in distinction from brachypleural. Amer. Jour. Sci., 3d ser., XXXII. 475.

macropod (mak'rō-pod), a. and n. [< Gr. μακρόπους (-ποδ-), long-footed, < μακρός, long, + πούς (ποδ-) = E. foot.] I. a. Having long or large feet or legs.

★II. n. A long-legged or long-footed animal.

macropodal (mak-rop'ō-dal), a. [As macropod + -al.] Same as macropod.

macropodan (mak-rop'ō-dąn), a. and n. [As ★macropod + -an.] Same as macropod.

Macropodia (mak-rō-pō'di-ą), n. [NL., < Gr. μακρόπους (-ποδ-), long-footed: see macropod.] A genus of spider-crabs or sea-spiders founded by W. E. Leach in 1813 upon the common British species formerly known as Cancer phalangium, and made the type of a family Macropodiadæ. Stenorhynchus of Latreille is a synonym.

Macropodiadæ (mak″rō-pō-di'ą-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Macropodia + -adæ.] A family of enormously long-legged crabs, typified by the genus Macropodia. Leptopodiidæ is a synonym. Also Macropodidæ.

macropodian (mak-rō-pō'di-ąn), a. and n. [As macropod + -ian.] I. a. Long-legged; macropod; specifically, of or pertaining to the Macropodiadæ.

II. n. A long-legged crab; a member of Leach's family Macropodiadæ.

Macropodidæ (mak-rō-pod'i-dē), n. pl. [< Macropus (-pod-) + -idæ.] 1. A family of marsupial mammals of the order Didelphia or Marsupialia; the kangaroos. The weight of the body is in the hind quarters, limbs, and tail, these parts being disproportionately enlarged. The head is long with large ears and lashed eyelids, the physiognomy resembling that of some ruminants; the neck is slender, and the fore quarters are light, with small limbs ending in five-fingered hands. The hind feet have no inner toe, the second and third toes being much reduced and inclosed in skin; the weight of the body is borne upon the enlarged fourth and fifth digits. The stomach is sacculated and the diet strictly herbivorous. The dental formula is: 3 incisors above and 1 below on each side; 1 canine, 1 premolar, and 4 molars in each upper, no canine, 1 premolar, and 4 molars in each lower half-jaw—in all, 30 teeth, of which the upper canines may be absorbed, and 1 molar on each side above and below may be deciduous. The leading genera are Macropus, Halmaturus, Lagorchestes, Petrogale, Dendrolagus, and Dorcopsis. See kangaroo. 2. Same as Macropodiadæ.

Macropodinæ (mak″rō-pō-dī'nē), n. pl. [NL., < Macropus (-pod-) + -inæ.] The leading subfamily of Macropodidæ; the kangaroos proper. When the kangaroo-rats (Hypsiprymnidæ) were included in Macropodidæ, this family was divisible into Macropodinæ and Hypsiprymninæ.

macropodous (mak-rop'ō-dus), a. [As macropod + -ous.] In bot., long-footed; of a leaf, having a long footstalk; of a monocotyledonous embryo, having the radicle large in proportion to the cotyledon.

Macropoma (mak-rō-pō'mä), n. [NL., < Gr. μακρός, long, + πῶμα, a cover, lid (operculum).] A genus of fossil cœlacanthoid ganoid fishes founded by Agassiz upon forms of Cretaceous age with homocercal tail and large operculum.

macroprism (mak'rō-prizm), n. [< Gr. μακρός, long, + πρίσμα, prism.] A prism of an orthorhombic crystal lying between the unit prism and the macropinacoid.

macropter (mak-rop'tėr), n. [< Gr. μακρόπτερος, long-winged: see macropterous.] An animal with long wings or fins.

macropteran (mak-rop'tę-ran), a. Same as macropterous.

macropterous (mak-rop'tę-rus), a. [< Gr. μακρόπτερος, long-winged, < μακρός, long, + πτερόν, wing, = E. feather.] Long-winged; macropteran; longipennine or longipennate, as a bird.

Macropus (mak'rō-pus), n. [NL., < Gr. μακρόπους, long-footed: see macropod.] 1. The typical genus of Macropodidæ, established by Shaw in 1800. M. giganteus is the giant kangaroo, or forester. See forester, 4, and cut at kangaroo. —2†. A generic name which has been variously used for certain fishes, birds, insects, and crustaceans, but is no longer in use, being antedated by the same name in mammalogy.

Macropygia (mak-rō-pij'i-ä), n. [NL. (Swainson, 1837), < Gr. μακρός, long, + πυγή, rump, tail.] A genus of Columbidæ, including many species of the East Indies and Australia, of large size with long, broad tail, such as M. reinwardti; the cuckoo-doves.

macropyramid (mak-rō-pir'a-mid), n. [< Gr. μακρός, long, + πυραμίς, pyramid.] A pyramid of an orthorhombic crystal lying between the zone of unit pyramids and the macrodomes.

A new pyramid is produced, named a macropyramid. Encyc. Brit., XVI. 360.

Macrorhamphosidæ (mak″rō-ram-fos'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Macrorhamphosus + -idæ.] A family of hemibranchiate fishes, typified by the genus Macrorhamphosus. They have the body compressed, armed with bony plates anteriorly and especially on the back, a long tubiform snout, abdominal ventral fins with a spine and 7 rays, and a distinct dorsal fin at or behind the middle of the length. The family consists of few species and two genera, the leading one of which is Macrorhamphosus. M. scolopax inhabits especially European seas, north to the southern coast of Great Britain, but has also been found on the Massachusetts coast. These fishes are known as trumpet-fish, bellows-fish, snipe-fish, woodcock-fish, and sea-snipe. Also called Centriscidæ.

macrorhamphosoid (mak″rō-ram-fō'soid), a. and n. [< Macrorhamphosus + -oid.] I. a. Pertaining to the Macrorhamphosidæ, or having their characters.

II. n. One of the Macrorhamphosidæ.

Macrorhamphosus (mak″rō-ram-fō'sus), n. [NL., < Gr. μακρός, long, + ῥάμφος, a bill, beak, + L. term. -osus, E. -ose, -ous.] The typical genus of Macrorhamphosidæ, established by Lacépède in 1802, wrongly called Centriscus.

Macrorhamphus (mak-rō-ram'fus), n. [NL., < Gr. μακρός, long, + ῥάμφος, a bill, beak.] A leading genus of Scolopacidæ, founded by Stephens in 1824; the robin-snipes or web-toed snipes. The bill is exactly as in the true snipes (Gallinago), but the feet are semipalmate, the wings are long and pointed, the tail is doubly emarginate and has only 12 rectrices, the tibiæ are naked below, and the tarsus is longer than the middle toe and claw. In the pattern and changes of plumage the species resemble sandpipers. M. griseus is the common red-breasted or gray-backed snipe or dowitcher of North America. Also written Macroramphus.

macrorhine (mak'rō-rin), a. [< Gr. μακρόρρις (-ρῑν-), long-nosed, < μακρός, long, + ῥίς (ῥῑν-), nose.] Having a long nose or snout.

Macrorhinus (mak-rō-rī'nus), n. [NL., < Gr. μακρόρρις, long-nosed, < μακρός, long, + ῥίς (ῥῑν-), nose.] 1. A genus of Phocidæ, of the subfamily Cystophorinæ, characterized by the proboscis of the male; the elephant-seals or sea-elephants. M. elephantinus or leoninus is an enormous phocid found in the antarctic seas, especially on Kerguelen Island. M. angustirostris is named by Gill as a distinct species. 2. A genus of coleopterous insects.

macroscelidan (mak-rō-sel'i-dan), a. Having the characters of the Macroscelididæ.

Macroscelides (mak-rō-sel'i-dēz), n. [NL. (Sir A. Smith, 1829), < Gr. μακροσκελής, long-legged, < μακρός, long, + σκέλος, leg.] The typical genus of the family Macroscelididæ. It contains the typical elephant-shrews, such as M. proboscideus. Nine species have been described, all African. Preferably Macroscelis. See cut under elephant-shrew.

Macroscelididæ (mak″rō-se-lid'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Macroscelides + -idæ.] A family of small terrestrial salient insectivorous mammals, of mouse-like aspect, with soft pelage, and the hinder limbs fitted for leaping (as in the jerboas) by the elongation of the leg and metatarsus, the tibia and fibula being ankylosed below. The species are African, and known as elephant-shrews, elephant-mice, and jumping-shrews. There are two genera, Macroscelides and Petrodromus. Also Macroscelidæ.

Macroscepis (mak-ros'e-pis), n. [NL. (Humboldt, Bonpland, and Kunth, 1818), so called in allusion to the large scales of the crown; < Gr. μακρός, long, + σκέπας, covering.] A small genus of asclepiadaceous plants of the tribe Asclepiadeæ. The tube of the fleshy corolla is thick, and the five-cleft limb is very spreading; a crown of five scales is inflexed in the throat. The stigma is depressed. The genus embraces 6 or 7 closely related species of twining, high-climbing shrubby plants covered with bristly hairs, ranging from Peru to Mexico. One or more of the species furnish a kind of the aromatic bitter drug cundurango.

macroscian (mak-ros'i-an), a. and n. [< Gr. μακρόσκιος, having a long shadow, < μακρός, long, + σκιά, shadow.] I. a. Casting a long shadow, as persons or objects in high latitudes.

II. n. One who casts a long shadow; specifically, an inhabitant of the arctic or the antarctic zone: so called because objects near the poles intercept the sun's rays at a very low angle, and therefore cast very long shadows. Compare antiscian.

macroscopic (mak-rō-skop'ik), a. [< Gr. μακρός, long, large, + σκοπεῖν, view.] Same as megascopic.

macroscopical (mak-rō-skop'i-kal), a. [< macroscopic + -al.] Same as megascopic. Quain, Med. Dict., p. 892.

macroscopically (mak-rō-skop'i-kal-i), adv. By the naked eye; by superficial inspection, as distinguished from minute or microscopic inspection; without the use of magnifiers.

macroseptum (mak-rō-sep'tum), n.; pl. macrosepta (-tä). [NL., < Gr. μακρός, long, + L. septum, a partition: see septum.] A large perfect septum or mesentery of an actinozoan, furnished with reproductive organs: opposed to microseptum.

macrosiphon (mak-rō-sī'fon), n. [NL., < Gr. μακρός, long, + σίφων, siphon: see siphon.] The large horny internal (endoceratitic) siphon or funnel of some cephalopods. See macrosiphonula.

macrosiphonula (mak″rō-sī-fon'ū-lä), n.; pl. macrosiphonulæ (-lē). [NL., dim. of macrosiphon.] The larval stage of certain cephalopods, as nautiloids, during which the large endoceratitic siphon makes its appearance. Hyatt, Proc. Bost. Soc. Nat. Hist., 1887.

macrosiphonular (mak″rō-sī-fon'ū-lär), a. [< macrosiphonula + -ar[2].] Macrosiphonulate.

macrosiphonulate (mak″rō-sī-fon'ū-lāt), a. [< macrosiphonula + -ate[1].] Pertaining to or of the nature of a macrosiphonula. Amer. Nat., XXII. 878.

macrosomite (mak-rō-sō'mīt), n. [< Gr. μακρός, long, + σῶμα, body: see somite.] A large somite or primitive metamere; one of the larger primary segments or divisions of the embryo of some insects, preceding the formation of the definitive metameres, or microsomites. Amer. Nat., XXII. 941.

macrosomitic (mak″rō-sō-mit'ik), a. [< macrosomite + -ic.] Of the nature of a macrosomite; pertaining to a macrosomite. Amer. Nat., XXII. 941.

macrosporange (mak-rō-spō'ranj), n. [< NL. macrosporangium, q.v.] Same as macrosporangium.

macrosporangiophore (mak″rō-spō-ran'ji-ō-fōr), n. [NL., < Gr. μακρός, long, large, + σπορά, seed, + ἀγγεῖον, vessel, + -φόρος, < φέρειν = E. bear[1].] The envelop or foliage-leaf about or bearing the macrosporangium.

The foliage leaves, the envelopes of the spore-bearing leaves, the micro- and macrosporangiophores had become permanently differentiated in ascending order. Geddes, Encyc. Brit., XVI. 846.

macrosporangium (mak″rō-spō-ran'ji-um), n.; pl. macrosporangia (-ä). [NL., < Gr. μακρός, long, + σπορά, seed, + ἀγγεῖον, vessel.] A sporangium containing macrospores. It is homologous with the nucellus of flowering plants. Also called goniotheca.

The microspores, doubtless through the intervention of a spore-eating insect, had come to germinate upon the macrosporangium instead of upon the ground. Geddes, Encyc. Brit., XVI. 846.

macrospore (mak'rō-spōr), n. [< Gr. μακρός, long, + σπορά, seed: see spore.] 1. In bot., an asexually produced spore of large size as compared with others belonging to the same species. It is the female spore, and is homologous with the embryo-sac of phanerogams. See heterosporous and microspore, and cut under Isoetes.

In some of the living club-mosses there are two kinds of spores, one being much larger than the other. The larger are known as macrospores, whilst the smaller are called microspores. Huxley, Physiography, p. 241.

2. In zoöl., one of the spore-like elements, few in number, but of relatively large size, into which the bodies of many monads become subdivided. Also megaspore.

Macrosporium (mak-rō-spō'ri-um), n. [NL., < Gr. μακρός, long, + σπορά, seed.] A genus of dematiaceous fungi with erect or ascending fertile hyphæ bearing muriform conidia.

macrosporoid (mak-rō-spō'roid), a. [NL., < Gr. μακρός, long, + σπορά, seed, + εἶδος, form.] Resembling or related to the genus Macrosporium.

macrosporophyl, macrosporophyll (mak-rō-spō'rō-fil), n. [NL., < Gr. μακρός, long, large, + σπορά, seed, + φύλλον, leaf.] The leaf bearing the macrosporangium of the heterosporous Pteridophyta, the homologue of the carpel in the Spermatophyta.

Macrostachya (mak-rō-stak'i-ä), n. [NL., < Gr. μακρός, long, + στάχυς, stachys: see stachys.] A genus of fossil plants established by Schimper (1869), belonging to the Calamariaceæ. They are arborescent plants with stems, described as Cyclocladia by Lindley and Hutton (1834) and Calamitina by Weiss (1876), marked by nodes of periodically varying distance, which were provided with appressed linear leaves and periodical branch verticils. The leaf-scars appear as transversely oval rings, like the links of a chain; the branch-scars are large, round, umbonate, with a stigmarioid central mammilla; the spikes are large, cylindrical; the bracts are lanceolate, confluent, costate, imbricate, not much longer than the internodes. Seventeen species are known, ranging from the Lower Carboniferous to the Permian, in Europe and America.

Macrostoma (mak-ros'tō-mä), n. pl. [< Gr. μακρός, long, + στόμα, mouth.] A family of trachelipod gastropods with a very large mouth or aperture to the shell, such as those of the genera Stomatia and Stomatella. Lamarck, 1812. Also Macrostomata, Macrostomiana (Jay, 1836), and Macrostomidæ.

macrostome (mak'rō-stōm), n. [< Gr. μακρός, long, + στόμα, mouth.] A gastropod whose shell has a very wide or patent aperture, as one of the Haliotidæ.

Macrostomidæ (mak-rō-stom'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Macrostoma + -idæ.] Same as Macrostoma.

Macrostomum (mak-ros'tō-mum), n. [NL., < Gr. μακρός, long, + στόμα, aperture.] A genus of rhabdocœlous turbellarians, among the simplest of the Aprocta. It has no protrusile buccal proboscis. The male and female organs are united in the same individual, but open by separate apertures.

macrostyle (mak'rō-stīl), a. [< Gr. μακρός, long, + στῦλος, pillar: see style[2].] In bot., having an unusually long style.

macrostylospore (mak-rō-stī'lō-spōr), n. [NL., < Gr. μακρός, long, large, + στῦλος, pillar, + σπορά, seed.] In bot., a stylospore of large size as compared with others of the same species. See stylospore.

Macrotarsi (mak-rō-tär'sī), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. μακρός, long, + ταρσός, any broad, flat surface: see tarsus.] In Illiger's classification (1811), a family of his Pollicata, including the tarsier and certain of the lemurs.

macrotarsian (mak-rō-tär'si-an), a. and n. [As Macrotarsi + -an.] I. a. Having long tarsi.

II. n. An animal that has long tarsi.

Macrotarsius (mak-rō-tär'si-us), n. [NL.: see Macrotarsi.] Same as Cursorius.

macrothere (mak'rō-thēr), n. An animal of the genus Macrotherium.

Macrotheriidæ (mak″rō-thē-rī'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., ‹ Macrotherium + -idæ.] A family of large fossil ungulate mammals, remains of which occur in the Miocene of France and Greece, and indicate a generalized type related in some respects to the edentates. Same as Chalicotheriidæ.

macrotherioid (mak-rō-thē'ri-oid), a. [‹ Macrotherium + -oid.] Resembling or related to the macrotheres.

Macrotherium (mak-rō-thē'ri-um), n. [NL., ‹ Gr. μακρός, long, + θηρίον, a wild beast.] The typical genus of Macrotheriidæ. It was supposed to represent the oldest type of edentates, but is now regarded as a highly modified and aberrant ungulate. Remains occur in the Miocene of France.

macrotin (mak'rō-tin), n. Same as cimicifugin.

Macrotis (mak-rō'tis), n. [NL., ‹ Gr. μακρός, long, + οὖς (ὠτ-) = E. ear[1]: see Otis.] 1. A genus of bandicoots of the family Peramelidæ, having long pointed ears like those of a rabbit, proportionally longer hind limbs than the typical bandicoots, the hallux wanting, the tail long and hairy, and the pouch opening forward. M. lagotis is called the native rabbit in Australia, from its size and general appearance. —2. A genus of tenebrionine beetles. Dejean, 1833.

macrotome (mak'rō-tōm), n. [‹ Gr. as if μακροτόμος*, cf. μακρότομος, cut long (said of shoots so pruned), ‹ μακρός, long, + τέμνειν, ταμεῖν, cut.] An apparatus by the aid of which gross sections may be made of a specimen for anatomical purposes.

macrotone (mak'rō-tōn), n. [‹ Gr. μακρός, long, + τόνος, tone. Cf. Gr. μακρότονος, stretched out, ‹ μακρός, long, + τείνειν, stretch.] Same as macron.

macrotous (mak-rō'tus), a. [‹ MGr. μακρώτης, long-eared, ‹ Gr. μακρός, long, + οὖς (ὠτ-) = E. ear[1].] Long-eared.

Macrotrachia (mak″rō-trā-kī'ä), n. pl. [NL., so called in allusion to the siphons, ‹ μακρός, long, + τραχεῖα, trachea: see trachea.] A tribe of Dithyra or bivalves characterized by the elongated siphons, embracing the families Pholadidæ, Myidæ, Tellinidæ, etc. Swainson, 1840.

macrotypous (mak'rō-tī-pus), a. [‹ Gr. μακρός, long, + τύπος, form: see type.] In mineral., having a long form.

Macroura, macroural, etc. See Macrura, etc.

Macrozamia (mak-rō-zā'mi-ä), n. [NL. (Miquel, 1842), so called in allusion to the sterile appearance of the male fructification; ‹ Gr. μακρός, large, + ζαμία, loss.] A genus of gymnosperms belonging to the family Cycadaceæ, the tribe Zamieæ, and the subtribe Zamiinæ, characterized by the female cones having hard peltate scales, usually produced into an erect acuminate blade. They are low forms, with an erect ovoid or cylindrical trunk, covered by the persistent bases of the petioles, living in swampy places near the sea, and have pinnate leaves resembling the fronds of tree-ferns, occasionally twisted in some species, and large cones. About 14 species are known, all inhabitants of tropical and temperate Australia; several of these are cultivated for ornament. From their general appearance, plants of this genus sometimes receive the name of fern-palm. M. spiralis is the burrawang nut. See cut under Cycadaceæ.

macrozoögonidium (mak-rō-zō″ō-gō-nid'i-um), n.; pl. macrozoögonidia (-ä). [NL., ‹ Gr. μακρός, long, large, + ζῷον, an animal, + NL. gonidium, q. v.] In bot., a zoögonidium of large size as compared with others of the same species, as those produced by certain fresh-water algæ.

The protoplasmic contents of certain cells [of Hydrodictyon] break up into a large number of daughter-cells (macrozoögonidia), there being often as many as 7000 to 20,000. Bessey, Botany, p. 228.

macrozoöspore (mak-rō-zō'ō-spōr), n. [‹ Gr. μακρός, long, + ζῷον, an animal, + σπορά, seed. Cf. zoöspore.] 1. In zoöl., a macrospore.

The macrozoöspore soon acquires a thin cell-wall, through which the cilia protrude.
Huxley and Martin, Elementary Biology, p. 391.

2. In bot., a zoöspore of large size as compared with others produced in the same species.

In some cases the protoplasm of the cell [of Hæmatococcus] divides only once or twice, the result being the formation of two or four relatively large zoöspores, called macrozoöspores. Vines, Physiology of Plants, p. 605.

Macrura (mak-rō'rä), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of macrurus, long-tailed: see macrurous.] A suborder or superfamily group of stalk-eyed thoracostracous crustaceans of the order Decapoda, containing those which are long-tailed, as the lobster, crawfish, prawn, shrimp, etc.: distinguished from Brachyura and Anomura. The abdomen is long, muscular, flexible, and covered with a hard, segmented shell; it bears usually six pairs of appendages, the last modified into a caudal fin or swimming-tail. Both pairs of feelers are long and filiform; the inner pair are always exserted, and the outer have often a modified exopodite as an appendage at the base. Also spelled Macroura.

macruran (mak-rō'ran), n. [‹ Macrura + -an.] A member of the group Macrura.

Macruridæ (mak-rō'ri-dē), n. pl. [NL., ‹ Macrurus + -idæ.] A family of anacanthine fishes: more correctly Macrouridæ. It consists of gadoids which have an elongated tail tapering backward and without a separate caudal fin, a postpectoral anus, enlarged suborbital bones, an inferior mouth, subbrachial ventral fins, a distinct anterior dorsal, and a long second dorsal and anal. The family includes about 50 deep-sea fishes, of 12 or more genera, known as grenadiers, etc.

macruroid (mak-rō'roid), a. and n. [‹ Macrurus + -oid.] I. a. Pertaining to the Macruridæ, or having their characters.

II. n. A member of the family Macruridæ.

macrurous (mak-rō'rus), a. [‹ NL. Macrurus, long-tailed, ‹ Gr. μακρός, long, + οὐρά, tail.] Long-tailed; longicaudate.

Macrurus (mak-rō'rus), n. [NL.: see macrurous.] 1. In ichth., the typical genus of Macruridæ, having a long tapering tail. M. bergax, the rattail, and M. (Coryphænoides) rupestris are the two best known, both inhabiting deep water of the North Atlantic. More correctly Macrourus. Bloch, 1787.

Grenadier, or Onion-fish (Macrurus rupestris).

2. A genus of dipterous insects. Lioy, 1864.

mactation (mak-tā'shon), n. [= OF. mactation, ‹ LL. mactatio(n-), a killing for sacrifice, ‹ mactare (> It. matare = Sp. Pg. matar = OF. macter), offer for sacrifice, sacrifice, immolate, kill, slaughter.] The act of killing a victim for sacrifice. [Rare.]

Here they call Cain's offering, which is described and allowed to be the first fruits of the ground only, θυσίαν, a sacrifice or mactation.
Shuckford, On the Creation, Pref., p. ciii.

mactator† (mak-tā'tor), n. [‹ L. mactator, a slayer, ‹ mactare, sacrifice, kill. Cf. matador, from the same source.] One who kills a victim for sacrifice. [Rare.]

Mactra (mak'trä), n. [NL., ‹ Gr. μάκτρα, a kneading-trough, ‹ μάσσειν (√ μακ), knead: see macerate.] The typical genus of the family Mactridæ. Upward of 100 species are described, of world-wide distribution. M. (or Spisula) solidissima is a large species with a thick heavy shell, five or six inches long, abundant along the Atlantic coast of the United States on sandy beaches. It is known as the surf-clam, sea-clam, and hen-clam, and is used for soups and chowders.

Mactracea (mak-trā'sē-ä), n. pl. [NL., ‹ Mactra + -acea.] 1†. A family of acephalous or bivalve mollusks, comprising the genera Mactra, Lutraria, Crassatella, Erycina, Ungulina, Solemya, and Amphidesma, and scattered in several different families. Lamarck, 1809.—2. Now a suborder or superfamily of bivalves, including only the family Mactridæ and related forms.

mactracean (mak-trā'sē-an), a. and n. [‹ mactrace-ous + -an.] I. a. Mactraceous.

II. n. A member of the family Mactridæ.

mactraceous (mak-trā'shius), a. [‹ Mactra + -aceous.] Having the characters of the Mactridæ; mactroid.

Mactridæ (mak'tri-dē), n. pl. [NL., ‹ Mactra + -idæ.] A family of siphonate bivalve mollusks, typified by the genus Mactra; the round-clams or trough-shells. The shell is equivalve, trigonal, and sinupallial, and has generally close-fitting valves. The hinge is characteristic, that of the left valve having a V-shaped cardinal tooth closing into two divergent branches of the right valve's cardinal tooth. The mantle is open in front, and the long united siphonal tubes are fringed with tentaculiform processes. The foot is linguiform. The Mactridæ are mostly marine shells of wide distribution. They are also called Mactræidæ, Mactradæ, Mactracea, and Mactrina.

Mactra stultorum (right valve).

mactroid (mak'troid), a. and n. [‹ Mactra + -oid.] I. a. Of or pertaining to the Mactridæ.

II. n. A member of the family Mactridæ.

macuca (ma-kū'kä), n. [Tupi.] A large tinamou of South America, Tinamus major.

macula (mak'ū-lä), n.; pl. maculæ (-lē). [L., a spot, stain: see macle, mackle, macule, mail[1].] A spot; a blotch. Specifically—(a) A temporary or permanent discoloration of a larger or smaller piece of skin, as by excess or lack of pigment, by extravasation of blood, by telangiectasis, by localized hyperemia, or otherwise. (b) A dark area on a luminous surface, specifically on the disk of the sun or of the moon. A solar macula is usually called a sun-spot.

And lastly, the body of the sun may contract some spots or maculæ greater than usual, and by that means be darkened. T. Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

Cerebral maculæ. See cerebral.—Macula acustica, the somewhat opaque spot in the utriculus of the membranous labyrinth where the branches of the auditory nerve enter it.—Macula cribrosa, the sieve like spot, a patch of minute foramina in the fovea hemispherica of the vestibule of the ear, through which filaments of the auditory nerve pass.—Macula germinativa, the so-called germinal spot or macula, or Wagnerian corpuscle; the nucleolus of an ovum.—Macula lutea, the yellow spot of the retina of the eye, an oval yellow patch, about $\frac{1}{20}$ of an inch in diameter, on the retina opposite the pupil, and the position of most distinct vision. See retina.

macular (mak'ū-lär), a. [‹ macula + -ar[2].] Spotted; exhibiting or characterized by spots: as, a macular condition or appearance.

maculate (mak'ū-lāt), v. t.; pret. and pp. maculated, ppr. maculating. [‹ L. maculatus, pp. of maculare, spot, speckle, ‹ macula, a spot: see macula, macule.] To spot; stain; blur.

They blush, and think an honest act
Dooth their supposed vertues maculate.
Marston, Satires, iii. 50.

For Warts, we rub our Hands before the Moon, and commit any maculated Part to the Touch of the Dead.
Bourne's Pop. Antiq. (1777), p. 97.

Maculated fever. See fever[1].

maculate (mak'ū-lāt), a. [‹ L. maculatus, pp.: see the verb.] Spotted; marked with spots; blotted; hence, stained; defiled; impure.

Arm. My love is most immaculate white and red.
Moth. Most maculate thoughts, master, are masked under such colours. Shak., L. L. L., i. 2. 97.

Oh, vouchsafe,
With that thy rare green eye, which never yet
Beheld thing maculate, look on thy virgin!
Fletcher (and another), Two Noble Kinsmen, v. 1.

maculation (mak-ū-lā'shon), n. [= It. macolazione, maculazione, ‹ L. maculatio(n-), a spotting, spot, ‹ maculare, spot: see maculate.] 1. The act of spotting, or the state of being spotted.—2. The manner of spotting, or the pattern of the spots with which an animal or plant is marked.

Patches of vividly red Poppies, with fine black maculations, like eyes, edged with white.
Amer. Nat., XXII. 642.

The maculation is normally noctuidous, and the wings are ample. Science, IV. 44.

3. A staining; defilement; smirching.

For I will throw my glove to Death himself,
That there's no maculation in thy heart.
Shak., T. and C., iv. 4. 66.

To suffer it to start out in the life of her son was in a manner to publish again her own obliterated maculation.
The Atlantic, LVIII. 443.

maculatory (mak'ū-lā-tō-ri), a. [‹ maculate + -ory.] Defiling; staining.

The lutulent, spumy, maculatory waters of sin.
Rev. T. Adams, Works, I. 166. (Davies.)

I was the mistress o' Pitfan,
And madam o' Kincraigie.
Gight's Lady (Child's Ballads, VIII. 286).

Sly. What must I call her?
Lord. Madam.
Sly. Al'ce madam, or Joan madam?
Lord. Madam, and nothing else; so lords call ladies.
Shak., T. of the S., Ind., 2. 111.

That is Madam Lucy—my master's mistress's maid.
Sheridan, Rivals, i. 1.

Take, Madam, this poor book of song.
Tennyson, To the Queen.

(a) A title used to designate women under the rank of Lady, but moving in respectable society; prefixed to a surname, equivalent to Mrs. Compare mistress.

Good people all, with one accord, Lament for Madam Blaize.
Goldsmith, Elegy on Mrs. Mary Blaize.

Here [in Plymouth, Massachusetts] and in some neighbouring places it has been and still [1807] is the practice to prefix to the name of a deceased female of some consideration, as the parson's, the deacon's, or the doctor's wife, the title of madam.
E. A. Kendall, Travels, II. 44. (Pickering.)

(b) See the quotation. The use mentioned is not uncommon in all parts of the United States.

The title of Madam is sometimes given here [in Boston], and generally in . . . the South, to a mother whose son has married, and the daughter-in-law is then called "Mrs." By this means they avoid the inelegant phraseology of "old Mrs. A," or the Scotch "Mrs A, senior."
Sir C. Lyell, Second Visit, ix. (Bartlett.)

2. A lady; a woman of fashion or pretension: often used with a suggestion of disparagement: as, a conceited madam; city madams.—Miscellany madam†. See miscellany.—The Madam, the mistress; the head of a household. [Vulgar, U. S.]

madam (mad'am), v. t. [< madam, n.] To address as madam.

Madam me no madam. Dryden, Wild Gallant, ii. 2.

I am reminded of my vowed obedience; Madam'd up perhaps to matrimonial perfection.
Richardson, Clarissa Harlowe, VIII. 303. (Davies.)

madame (ma-däm' or mad'am), n.; pl. mesdames (mā-däm'). [F.: see madam, the naturalized E. form.] 1. Madam; my lady: a term of address used like madam, but more formal or affected. Abbreviated Mme.

In Egypt, dear madame, it is considered unwomanly . . . for a lady to show more of her face than one eye behind a veil. G. W. Curtis, Harper's Mag., XLIV. 775.

2. Formerly, in France, a term of address to a woman of rank, whether married or single. See mademoiselle, 1 and 2.

madam-town†, n. The chief or finest town of a country.

Flourishing London, the staple of wealth and madametowne of the realme, is there no place so lewde as thy selfe? G. Harvey, Pierce's Supererogation (1593).

Lest your whole body should madden with the poison?
Tennyson, Queen Mary, iii. 4.

II. trans. To make mad; excite violently; enrage; craze.

Weapon-clash, and maddening cry
Of those who kill and those who die.
Scott, Rokeby, v. 31.

★madder[1] (mad'ėr), n. [< ME. mader, < AS. mædere, mæddre = D. meede, mee = Icel. madhra, madder. The Ir. madar, madra, madder, is ap-

1. Branches of Madder (Rubia tinctorum) with flowers and fruits. 2. The rhizome. a, a flower; b, the pistil; c, two different fruits.

par. < E. madder. Cf. Skt. madhurā, the name of several plants, < madhura, sweet, tender, < madhu, sweet: see mead[1].] 1. A plant of the genus Rubia, and family Rubiaceæ, yielding a valuable dyestuff of the same name. The ordinary dyers' madder is R. tinctorum, native of the Mediterranean region, a climbing, herbaceous, or at the base somewhat shrubby plant, with whorls of dark green leaves and panicles of small yellowish 4–5-merous flowers, and with long succulent perennial roots. It was formerly esteemed as an emmenagogue and diuretic. R. cordifolia, of India, eastern Asia, and parts of Africa, affords garancin, and is used for the same purposes as European madder; it forms the madder of India, the Bengal madder or munjeet. R. peregrina is the proper wild madder of England, found throughout western and southern Europe. 2. A dyestuff and pigment obtained from the roots of Rubia tinctorum and other plants of the same family. It yields colors of the greatest permanence, and is employed in dyeing linen and cotton red. Two kinds are fixed upon cotton: one is called madder-red, and the other, which possesses a much higher degree of luster and fixity, is called Adrianople red, because it is largely exported from that city, or Turkey red, from the fact that for a long time it was mainly obtained from the Levant; it is also produced near Leghorn and Trieste. In the trade this madder bears the name of alizari or lizari. The roots are broken up by means of wooden stampers, which reduce the bark and splint-bark to powder, leaving the hard inner part unbroken; but the whole root is sometimes pulverized. The coloring principle of madder is termed alizarin. Madder contains also a red pigment, purpurin or rubiacin, which is extracted in the form of orange-colored prismatic crystals, and yields a good dye, either alone or in combination with alizarin. Through the peculiar chemical affinity of phosphate of lime for its coloring matter, madder is noted for its remarkable physiological effect of turning red the bones of animals to which it is fed, as well as the claws and beaks of birds.—Brown madder, a lake prepared from madder-root, having a rich brown color of great depth.—Capucine madder. See capucine[2].—Flowers of madder, the trade-name for a preparation made by steeping pulverized madder, causing the sugar it contains to ferment, then washing the residue, pressing out the water, drying, and pulverizing it again. It is used for dyeing purposes in the same manner as ordinary madder. Also called refined madder and madder-bloom.—Indian madder. (a) Rubia cordifolia. (b) Oldenlandia umbellata. (c) Some species of the genus Hedyotis.—Madder-brown. See brown.—Madder-carmine, a pigment made by precipitating the coloring matter of the madder-root upon a base of alumina.—Madder color, a pigment derived from madder or its compounds. Madder colors range from brown, through yellow, rose, and red, to deep purple, and are much used in dyeing and the fine arts.—Madder lakes (pink madder, rose madder, madder lake, purple madder, brown madder, Rubens's madder, madder-yellow, madder-orange), lakes prepared from madder varying in shade from pink through red and yellow to purple and brown. These are also known as rubric lakes.—Madder-red. See def. 2.—Madder style, a method of calico-printing in which the parts of the cloth which are to receive a madder color are printed with a mordant, washed and rinsed in a solution of alum and size, and then drawn through a colored solution which becomes fixed where the mordant has been applied, after which the dye is washed off the unmordanted part of the cloth. Also called chintz style, garancin style.—Petty madder, a plant of the genus Crucianella, of the Mediterranean region. Also called crosswort.—Refined madder. Same as flowers of madder.—Wild madder. (a) Rubia peregrina. (b) The white bedstraw, Galium Mollugo.

madder[1] (mad′ėr), v. t. [< madder[1], n.] To dye with madder.

I madder clothe to be dyed, je garence. Your vyolet hath not his full dye, but he is maddered. Palsgrave.

madder[2]† (mad′ėr), n. [< Ir. meadar.] A square wooden drinking-vessel.

madder-print (mad′ėr-print), n. Cloth printed with designs in madder, or in colors of which madder forms a part; especially, cotton prints so made.

madderwort (mad′ėr-wėrt), n. Any plant of the madder family, Rubiaceæ.

madding (mad′ing), n. [Verbal n. of mad[1], v.] Madness; folly; a vagary; a wild freak or prank.

By my troth, your sorrow,
And the consideration of men's humorous maddings,
Have put me into a serious contemplation.
Fletcher, Wildgoose Chase, ii. 3.

madding (mad′ing), p. a. Becoming mad; acting madly; distracted; raging; furious.

But now from me hys madding mynd is starte,
And woes the Widdowes daughter of the glenne.
Spenser, Shep. Cal., April.

Far from the madding crowd's ignoble strife.
Gray, Elegy.

Then schemes I framed more calmly, when and how
The madding factions might be tranquillized.
Wordsworth, Prelude, x.

maddingly (mad′ing-li), adv. In a mad way; distractedly; wildly.

Run maddingly affrighted through the villages.
Fletcher, Women Pleased, iv. 1.

maddle (mad′l), v.; pret. and pp. maddled, ppr. maddling. [Freq. of mad[1], v.] I. intrans. 1. To rave; be delirious. Levins.—2. To be confused. [Prov. Eng.]

II. trans. To confuse; perplex. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

maddling (mad′ling), p. a. [Formerly also madling; ppr. of maddle, v.] Raving; mad; crazy.

Som takes a staf for hast, and leaues his launce,
Som madling runnes, som trembles in a trance.
Hudson, tr. of Du Bartas's Judith, vi. 240.

maddock† (mad′ok), a. [< ME. mathek, < Icel. madhkr = Norw. makk = Dan. maddik, a maggot; dim. of the form which appears in AS. mathu, etc., E. mad[2], made[2]: see mad[2]. The same word appears contracted in mawk[1], q. v.] A maggot. Kennett MS. (Halliwell.) mad-doctor (mad′dok″tor), n. A physician who treats insane persons; an alienist. [Colloq.]

made[1] (mād), p. a. [Pp. of make[1].] 1. Created; wrought; fabricated; constructed.

O, think on that;
And mercy then will breathe within your lips,
Like man new made. Shak., M. for M., ii. 2. 79.

2. Artificially produced; formed independently of natural development: as, made ground (ground made up of earth from another place); a made word.

And Arte, with her contending, doth aspire
T' excell the naturall with made delights.
Spenser, Muiopotmos, l. 166.

3. Drawn from various sources; formed of several parts or ingredients: as, a made dish; composite; built up: as, a made mast (a mast composed of several sticks bound together by iron hoops, in contradistinction to a single-spar mast).

A made dish, . . . garnished with cut carrots by way of adornment. Bulwer, Pelham, xli.

4. Placed beyond the reach of want; assured of reward, success, fortune, or promotion; well provided for life.

Syph. Oh, happy I!
Chi. You are a made man. Fletcher, Mad Lover, v. 4.

Help us to break his worship's bones, and carry off the girl, and you are a made man.
Sheridan, St. Patrick's Day, ii. 1.

5. Well taught or trained, as a hunting-dog.

To make a trial whether a young bloodhound was well instructed (or, as the huntsmen call it, made).
Quoted in The Century, XXXVIII. 191.

Made block. See block[1].—Made up. (a) Put together; completed; finished.

Deform'd, unfinished, sent before my time
Into this breathing world, scarce half made up.
Shak., Rich. III., i. 1. 21.

(b) Thorough; consummate; out-and-out. [Rare.]

Yet remain assured
That he's a made-up villain.
Shak., T. of A., v. 1. 101.

(c) Artificial; meretricious.

Hast. But you must allow her some beauty?
Tony. Bandbox! She's all a made-up thing.
Goldsmith, She Stoops to Conquer, ii. 1.

(d) Concocted; invented; fictitious: as, a made-up tale or excuse.

made[2], n. See mad[2].

Madreporacea (mad$^{\prime\prime}$-rē-pō-rā'sē-ä), n. pl. [NL., < Madrepora + -acea.] A group of stone-corals, more or less exactly equivalent to Madreporaria.

madreporal (mad'rē-pō-ral), a. [< madrepore + -al.] Of or pertaining to madrepores; consisting of madrepores.

Madreporaria (mad$^{\prime\prime}$rē-pō-rā'ri-ä), n. pl. [NL., < Madrepora + -aria.] A general name of the madrepores and related corals which are hexacoralline or hexactinoid and have a continuous hard calcareous skeleton. The term covers not only the Madreporidæ proper, but the Fungiidæ or mushroom-corals, the Astræidæ or star-corals, and related families. In a still wider sense, Madreporaria is an order of the class Actinozoa, including all the hard actinoid or actiniform corals, or sclerodermatous zoantharians, whether hexameral or tetrameral, and whether tabulate, tubulose, perforate, aporose, or rugose. It is then equivalent to Lithocorallia and Sclerodermata, or to the old Lithophyta minus the Alcyonaria and other sclerobasic zoantharians.

madreporarian (mad$^{\prime\prime}$rē-pō-rā'ri-an), a. and n. I. a. Pertaining to the Madreporaria, or having their characters.

II. n. A coral of the group Madreporaria.

madrepore (mad'rē-pōr), n. [< F. madrépore = Sp. madrépora = Pg. madrepora, < It. madrepora, coral, appar. lit. 'mother-stone' (cf. madreperla, 'mother-pearl,' mother-of-pearl: see madreperl), < madre, < L. mater, = E. mother, + (appar.) Gr. πῶρος, a light friable stone, a stalactite, or, as now understood, πόρος (> It. poro), pore: see pore[2].] An animal, or a coral, of the genus Madrepora or family Madreporidæ; the polypite or the polypidom of a perforate madreporarian: a name loosely extended to any stone-coral with madreporiform cavities or openings. In true madrepore the animal or polypite is hexameral with twelve short tentacles, and the polypidom is of branching form and stony hardness. Madrepore coral consists of carbonate of lime, with traces of animal matter, and is formed by gradual deposition in the tissues of the compound polyp, so that in course of time the whole presents the appearance of a number of polyps supported on an extraneous body. When the animal matter has been removed madrepore is of a white color, wrinkled on the surface, and full of little cavities, in each of which an individual polyp was lodged, the radiating septa of the cavities corresponding to the internal divisions of the animal. Madrepores raise up walls and reefs of coral rocks with considerable rapidity in tropical climates.—Madrepore glass. See glass.—Madrepore marble, madreporitic marble.

Madrepore Corals.

★madreporic (mad-rē-por'ik), a. [< madrepore + -ic.] Of or pertaining to madrepore; of the character of the madrepore; pierced with minute holes like a madrepore. Also madreporite.—Madreporic canals, in echinoderms, tubular prolongations of the circular vessel of the ambulacral system, having perforated ends and terminating in a calcareous network, or other hard formation, known as the madreporic body, madreporic tubercle, or madreporite.—Madreporic plate, in echinoderms, a madreporite.—Madreporic tubercle, a tubercular madreporic body, or madreporite.

Madreporidæ (mad-rē-por'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Madrepora + -idæ.] The madrepore family, typified by the genus Madrepora. Its limits vary with different authors, but in the strictest use it consists of several different genera, agreeing in that the polypites and polyp-stocks have porous cœnenchyma, perforated thecæ, little-developed septa, and an open gastric cavity communicating with the canal in the axis of the branched polypidom.

madreporiform (mad'rē-pō-ri-fôrm), a. [< NL. Madrepora, a madrepore, + L. forma, form.] Resembling a madrepore; characteristic of a madrepore; madreporic.

Madreporinæ (mad$^{\prime\prime}$rē-pō-rī'nē), n. pl. [NL., < Madrepora + -inæ.] A subfamily of Madreporidæ.

madreporite (mad'rē-pō-rīt), n. and a. [< madrepore + -ite[2].] I. n. 1. Fossil madrepore.—2. In echinoderms, the madreporic body or tubercle; the interradial aboral porous plate at the termination of the madreporic canals. Huxley.

II. a. Same as madreporic.

madreporitic (mad$^{\prime\prime}$rē-pō-rit'ik), a. [< madreporite + -ic.] Pertaining to or consisting of madreporite, or made up of various corals more or less mixed with fragments of the shells of mollusks, all loosely classed together as madrepores: as, madreporitic rocks.

madrier (mad'ri-ėr), n. [F., earlier madier, a beam or stout plank, < Sp. madero, a beam, < madera, wood: see matter.] In milit. engin.: (a) In the seventeenth century, a heavy timber forming the chief or central part of the carriage of a cannon or mortar; hence, the whole carriage or mounting of a piece of artillery. Grose. (b) A plank lined with tin and covered with earth for roofing over certain parts of military works, in order to afford protection in lodgments, etc. (c) A plank used to support the earth in a mine, or in a moat or ditch to support a wall.

madrigal (mad'ri-gal), n. [< F. madrigal = Sp. madrigal, OSp. mandrial, mandrigal = Pg. madrigal = G. madrigal, < It. madrigale, OIt. madriale, mandriale, also mandriano, a short poem, a pastoral ditty (> ML. matriale), < mandra, a herd, flock, < L. mandra, a stall, a herd, < Gr. μάνδρα, a fold, an inclosed space, the bed on which the stone of a ring is set, a monastery. Cf. archimandrite, mandrel, from the same Gr. source.] 1. A medieval poem or song, amorous, pastoral, or descriptive. The distinguishing characteristics of the madrigal are now hard to determine.

By shallow rivers to whose falls
Melodious birds sing madrigals.
Marlowe, Passionate Shepherd to his Love.

2. In music: (a) A musical setting of such a poem. Strict madrigal-writing involves the use of a canto fermo, adherence to one of the ecclesiastical modes throughout, the abundant use of contrapuntal imitation in all its varieties, and the absence of instrumental accompaniment. This form of composition appeared in the Low Countries in the fifteenth century, and soon spread to Italy, Germany, France, and England. In Italy and England it attained a notable perfection and beauty, passing over in the latter country into the modern glee. Madrigals were written for from three to eight or more voices. The sentiments embodied varied from grave to gay, with a constant tendency to the latter. The choruses in the earlier operas and oratorios were madrigals. (b) A glee or part-song in general, irrespective of contrapuntal qualities.

madrigaler† (mad'ri-gal-ėr), n. A writer or composer of madrigals.

Satyrists, panegyrists, madrigallers.
Tom Brown, Works, II. 155. (Davies.)

madrigaletto (mad$^{\prime\prime}$ri-ga-let'ō), n. [It., dim. of madrigale, a madrigal: see madrigal.] A little madrigal.

madrigalian (mad-ri-gā'li-an), a. [< madrigal + -ian.] Of or pertaining to madrigals.

The English madrigalian writers being represented solely by Morley's "My Bonny Lass." Athenæum, July 8, 1882.

madrigalist (mad'ri-gal-ist), n. [< madrigal + -ist.] A composer or singer of madrigals. Burney, Hist. Music, IV. 46.

Madrilenian (mad-ri-lē'ni-an), a. and n. [< Sp. Madrileño (for Madridaño*, the second d being changed by dissimilation to l), an inhabitant of Madrid, < Madrid.] I. a. Of or belonging to Madrid.

II. n. A native or an inhabitant of Madrid, the capital of Spain.

★madroño (ma-drō'nyō), n. [Sp.] A tree, Arbutus Menziesii, of western North America, toward the south becoming a shrub. It bears a yellow berry, scarcely edible. Its wood is very hard, and is much used in the manufacture of gunpowder. Its bark is valuable for tanning. Also madroña.

Even the madroña, upon these spurs of Mount Saint Helena, comes to a fine bulk, and ranks with forest trees.
R. L. Stevenson, Silverado Squatters, p. 86.

madstone (mad'stōn), n. A stone popularly reputed to cure hydrophobia, or to prevent it when threatened. It is applied to the wound, from which it is supposed to draw the poison. The belief in its value has no scientific sanction. [U. S.]

Among the various individuals in Pennsylvania who profess ability in exorcism and charms, we occasionally find one who is reputed to possess a mad-stone. These pebbles are of various sizes, and appear to have been selected on account of some peculiarity of color or form. A specimen which had a high reputation in the State from which it had been brought was described by the present writer as consisting of a worn piece of white feldspar, and possessing none of the properties of absorption attributed to it.
Proc. Am. Phil. Soc., XXVI. (1889), 336.

madu-nut (mad'ṏ-nut), n. The seed of Cycas circinalis.

Madura foot. A diseased condition of the feet and hands, occurring in India, characterized by enlargement and distortion of the affected part, ensuing suppuration, softening and fracture of the bones of the part, and the formation of sinuses discharging through frequent openings small yellow bodies like fish-roe or dark grains like coarse gunpowder, and often larger masses. The fungus Chionyphe Carteri is found in the diseased parts, and is thought to be the cause of the disease. Also called fungus-foot, fungus disease of India, and mycetoma.

madweed (mad'wēd), n. A species of Scutellaria, or skullcap, of the family Menthaceæ, S. lateriflora: so named because it was thought to be efficacious in hydrophobia. Also called mad-dog skullcap.

madwort (mad'wėrt), n. [< mad[1] + wort[1]. Cf. Alyssum.] 1. A plant of the genus Alyssum.—2. [As if a contraction of madderwort, having been used as a substitute for madder.] A plant of the borage family, Asperugo procumbens, whose root was used like madder: commonly called German madwort.

mae (mā), a. and adv. A Scotch form of mo.

mæander†, n. See meander.

Mæandrina (mē-an-drī'nä), n. [NL., < L. mæander, a winding way (see meander), + -ina[1].] The typical genus of Mæandrinidæ, established by Lamarck in 1801. M. cerebriformis is an example. Also spelled Meandrina.

mæandrine, a. See meandrine.

Mæandrinidæ (mē-an-drin'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Mæandrina + -idæ.] A family of madreporarian corals of the suborder Astreacea, typified by the genus Mæandrina; the brain-corals or brainstones. These corals are of massive form, caused by the union of many individual corallites in rows which meander or wind about over the surface of the corallum in a manner suggesting the convolutions of the brain. Also spelled Meandrinidæ.

mæandriniform (mē-an-drin'i-fôrm), a. [< NL. Mæandrina + L. forma.] Resembling a brain-coral; of or pertaining to the Mæandriniformes.

Mæandriniformes (mē-an-drin-i-fôr'mēz), n. pl. [NL.: see mæandriniform.] The brain-corals. See Mæandrinidæ.

Mæandripora (mē-an-drip'ō-rä), n. [NL., < Gr. μαίανδρος, a winding way (see meander), + πόρος, a pore: see pore[2].] Same as Fascicularia.

Mæandrospongidæ (mē-an-drō-spon'ji-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. μαίανδρος, a meander, + σπόγγος, a sponge, + -idæ.] A large family of dictyonine hexactinellid silicious sponges, both fossil and recent, in which the body consists of winding tubes of uniform caliber with interstitial vestibular spaces and no uncinate or scopuliform spicules. Also spelled Meandrospongidæ.

maelstrom (māl'strom), n. [Also malestrom, maelström (erroneously malestrand (see quot.), simulating strand[1]); < early mod. D. maelstrom, now maalstroom, a whirlpool (whence also Norw. malstraum and Dan. malström), < malen, grind (see meal[1]), + stroom, stream: see stream. "Its use as a proper name seems to come from Dutch maps." N. E. D.] 1. A celebrated whirlpool or violent current in the Arctic ocean, near the western coast of Norway, between the islands Moskenäsö and Mosken, formerly supposed to suck in and destroy everything that approached it at any time, but now known not to be dangerous except under certain conditions.

He [Osep Napea] reports of a Whirlpool between the Rost Islands and Lofoot call'd Malestrand, which from half ebb to half flood is heard to make such a terrible noise as shakes the Door-rings of Houses in those Islands ten mile off.
Milton, Hist. Muscovia.

Hence—2. Any resistless movement; any influence or passion which makes victims of all who come within its power: as, the maelstrom of fashion or of speculation; the maelstrom of dissipation or of crime.

Mæna (mē'nä), n. [NL. (Cuvier, 1829), < L. mæna, < Gr. μαίνη, a small sea-fish, eaten salted.] The typical genus of Mænidæ, chiefly represented in the Mediterranean. M. vulgaris is an example. Formerly also Mænas.

mænad, menad (mē'nad), n. [< L. mænas (mænad-), < Gr. μαινάς (μαιναδ-), raving, frantic; as a noun, a mad woman, mænad; < μαίνεσθαι, rage, be furious: see mania.] 1. In Gr. myth., a female member of the attendant train of Bacchus; hence, a priestess of Bacchus; one of the women who celebrated the festivals of Bacchus with mad songs and dancing and boisterous courses in gay companies amid the crags of Parnassus and Cithæron, particularly on the occasion of the great triennial Bacchic festival. The mænads supplied a favorite subject to classic art, and are characterized by wearing the nebris, and by the thyrsus and other Dionysiac attributes. Compare Bacchante.

Mænad.—From a Greek polychrome cup preserved at Munich.

Such illusion as of old
Through Athens glided menad-like.
Lowell, The Cathedral.

Hence—2. Any woman under the influence of unnatural excitement or frenzy.

mænadic, menadic (mē-nad'ik), a. [< mænad, menad, + -ic.] Pertaining to or like the mænads; furious; raving; bacchantic.

The rites, by some supposed to be of the menadic sort, . . . are held strictly secret.
Carlyle, Sartor Resartus (ed. 1831), p. 191.

mænianum (mē-ni-ā'num), n.; pl. mæniana (-nä). [L., a projecting balcony, orig. one in the Forum at Rome, erected under the censor C. Mænius, for the convenience of spectators of the gladiatorial combats; neut. of Mænianus, of Mænius, < Mænius, the name of a Roman gens.] In Rom. antiq., a balcony or gallery for spectators at a public show. The name, originally applied to a balcony in the Forum, was extended to balconies in general, as to the galleries at the circular end of a circus, and to the ranges of seats above the podium in an amphitheater.

Mænidæ (mē'ni-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Mæna + -idæ.] A family of acanthopterygian fishes, typified by the genus Mæna. They are subfusiform percoids with very protractile upper jaw, chiefly inhabiting warm seas. Several are found in the Mediterranean. Also Mænini, Mænoideæ.

mænoid (mē'noid), n. A fish of the family Mænidæ. Sir J. Richardson.

Mænoideæ (mē-noi'dē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Mæna + -oideæ.] Same as Mænidæ. Sir J. Richardson, 1836.

Mænura, n. An erroneous form of Menura.

Mæsa (mē'sä), n. [NL. (P. Forskal, 1775), < maas, given as the Ar. name of one of the species.] A genus of dicotyledonous sympetalous plants, belonging to the family Myrsinaceæ, type of the tribe Mæseæ, characterized by the two-bracted calyx, the imbricate corolla, and flowers growing in racemes. They are shrubs, with entire dentate or serrate leaves, often pellucid-dotted, small white five-parted flowers, and a small dry or fleshy fruit with many seeds and a persistent style. About 100 species are known, natives of tropical and subtropical Asia and Africa, Australia, and the islands of the Pacific. The genus furnishes some ornamental hothouse-plants.

Mæseæ (mē'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Alphonse de Candolle, 1837), < Mæsa + -eæ.] A tribe of dicotyledonous sympetalous plants of the order Myrsinaceæ, characterized by a superior or half-superior calyx, a gamopetalous corolla, no staminodia, and a many-seeded fruit. The tribe includes but one genus, Mæsa, with about 100 species, natives of the tropical and subtropical regions of the Old World.

maestoso (mä-es-tō'sō), adv. [It., majestic, < maestà, majesty: see majesty.] In music, with dignity or majesty; majestically.

maestral, n. A variant of mistral.

Maestricht beds. See bed[1].

maestro (mä-es'trō), n. [It., = E. master[1], q. v.] A master; specifically, an eminent musical composer, teacher, or conductor.

mafflc† (maf'l), v. i. [< ME. mafflen, < MD. maffelen, moffelen, D. moffelen, move the jaws, stammer, = LG. maffeln, prattle, = G. dial. maffeln, muffeln, chew with the mouth full; prob. imitative; cf. E. faffle, stammer.] To stammer.

And some maffid with the mouth and nyst what they mente.
Richard the Redeless, iv. 63.

maffled (maf'ld), p. a. See the quotation. [Prov. Eng.]

She was what they call in the country maffled—that is, confused in her intellect.
Southey, Letters, III. 186. (Davies.)

maffler† (maf'lėr), n. A stammerer. Holland, Plutarch, p. 535.

maffling (maf'ling), n. [Cf. maffle.] A simpleton. Halliwell. [North. Eng.]

maforst, n. [ML., < MGr. μαφόριον: see def.] Originally, a woman's mantle or cloak, covering the head, neck, and shoulders; later, the maphorion or scapular worn by monks in the Eastern Church.

mafurra-tree (ma-fur'ä-trē), n. [< mafurra, mafura, a native name, + E. tree.] A tree, Trichilia emetica, of the Meliaceæ, found in Mozambique, Madagascar, and the Isle of Réunion. Its fruit is a capsule of two or three cells, containing seeds of the size of a cacao-bean, which yield when boiled the mafurra-tallow.

mag[1] (mag), n. [Also magg; ult. abbr. of margaret, like the fem. name Mag, dim. Maggie, abbr. of Margaret: see magpie, margaret. Hence also madge[1].] 1. The madge or magpie.—2. The long-tailed titmouse, Acredula rosea, more fully called long-tailed mag. [Local, Eng.]

mag[2] (mag), v.; pret. and pp. magged, ppr. magging. [In allusion to the chatter of the magpie; < mag[1], the magpie: see mag[1].] I. intrans. To chatter; scold. [Prov. Eng.]

II. trans. To tease or vex. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

mag[2] (mag), n. [< mag[2], v.] Talk; chatter.

If you have any mag in you, we'll draw it out.
Mrs. Thrale, quoted in Mme. D'Arblay's Diary (ed. 1876), I. 68.

mag[3] (mag), n. [Also make, maik; origin obscure.] A halfpenny; in Scotland (with plural), a gratuity expected by servants. [Eng. and Scotch.]

It can't be worth a mag to him.
Dickens, Bleak House, liv.

mag[4] (mag), n. An abbreviated form of magazine, 2. [Colloq.]

He . . . is on the staff of I don't know how many papers and mags.
Mrs. Alexander, The Frères, p. 45.

mag[5] (mag), v. t.; pret. and pp. magged, ppr. magging. [Also magg; conjectured to be of Gipsy origin; cf. Hind. makr, fraud, makkar, a cheat, knave (?).] To steal; carry off clandestinely. [Low slang.]

magadis (mag'a-dis), n. [< Gr. μάγαδις (ML. magade), a musical instrument, a kind of cithara, also a Lydian flute (see defs.), prob. of Egypt. origin. Cf. magas.] 1. A Greek musical instrument resembling the cithara, having about twenty strings tuned in octaves two by two.—2. A Lydian flute or flageolet.—3. A monochord.

magadize (mag'a-dīz), v. i.; pret. and pp. magadized, ppr. magadizing. [< Gr. μαγαδίζειν, to play on the magadis, play in the octave, < μάγαδις, magadis: see magadis.] In anc. Gr. music: (a) To play upon the magadis. (b) To sing in octaves, as when men and women sing the same melody.

magar†, n. [Origin obscure.] A large ship. Davies.

Filling our seas with stately argosies, Calvars and magars, hulks of burden great.
Greene, Orlando Furioso, i. 1.

magarita, magarites (mag-a-rī'tä, -tēz), n. [ML., < MGr. μαγαρίτης, renegade, < μαγαρίζειν, befoul, pollute, defile, contaminate.] In the middle ages, an apostate from Christianity, especially to Mohammedanism.

magas (mā'gas), n. [< Gr. μαγάς, the bridge of a cithara or lyre: see def. 1.] 1. The bridge of a cithara or lyre; also, a fret, as of a lute.—2. [cap.] [NL.] A genus of brachiopods of the family Terebratulidæ, and typical of a subfamily Magasinæ. Sowerby, 1816.

magastromancer† (mā-gas'trō-man-sėr), n. [< Gr. μάγος, magician, + ἄστρον, a star, + μαντεία, divination: see astromancy.] An astrologist.

The Mag-astro-mancer, or the magical astrological Diviner. Rev. J. Gaule (1652).

★ magazine (mag-a-zēn'), n. [= D. magazijn = G. magazin = Dan. Sw. magasin, < OF. F. magazin, now magasin, < It. magazzino, < Sp. magacén, almagacén, almacén = Pg. almazem, armazem, a storehouse, < Ar. al, the, + makhāzin (> Turk. makhazin), pl. of makhzan, makhzen (> Turk. makhzen), a storehouse, warehouse, cf. khizāna, a storehouse, khazna, khazīna, treasury, khazana, lay up in store; cf. Heb. khāsan, lay up in store, mishenot, storehouses.] 1. A receptacle in which anything is stored; a storehouse; a warehouse.

If it should appear fit to bestow shipping in those harbours, it shall be very needful that there be a magazine of all necessary provisions and ammunitions. Raleigh, Essays.

The mind of man in a long life will become a magazine of wisdom or folly. Steele, Tatler, No. 132.

Specifically—(a) A strong building, constructed usually of brick or stone, for storing securely quantities of gunpowder or other explosive material, and warlike stores, for either industrial or military purposes. (b) The close room in the hold of a man-of-war where the ammunition is kept. (c) The cartridge-chamber of a magazine-rifle. (d) The fuel-chamber of a magazine-stove. See below.

2. A pamphlet periodically published, containing miscellaneous papers or compositions. The earliest publication of this kind in England was the "Gentleman's Magazine," which was first issued in 1731 by Edward Cave, under the pseudonym of "Sylvanus Urban," and is still continued, though now entirely changed in character.—Magazine-battery, in elect., a battery in which the strength of the liquid solution is maintained by a supply of the required substance in the form of crystals kept in a suitable receptacle. Compare Daniell cell, under cell.—Magazine-stove, a stove containing a fuel-chamber from which the fire is automatically fed with coal.—Magnetic magazine. See magnetic.

magazine (mag-a-zēn'), v.; pret. and pp. magazined, ppr. magazining. [< magazine, n.] I. trans. To store up or accumulate for future use. [Rare.]

He entered among the Papists only to get information of persons and particulars, with such secrets as he could spy out, that being magazined up in a diary might serve for materials. Roger North, Examen, p. 222.

II. intrans. To conduct or edit a magazine.

Of magazining chiefs, whose rival page
With monthly medley courts the curious age.
Byrom, The Passive Participle's Petition.

magazine-gun (mag-a-zēn'gun), n. A cannon or gun having the capacity of firing a number of shots consecutively without pause for reloading; a battery-gun; a machine-gun; a repeating gun. See machine-gun.

magaziner (mag-a-zē'nėr), n. [< magazine + -er[1].] One who writes in a magazine.

If a magaziner be dull upon the Spanish war, he soon has us up again with the ghost in Cock-lane. Goldsmith, Essays, ix.

magazine-rifle (mag-a-zēn'rī″fl), n. A repeating rifle; a rifle from which several shots may be fired in quick succession without reloading. It has a magazine or chamber which contains a variable number of metallic-case cartridges, which are fed by the bolt into the chamber of the bore, or held in reserve, the latter being the case in arms furnished with a cut-off, to enable them to be used as single-loaders. The magazine may be placed in the butt, underneath the barrel, or above or on one side of the receiver, or it may be detachable, as in the Lee gun. The special forms of magazine-rifles are very numerous.

magazinist (mag-a-zē'nist), n. [< magazine + -ist.] Same as magaziner.

magdala (mag'dä-lä), n. [So called from Magdala in Abyssinia, captured by Gen. Napier (subsequently Lord Napier of Magdala) in 1868. Cf. magenta, solferino, named from battle-fields.] Naphthalene red. See red.

magdalen, magdalene (mag'da-len, -lēn), n. [So called from Magdalen, Mary Magdalene, < LL. Magdalene, < Gr. (Μαρία ἡ) Μαγδαληνή, (Mary) of Magdala, fem. of Μαγδαληνός, of Magdala, < Μαγδαλά, a town on the western shore of the sea of Galilee, < Heb. migdāl, a tower, < gādal, be great or high. The allusion in the def. is to the "woman in the city, which was a sinner," mentioned in Luke vii. 37–50, and, as in the heading of that chapter, traditionally identified (esp. since the 5th century, and in the Western Church, contrary to the tradition of the Eastern Church) with Mary Magdalene as mentioned (in another connection) in the next chapter, "Mary called Magdalene, out of whom went seven devils" (Luke viii. 2). This identification was doubtless assisted by a confusion of the three anointings, one by "a woman in the city" (Luke vii. 37, as above), one by "a woman," also unnamed, in Bethany (Mat. xxvi. 7 and Mark xiv. 3), and the third by "Mary," the sister of Martha and Lazarus, also in Bethany (John xi. 2 and xii. 3). The same name, in the old form Maudlin, is the source of the adj. maudlin, in allusion to the tears of the repentant woman supposed to be Mary Magdalene: see maudlin. Another form of the name is Madeline.] 1. A reformed prostitute.

Very little of the Magdalene about her, . . . because, though there may be Magdalenes, they are not often found. Trollope, Autobiog., p. 239.

2. Some plant, probably a radiate composite like Chrysanthemum Parthenium.

These camels will live very well two or three dayes without water; their feeding is on thistles, wormewood, magdalene, and other strong weeds. Hakluyt's Voyages, II. 270.

Magdalen hospital, or Magdalen asylum. See hospital.

magdaleneum (mag″da-lē-nē'um), n. [< magdalen, q. v.] A magdalen asylum or hospital.

It [Fontevrault] consisted of a nunnery for virgins and widows, a magdaleneum, a hospital for lepers and other diseased folk, a convent, and a church. Encyc. Brit., IX. 366.

magdaleon (mag-dā'lē-on), n. [< OF. magdaleon, F. magdaléon, magdaleon, < Gr. μαγδαλιά, later form of ἀπομαγδαλιά, the crumb or inside of the loaf on which the Greeks wiped their hands at dinner, < ἀπομάσσειν, wipe off, take an impression, model, < ἀπό, off, + μάσσειν, knead: see mass[2], magma.] 1. A medicine, as a pill, prepared with bread-crumb.—2. A roll of plaster. Dunglison.

Brimstone . . . used crude . . . is of a sadder colour; or, after depuration, such as we have in magdaleons or rolls of a lighter yellow. Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., ii. 5.

Magdeburg hemispheres. See hemisphere.

mage (māj), n. [< F. mage = Sp. Pg. It. mago (fem. maga), a magician, < L. magus (fem. maga), a magician (as adj. magical), < Gr. μάγος, a magician, enchanter, juggler, wizard (as adj. magical); prop. a Magus, F. Mage = Sp. Pg. It. Mago, < L. Magus, pl. Magi, < Gr. Μάγος, pl. Μάγοι, one of the Magi or Magians, a Median tribe or caste, the priests or "wise men" of the ancient Medes and Persians, prob. < Zend maz, great, akin to Gr. μέγας, L. magnus, great: see magnitude, main[2]. Hence magic, etc.] A magician; an enchanter; a person expert in the black art.

First entering, the dreadfull Mage there fownd, Deepe busied bout worke of wondrous end.
Spenser, F. Q., III. iii. 14.

And there I saw mage Merlin, whose vast wit
And hundred winters are but as the hands
Of loyal vassals toiling for their liege.
Tennyson, Coming of Arthur.

★ Magellanic (maj- or mag-e-lan'ik), a. [< Magellan (Pg. Fernão de Magalhães) + -ic.] Pertaining to or named after the Portuguese navigator Magellan (Portuguese Fernão de Magalhães), died 1521.—Magellanic clouds, a name given to two cloud-like tracts or patches of nebulous stars in the southern heavens, nearly in the pole of the Milky Way. They are visible as far north as 18° north latitude. According to Sir J. F. W. Herschel, "They are, generally speaking, round, and somewhat oval, and the larger, which deviates most from the circular form, exhibits the appearance of an axis of light, very ill-defined, and by no means strongly distinguished from the general mass. . . . The greater nebula occupies an area of about 42 square degrees. The lesser covers about 10 square degrees. Their degree of brightness may be judged of by the effect of strong moonlight, which totally obliterates the lesser, but not quite the greater." Though they resemble parts of the Galaxy to the naked eye, their telescopic appearance is in marked contrast, owing to the great numbers of clusters and nebulæ which they contain.

magenta (mā-jen'tä), n. [< F. magenta, so called from Magenta in Italy, because this color was discovered in the year (1859) of the battle of Magenta.] 1. A rich and somewhat glaring red pigment. Also called aniline red and fuchsin.—2. The color given by the pigment.—Magenta S. Same as acid-magenta.

magg[1]†, n. See mag[1].

magg[2], v. t. See mag[5].

magged (magd), a. [Origin obscure.] Worn and stretched: said of a rope.

magget†, n. An obsolete form of maggot.

maggie (mag'i), n. [< Maggie, a fem. name, dim. of Margaret. Cf. mag[1], madge[1].] The common guillemot, Lomvia troile. [Scotch.]

maggimonifeet (mag-i-mon'i-fēt), n. [= Maggie many-feet.] A centiped. [Scotch.]

maggle† (mag'l), v. t. [Early mod. E. also maggil, magle; perhaps a var. of mangle[1].] To mangle; maul.

Thare he beheld ane cruell maglit face.
Gavin Douglas, tr. of Virgil, p. 181. (Jamieson.)

★ maggot (mag'ọt), n. [Early mod. E. also maget, maggette; < ME. magot, magat, magotte; its precise origin is undetermined. The similar W. and Gaelic words are from Eng.] 1. Properly, the larva of a fly or other insect; hence, in general, a grub; a worm: applied to footless larvæ, and especially to the larvæ of flies.

Those flesh-flies of the land,
Who fasten without mercy on the fair,
And suck, and leave a craving maggot there.
Cowper, Prog. of Err., l. 324.

2. A whim; a crotchet; an odd fancy: mostly in such expressions as a maggot in one's head.

To tickle the maggot born in an empty head,
And wheedle a world that loves him not.
Tennyson, Maud, xxvii. 3.

3†. A frisky fellow; one given to pranks.

Po. I admire you had so much prudence, when you were as great a maggot as any in the world when you were at Paris.
Gl. Then my age did permit a little wildness.
N. Bailey, tr. of Colloquies of Erasmus, p. 177. (Davies.)

4. A whimsical impromptu melody or song.—Rat-tail maggot. See Eristalis.—Seed-corn maggot, the larva of Anthomyia zeæ (Riley). A. S. Packard, Study of Insects, p. 411. (See also cheese-maggot, meat-maggot.)

maggot-eater (mag'ọt-ē″tėr), n. A book-name of birds of the genus Scolecophagus.

maggotiness (mag'ọt-i-nes), n. The state of being maggoty, or of abounding with maggots.

maggotish (mag'ọt-ish), a. [< maggot + -ish[1].] Maggoty; whimsical.

maggot-pated† (mag'ọt-pā″ted), a. Same as maggoty-headed.

maggot-pie†, maggoty-pie†, n. See magot-pie.

maggot-snipe (mag'ọt-snīp), n. The turnstone, Strepsilas interpres. [Long Island.]

maggoty (mag'ọt-i), a. [< maggot + -y[1].] 1. Full of or infested with maggots.—2. Frisky; capricious; whimsical. [Rare.]

To pretend to work out a neat scheme of thoughts with a maggotty, unsettled head is as ridiculous as to think to write straight in a jumbling coach. Norris.

maggoty-headed† (mag'ọt-i-hed″ed), a. Having a mind full of whims or crotchets; maggoty. Also maggot-pated.

maggoty-pie†, n. See magpie.

Maghrabin, a. and n. Same as Mograbin.

Magi, n. Plural of Magus.

Magian (mā'ji-an), a. and n. [< L. Magus, pl. ★Magi: see Magus.] I. a. Pertaining to the Magi, the priestly caste of ancient Persia.

II. n. A member of the priestly caste of ancient Persia. See Magus, 1.

One of the Magians, who, it is to be remembered, are a tribe of the Medes, gave himself out for a brother of Cambyses, expecting thus to be able to count upon the obedience of the Persians as well. Von Ranke, Univ. Hist. (trans.), p. 100.

Magianism (mā'ji-an-izm), n. [< Magian + -ism.] The philosophy, doctrines, traditions, and religious practices of the Magi. Magianism was characterized by a religious dualism, supposing an original principle of evil, opposed to the original principle of good. Also Magism.

magic (maj'ik), n. and a. [I. n. Formerly also magick, magique; < ME. magik, magike, < OF. magique = Sp. mágica = Pg. It. magica, < L. magice, ML. also magica (sc. ars, art), < Gr. μαγική, magic, prop. adj. 'magical' (sc. τέχνη, art), but orig. 'of the Magi,' < Μάγος, pl. Μάγοι, the Magi or priests or "wise men" of the Medes and Persians, reputed to be skilled in enchantment:

see mage, Magus. II. a. = F. magique = Sp. mágico = Pg. It. magico, < L. magicus, < Gr. μαγικός, of magic, orig. and prop. 'of the Magi,' < Μάγος, pl. Μάγοι, Magi: see above. Thus, the noun is orig. from the adj.; but in Eng. it precedes it.] I. n. 1. Any supposed supernatural art; especially, the pretended art of controlling the actions of spiritual or superhuman beings. Belief in such an art exists among all primitive races, and was prevalent in medieval Europe. The practice of magic has embraced, in a great variety of ways, the cure of disease, the forecasting of events, and the gratification of desires otherwise unattainable. It has been everywhere, with the rise and earlier progress of literature, formulated into more or less elaborate systems. All kinds of divination, judicial astrology, and to a large extent alchemy were outgrowths of it.

> But thurgh his magik for a wyke or tweye,
> It semed that alle the rokkes were aweye.
> Chaucer, Franklin's Tale, l. 567.
>
> If she in chains of magic were not bound.
> Shak., Othello, i. 2. 65.

The word magic is still used, as in the ancient world, to include a confused mass of beliefs and practices, hardly agreeing except in being beyond those ordinary actions of cause and effect which men accustomed to their regularity have come to regard as merely natural.

> Encyc. Brit., XV. 199.

2. Power or influence similar to that of enchantment: as, the magic of love.

> He [Arnold] has a power of vision as great as Tennyson's, though its magic depends less on the rich tints of association, and more on the liquid colours of pure natural beauty. Contemporary Rev., XLIX. 528.

3. Conjuring; tricks of legerdemain. [Colloq.] —Black magic, magic involving a criminal league with evil spirits; the black art.—Natural magic. (a) Occult science; the art of working wonders by means of a superior knowledge of the powers of nature.

> Much more is professed, but much lesse perfourmed, then in former ages, especially in the mathematikes and in naturall magic. G. Harvey, Four Letters.

(b) Control of natural forces through the knowledge of their laws.

> Was not Persian Magic a reduction or correspondence of the principles and architectures of nature to the rules and policy of governments? . . . And here I will make a request that I may revise and reintegrate the misapplied and abused name of Natural Magic; which in the true sense is but Natural Wisdom or Natural Prudence; taken according to the ancient acception, purged from vanity and superstition. Bacon, Advancement of Learning.

Superstitious or goetic magic consists in the invocation of devils or demons, and supposes some tacit or express covenant or agreement with them.—White magic, practice of magic either quite innocent or at least not involving a compact with the devil.

II. a. 1. Pertaining to or connected with the exercise of magic; having supposed supernatural qualities or powers; enchanting; bewitching: as, magic arts or spells; a magic wand or circle; a magic touch; magic squares.

> Shall we think the subtle-witted French
> Conjurers and sorcerers, that, afraid of him,
> By magic verses have contrived his end?
> Shak., 1 Hen. VI., i. 1. 27.
>
> As in Agrippa's magic glass,
> The loved and lost arose to view.
> Whittier, The Merrimack.

2. Produced by or resulting from or as if from magic; exhibiting the effects of enchantment: as, magic music; magic transformations. [In this sense magical is more commonly used.]

> Till all thy magick structures, rear'd so high,
> Were shatter'd into heaps o'er thy false head.
> Milton, Comus, l. 798.

3. Operating as if by magic; causing illusion; producing wonderful results.

> For three or four days, under the magic influence of his wit and imagination, these gloomy old pictures were a perpetual source of amusement and fun.
> Lady Holland, Sydney Smith, iv.

Magic circle, a modification of the magic square as devised by Franklin, consisting of eight concentric circles equally divided by eight radii, in the sections of which all the numbers from 13 to 75 are so arranged that the sum of the numbers in each circle, together with 12 entered at the center, is equal to 360, and that the sum of the numbers in each radial column, together with the central 12, is also equal to 360. As reconstructed by Dr. Barnard, the numbers from 1 to 64 are taken, and are so arranged that the constant sum of both concentric and radial ranks, added to 100 entered at the center, is 360.—Magic cube, an extension of the arrangement of an arithmetical series in a magic square, so that the sum of the numbers in each lineal rank of numbers, parallel to either of the three sets of four parallel edges of the cube, also in each of the diagonals upon all faces, also in each of the four diagonals through the center of the cube, is constant.—Magic cylinder, a modification of a perfect magic cube when one of its surfaces is transferred to a cylinder having a circumference equal to the edge of the cube, and the vertical squares are arranged in equidistant radii: such a magic cylinder will have either no number at the axis, or the same number in the center of every one of the five parallel planes.—Magic lantern. See lantern, and cut under stereopticon.—Magic music. See music.—Magic sphere, a modification of a magic cube or parallelepipedon when its surface is transferred to a sphere, and the several vertical columns are arranged in equidistant radii.—Magic square, a square figure formed by a series of numbers in mathematical proportion, so disposed in parallel and equal ranks that the sum of each row, column, or diagonal is constant. Magic squares are also formed with the letters of a word, name, phrase, or sentence, so arranged as to read the same in all directions from the initial letter, wherever it appears. The earliest known writers on the subject were Arabians, among whom these squares were used as amulets.

3	24	36	35
44	27	11	16
13	14	46	25
38	33	5	22

An even-numbered magic square whose constant sum is 98.

9	5	1

An odd-numbered magic square whose constant sum is 15.

magical (maj'i-kal), a. [< magic + -al.] Same as magic. [The difference between magic and magical, as in most other cases of adjectives in -ic and -ical, is largely rhythmical.]

> They beheld unveiled the magical shield of your Ariosto. Dryden.
>
> I'll humbly signify what in his name,
> That magical word of war, we have effected.
> Shak., A. and C., iii. 1. 31.
>
> Laws have no magical, no supernatural virtue; . . . laws do not act like Aladdin's lamp or Prince Ahmed's apple.
> Macaulay, Essays, II. 97.
>
> Egypt and Babylon . . . were the chief sources whence the world learnt what may be called the higher branches of occult science, and from the historical point of view the magical rites and beliefs of other ancient Eastern nations, such as Asia Minor and India, are of little importance.
> E. B. Tylor, Encyc. Brit., XV. 201.

magically (maj'i-kal-i), adv. In a magical manner; by or as if by magic.

magician (mā-jish'an), n. [< ME. magicien, < OF. and F. magicien, < ML. as if magicianus*, < magica, magic: see magic.] 1†. One of the Magi or priestly caste of ancient Persia.

> It is confessed by all of understanding, that a magician (according to the Persian word) is no other than Divinorum cultor et interpres, a studious observer and expounder of divine things. Raleigh, Hist. World, I. xi. 3.
>
> Therefore made I a decree to bring in all the wise men of Babylon before me. . . . Then came in the magicians, the astrologers, the Chaldeans, and the soothsayers.
> Dan. iv. 7.

2. One skilled in magic; a wizard; an enchanter; a conjurer.

> I have, since I was three year old, conversed with a magician, most profound in his art and yet not damnable.
> Shak., As you Like it, v. 2. 68.

magic-tree (maj'ik-trē), n. A beautiful shrub, Cantua buxifolia (family Polemoniaceæ), of Peru, formerly used by the native Indians for the decoration of their houses on feast-days.

magilp (mā-gilp'), n. [Also macgilp, magilph, magelp, maguilp, meggelup, megilph, megylph, miguilph; said to be from a proper name.] In painting, a vehicle made of oil of turpentine and pale drying-oil in equal proportions. These ingredients gelatinize, and when mixed with oil colors give them a certain body and a pulpy transparency. Magilp may be made also of linseed drying-oil and mastic varnish, or of simple linseed-oil and sugar of lead, or of boiled oil, mastic varnish, and a little sugar of lead. Also spelled megilp.

magilp (mā-gilp'), v. t. To reduce to the consistency of magilp.

> If it [pure water] is well mixed with the oil colour, it megilps it sufficiently to hold the combing until it sets.
> Workshop Receipts, 1st ser., p 421.

Magilus (maj'i-lus), n. [NL.] A remarkable genus of gastropods of the family Coralliophilidæ, inquiline upon coral. The shells when young are regularly spired, but grow with the coral into irregular tubes, the older parts of which are left by the mollusk to become filled in with solid deposits of calcareous matter. The species is named M. antiquus, and may attain a length of 2 or 3 feet.

Magilus antiquus, natural size.

Magism (mā'jizm), n. [=F. magisme; as Mage, Magi, + -ism.] The body of philosophy or doctrines of the Persian Magi: same as Magianism.

> Chaldæism and Magism appear . . . mixed up together.
> C. O. Müller, Manual of [Archæol. (trans.), § 248.

magister (mā-jis'tėr), n. [< L. magister, a master, chief, head, superior, director, teacher, etc.: hence ult. E. master[1] and mister[1], q. v.] Master; sir: an appellation given in the middle ages to persons of scientific or literary distinction, equivalent to the modern title of doctor. It is still used in Latin forms of various degrees. (See below.) In the early church it was given as a title to bishops and presbyters, in distinction from ministers or members of the lower orders.

> I'm Magister—yea, Doctor—hight. . . .
> I'm cleverer, true, than those fops of teachers,
> Doctors and Magisters, Scribes and Preachers.
> Goethe, Faust, i. 1 (tr. by B. Taylor).

Artium Magister, Master of Arts: a degree bestowed by universities and colleges, following the degree of Artium Baccalaureus or A. B. Also Magister Artium (M. A.). See A.M.—Magister ceremoniarum, master of the ceremonies.—Magister Disciplinæ, an officer in the Church of Spain, about the fifth century, appointed to take charge of those children who were dedicated to the church at an early age and placed in a bishop's household for instruction in morals and in the rules of the church. The officer who had supervision of children educated in monasteries bore the same title.—Magister Sacri Palatii, in the Rom. Cath. Ch., the incumbent of an office created early in the thirteenth century by Pope Honorius III. for the religious instruction of the employees of the popes, cardinals, and other Roman Catholic authorities living in Rome. The promoter and first holder of the office was St. Dominic, and later incumbents have been Dominicans. The duties and privileges of the office were gradually increased until it became one of very considerable importance. Among its privileges are that of conferring the degree of doctor in theology and philosophy and that of licensing books for publication.

magisteria, n. Plural of magisterium.

magisterial (maj-is-tē'ri-al), a. [< L. magisterium, the office of a chief, president, master, director, teacher, etc. (see magistery), + -al.] 1. Of or pertaining to a master; such as befits a master; authoritative; hence, lofty; arrogant; imperious; domineering.

> Those who have fairly and truly examin'd, and are thereby got past doubt in all the doctrines they profess and govern themselves by, . . . are so few in number, and find so little reason to be magisterial in their opinions, that nothing insolent and imperious is to be expected from them. Locke, Human Understanding, IV. xvi. 4.
>
> The Squire is there
> In his large arm-chair,
> Leaning back with a grave magisterial air.
> Barham, Ingoldsby Legends, I. 172.

2. Of or belonging to a magistrate or his office; of the rank of a magistrate.

> Acanthe here,
> When magisterial duties from his home
> Her father call'd, had entertain'd the guest.
> Glover, Athenaid, xv.

3. In chem., pertaining to magistery.—Magisterial district. See district, 1.=Syn. 1. Authoritative, Magisterial, Dogmatic, Arrogant, Domineering, Imperious, Dictatorial, Peremptory, official, grand, haughty, lordly, oracular. Authoritative is rarely used in a bad sense. Magisterial, in the sense of having the manner of a master or magistrate, generally indicates the overdoing of that manner: as, magisterial pomp and gravity. Dogmatic reaches somewhat more deeply into the character; the dogmatic man insists strenuously upon the correctness of his own opinions, and, being unable to see how others can fail to believe with him, dictatorially presses upon them his opinions as true without argument, while he tends also to blame and overbear those who venture to express dissent. (See confident.) Arrogant implies the assumption of more than due authority from an overestimate of one's importance. (See arrogance.) Domineering, imperious, and dictatorial apply to the assertion of one's own will over those of others in the attempt to rule. Domineering suggests unfitness or lack of authority to rule, with an insulting, hectoring, or bullying manner. Imperious contains most of the real power of the will, suggesting a lofty or lordly determination to be obeyed. Dictatorial implies, on the one hand, a disposition to rule, and, on the other, a sharp insistence upon having one's orders accepted or carried out. Peremptory shuts off discussion: a peremptory command or denial is one that must be obeyed or accepted to the letter and without debate; it is positive, absolute, and often immediate.

magisteriality† (maj-is-tē-ri-al'i-ti), n. [< magisterial + -ity.] Magisterial character or administration; domination.

> When these statutes were first in the state or magisteriality thereof, they were severely put in practice.
> Fuller, Church Hist., IX. iv. 11. (Davies.)

magisterially (maj-is-tē'ri-al-i), adv. In a magisterial manner; in the manner of a master or a magistrate; with the air of a master or the authority of a magistrate.

magisterialness (maj-is-tē'ri-al-nes), n. The character of being magisterial, in any sense of that word.

magisterium (maj-is-tē'ri-um), n.; pl. magisteria (-ä). [L.: see magistery.] 1. In alchemy, a magistral; the philosopher's stone.

> This is the day I am to perfect for him
> The magisterium, our great work, the stone.
> B. Jonson, Alchemist, i. 1.

2. An authoritative statement or doctrine; a magistery.

> Great importance is attached to what is called "the consensus of theologians" and the "ordinary magisterium or teaching of the Church."
> Mivart, Nineteenth Century, XXII. 44.

magistery (maj'is-te-ri), n.; pl. magisteries (-riz). [Formerly also, erroneously, majestery;

= F. magistère = Pr. magisteri = Sp. Pg. It. magisterio, < L. magisterium, the office of a master, chief, director, president, etc., in ML. a magisterium, < magister, a master, chief, director, president, etc.: see magister, master[1].] 1. A magisterial injunction; an authoritative mandate.

This last was not a magistery, but a mere command.
Brougham.

2. In alchemy, a magisterium or magistral; in chem., one of various extracts or preparations, especially magisterium bismuthi, a precipitate formed when water is added to a solution of bismuth in nitric acid. See the quotations from Boyle and Boerhaave.

He that hath had Water turned to Ashes hath the Magistery, and the true Philosopher's Stone.
Howell, Letters, I. vi. 41.

Although majestery be a term variously enough employed by chemists, and particularly used by Paracelsus to signify very different things, yet the best notion I know of it . . . is, that it is a preparation whereby there is not an analysis made of the body assigned, nor an extraction of this or that principle, but the whole or very near the whole body, by the help of some additament, greater or less, is turned into a body of another kind.
Boyle, Works, I. 637.

Magisteries seem to have been thus called by the antient chemists as denoting the capital production or masterpiece of their art. They pretend that they are able to take any simple body, and without any change of its weight, or division of its parts, alter it into another exceedingly different from the former, and usually liquid: for instance, to reduce an ounce of gold into a fluid of the same weight, by fire alone, without the addition of any other matter.
Boerhaave, Chemistry (tr. by Shaw, 3d ed., 1753), I. 171.

3†. Any kind of medicine or remedial agency asserted to be of exceptional efficacy.

magistracy (maj'is-trā-si), n. [< magistra(te) + -cy.] 1. The office or dignity of a magistrate.

In all tyrannical governments the supreme magistracy, or the right both of making and of enforcing the laws, is vested in one and the same man, or one and the same body of men. Blackstone, Com., I. ii.

We have no power to make laws, to erect all sorts of magistracy, to correct, punish, pardon.
Winthrop, Hist. New England, II. 341.

2. The body of magistrates.

That enlightened, eloquent, sage, and profound body, the Magistracy of London. Dickens, Sketches, Scenes, xvii.

magistral (maj'is-tral), a. and n. [= F. Sp. Pg. magistral = It. magistrale, < L. magistralis, of or belonging to a master or teacher, < magister, a master, teacher, etc.: see magister, master[1].] I. a. 1. Befitting a master or magistrate; magisterial; authoritative.

Your assertion of the originall of set forms of liturgy, I justly say is more magistrall than true.
Bp. Hall, Ans. to Apol. for Smectymnuus, § 2.

2. Having sovereign remedial qualities.

More comforting
Than all your opiates, juleps, apozems, Magistral syrups. B. Jonson, Sejanus, i. 2.

Let it be some magistrall opiate.
Bacon, Hist. Life and Death, p. 29.

3. In phar., prescribed or prepared for the occasion: applied to medicines which are not kept prepared or made up.—Magistral line. See II., 2.—Magistral method, a schoolmaster's method of teaching established truth.

The most real diversity of method is of method referred to use, and method referred to progression: whereof the one may be termed magistral, and the other of probation.
Bacon, Advancement of Learning, ii.

II. n. 1†. In alchemy and old med., a sovereign medicine or remedy.

I finde a vast chaos of medicines, a confusion of receipts and magistrals, amongst writers, appropriated to this disease. Burton, Anat. of Mel., p. 382.

2. In fort., the guiding line from which the position of the other lines or works is determined. In field-fortifications this line is the interior crest-line. In permanent fortifications it is usually the line of the top of the escarp of each work. Farrow. More fully called magistral line.

3. An officer in cathedral and collegiate churches and royal chapels in Spain, generally a canon, whose duty it was to preach a certain course of sermons.—4 (Sp. pron. ma-his-träl'). Copper pyrites or other sulphureted cres of copper roasted at a carefully regulated temperature with free access of air. It is used in the Mexican "patio process" (which see, under process).

magistrale (mà-jis-trä'le), a. [It., = E. magistral.] See stretto.

magistrality† (maj-is-tral'i-ti), n. [< magistral + -ity.] Magistral character, conduct, or teaching; magisterial air or authority.

Those who seek truths, and not magistrality.
Bacon, Advancement of Learning, ii.

magistrally† (maj'is-tral-i), adv. Authoritatively; magisterially. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 203.

magistrand (maj-is-trand'), n. [< LL. magistrandus, gerund of magistrare, magisterare, perform the office of a director or chief, rule, command, ML. also make a master (in arts), confer the degree of master upon, < L. magister, a master: see magister, master[1].] An arts student in the fourth or highest class: one in his fourth year: it is still in use in Aberdeen, and was formerly also in use in other Scottish universities.

magistrate (maj'is-trāt), n. [< ME. magestrat, < OF. magistrat, F. magistrat, a town council, a magistrate, = Sp. Pg. magistrado = It. magistrato, council, court, tribunal, magistracy, also a magistrate, < L. magistratus, the office of a chief, director, president, etc., a magistrate, < magister, a master, chief, director, etc.: see magister, master[1].] 1†. Magistracy.

Certes thow thyself ne myhtest nat ben browht with as manye perils as thow myhtest suffren that thow wolden beren the magestrat with (?) Decorat.
Chaucer, Boëthius, iii. prose 4.

2. An administrator of the law; one who possesses jurisdiction or executive authority in matters of civil government; an executive or judicial officer holding the power of decision and disposal in regard to subjects within his cognizance: as, a king is the first magistrate of a monarchy; in the United States the President is often called the chief magistrate; the magistrates of a state or city; civil or judicial magistrates. But the word is more particularly applied to subordinate officers to whom some part of executive judicial power is committed or delegated.

We acknowledge that the civill magistrate weares an autority of Gods giving, and ought to be obey'd as his viceregent. Milton, Church-Government, i. 5.

3. Specifically, a minor judicial officer; a justice of the peace, or a police justice; in Scotland, a provost or a bailie of a burgh: as, to be brought before the bar of the local magistrate. —4. In the New Testament, a Roman military governor or pretor.—Chief magistrate. See def. 2. —Committing magistrate. See committing.—Curule magistrate. See curule.—Stipendiary magistrates. See stipendiary.

magistratic (maj-is-trat'ik), a. [< magistrate + -ic.] Of or pertaining to a magistrate; having the authority of a magistrate. Jer. Taylor (?), Artif. Handsomeness, p. 169.

magistratical (maj-is-trat'i-kal), a. [< magistratic + -al.] Same as magistratic.

magistrature (maj'is-trā-tūr), n. [= F. magistrature = Sp. Pg. It. magistratura, < ML. magistratura*, < L. magistratus, a magistrate: see magistrate.] 1. Magistracy.—2. Administration of law; civil government.

The war which a great people was waging . . . for the idea of nationality and orderly magistrature.
Lowell, Study Windows, p. 143.

mag-loon (mag'lön), n. The speckled loon or red-throated diver, Colymbus septentrionalis. [Prov. Eng.]

magma (mag'mä), n. [NL., < Gr. μάγμα, a kneaded mass, a salve, < μάσσειν (√ μαγ), knead: see mass[2]. Cf. magdaleon.] 1. Any crude mixture, especially of organic matters, in the form of a thin paste.—2. In med.: (a) The thick residuum obtained after subjecting certain substances to pressure to extract the fluid parts. (b) The grounds which remain after treating a substance with water, alcohol, or any other menstruum. (c) A salve of a certain degree of consistence. Dunglison.—3. A confection.—4. In petrol., the fused or molten material from which igneous rocks are formed on its consolidation. The term is applied to the molten mass assumed to exist, either in a continuous zone or in reservoirs, at unknown depths below the earth's surface. By dynamic agencies this magma may be forced toward the surface. If it reaches the surface it is called lava. The term has also been applied to the ground-mass of porphyritic igneous rocks, especially when vitreous in character.

The gradual change in the condition of the molten magma during the course of a continuous volcanic episode. Encyc. Brit., XXVIII. 645.

Carrying out this idea still further, he [Durocher] propounded the theory that beneath the earth's solid crust there exist two magmas, the upper consisting of light acid materials, the lower of heavy basic ones; and he supposes that by the varying intensity of the volcanic forces we may have sometimes one or the other magma erupted and sometimes varying mixtures of the two.
Judd, Volcanoes, p. 201.

magmatic (mag-mat'ik), a. [< magma(t-) + -ic.] Belonging or related to the magma, or to the material of which the igneous rocks are formed while this is yet in the unconsolidated or unindividualized condition.

magmoid (mag'moid), a. In bot., resembling an alga, consisting of spherical green cellules. Cooke; Leighton.

magna, n. Plural of magnum, 3.

Magna Charta (mag'nä kär'tä). See charta.

magnalia (mag-nā'li-ä), n. pl. [LL.: see magnality.] Great things; mighty works.

It might be one of God's magnalia to perfect his own praise out of the weakness and imperfection of the organ.
Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), II. 91.

magnality† (mag-nal'i-ti), n. [< LL. magnalis, in pl. magnalia, great things, < L. magnus, great: see magnitude, main[2].] Something great; a great or striking deed or feat.

Although perhaps too greedy of magnalities, we are apt to make but favourable experiments concerning welcome truthes and much desired verities.
Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., ii. 3.

magnanerie (man-yan'e-rē), n. [F., < magnan, a silkworm; cf. magnanier, a breeder of silkworms.] 1. An establishment for the commercial rearing of silkworms.

The cure proposed by Pasteur was simply to take care that the stock whence graine was obtained should be healthy, and the offspring would then be healthy also. Small educations reared apart from the ordinary magnanerie, for the production of graine alone, were recommended. Encyc. Brit., XXII. 58.

2. The art or practice of rearing or breeding silkworms.

magnanimate (mag-nan'i-māt), v. t.; pret. and pp. magnanimated, ppr. magnanimating. [< magnanim(ous) + -ate[2]. Cf. animate, v.] To render magnanimous; imbue with magnanimity or steadfast courage. Howell.

magnanimity (mag-nạ-nim'i-ti), n. [< ME. magnanimite = F. magnanimité = Sp. magnanimidad = Pg. magnanimidade = It. magnanimità, < L. magnanimita(t-)s, greatness of soul, < magnanimus, great-souled: see magnanimous.] The quality of being magnanimous; greatness of mind or heart; elevation or dignity of soul; the habit of feeling and acting worthily under all circumstances; high-mindedness; intrinsic nobility. In its earlier use the word implies especially high courage and noble steadfastness of purpose; in its later use, high-minded generosity.

Magnanimity no doubt consisteth in contempt of peril, in contempt of profit, and in the meriting of the times wherein one liveth. Bacon, in Spedding, I. 126.

The favorite example of magnanimity among the Romans was Fabius Maximus, who, amidst the provocation of the enemy and the impatience of his countrymen, delayed to give battle till he saw how he could do so successfully. Fleming, Vocab. Philos.

Bid Tommati blink his interest,
You laud his magnanimity the while.
Browning, Ring and Book, II. 105.

=Syn. High-mindedness, chivalrousness. See noble.

magnanimous (mag-nan'i-mus), a. [= F. magnanime = Sp. magnánimo = Pg. It. magnanimo, < L. magnanimus, great-souled, having a great or lofty soul, < magnus, great (see main[2]), + animus, soul, mind: see animus. Cf. pusillanimous.] 1. Great of mind or heart; of high and steadfast courage; elevated in soul or in sentiment; high-minded; raised above what is low, mean, or ungenerous.—2. Dictated by greatness of mind or heart; exhibiting nobleness of soul; liberal and honorable; unselfish.

The magnanimous frankness of a man who had done great things, and who could well afford to acknowledge some deficiencies. Macaulay, Hist. Eng., vii.

=Syn. Generous (see noble); high-minded, great-souled, chivalrous.

magnanimously (mag-nan'i-mus-li), adv. In a magnanimous manner; with magnanimity.

magnate (mag'nāt), n. [= F. magnat = Sp. Pg. It. magnate, < LL. magnas (magnat-), pl. magnates, also magnatus, pl. magnati, a great person, a nobleman, in ML. used esp. with ref. to the nobility forming the national representation of Hungary and Poland, < L. magnus, great: see magnitude, main[2].] 1. A person of rank; a noble or grandee; a person of note or distinction in any sphere: as, a railroad magnate.

The greatest magnates were content to serve in the council as ministers and advisers, rather than to act up to their position constitutionally as members of a great estate in parliament. Stubbs, Medieval and Modern Hist., p. 342.

Specifically—2. One of the members of the upper house of the Diet of Hungary, called the House (or Table) of Magnates. It comprises certain hereditary peers, high state dignitaries and ecclesiastics, life peers, etc.

magne-crystallic (mag"nē-kris-tal'ik), a. [Ir reg. for magneto-crystallic*, < magnet + crystal

+ -ic.] Pertaining to the effect of a magnet upon a crystallized body. Faraday called the magnetic force whose action upon crystals was determined by their molecular structure magne-crystallic force. Tyndall shows that in paramagnetic crystals the axis (magne-crystallic axis) sets axially; in diamagnetic crystals, equatorially.

The first observations of the magnecrystallic couple were made by Plücker. . . . Shortly after Plücker's first results were published, Faraday discovered the magnecrystallic action of crystallized bismuth.
G. Chrystal, Encyc. Brit., XV. 264.

magnel†, n. A Middle English variant of mangonel.

magnesia (mag-nē′ṣi̯ạ), n. [ME. magnesia (def. 1); < ML. magnesia, a mineral said to be brought from Magnesia; fem. of Magnesius, adj., pertaining to Magnesia, < Magnesia, Gr. Μαγνησία, a district in Thessaly (also the name of two cities in Asia Minor): see magnet. In def. 2 = F. magnésie = Sp. Pg. It. magnesia, NL. magnesia, magnesia (magnesium oxid), so called from a supposed relation to manganese (formerly called magnesium).] 1†. A mineral said to be brought from Magnesia.—2. Magnesium oxid (MgO), a white tasteless substance having a feeble alkaline reaction. Its specific gravity varies from 3.20 to 3.61. It is nearly insoluble in water, and scarcely fuses at the temperature of the oxyhydrogen flame. It is prepared by the ignition of any magnesium salt of a volatile acid. Magnesia is used in medicine as an antacid and mild cathartic, and in the arts for preparing magnesium salts. Magnesia alba, the magnesia of the shops, is a magnesium hydroxy-carbonate. Calcined magnesia is pure magnesia prepared by strongly heating the carbonate.—Magnesia mica. Same as biotite.

Magnesian[1] (mag-nē′si-ạn), a. [< L. Magnesia, < Gr. Μαγνησία, Magnesia (see def.), + -an.] Of or pertaining to Magnesia, an ancient city of Asia Minor, near Miletus, or to a town of the same name in ancient Lydia, or to a district so called in Thessaly.

magnesian[2] (mag-nē′ṣi̯ạn), a. [< magnesia + -an.] Pertaining to magnesia or having its qualities; containing or resembling magnesia.—Magnesian limestone. See limestone.

magnesic (mag-nē′sik), a. [< magnesium + -ic.] Of or pertaining to magnesium.

The tendency to fuse on the part of the mixture is due to the magnesic chloride. Ure, Dict., IV. 543.

magnesioferrite (mag-nē′si-ō-fer′īt), n. [< NL. magnesium + L. ferrum, iron.] An oxid of magnesium and iron, belonging to the spinel group, which has been observed at Vesuvius. Also magnoferrite.

magnesite (mag′nē-sīt), n. [< magnesium + -ite[2].] 1. Native magnesium carbonate, a mineral occurring in white compact masses, less often in rhombohedral crystals It belongs to the calcite group.—2†. The hydrated magnesium silicate usually called sepiolite or meerschaum.

magnesium (mag-nē′ṣi̯um), n. [NL.; in def. 1, < Gr. Μαγνησία, sc. λίθος, magnet; in def. 2, < magnesia, 2.] 1†. Manganese.—2. Chemical symbol, Mg; atomic weight, 24.32. The metallic base of the widely distributed alkaline earth magnesia, which in various combinations, and especially in the form of the double carbonate of lime and magnesia, is one of the most abundant of the materials which make up the earth's crust. It is a metal of a brilliant silver-white color, having a specific gravity of 1.75. It melts at 632.7° C., and boils at a temperature somewhat above that at which zinc volatilizes. When held in the flame of a candle it burns with a dazzlingly white light, which has been seen at sea at a distance of 28 miles. Magnesium was first prepared in a pure state by Bussy; that which had been previously obtained by Davy was impure and not a coherent metal. It is now manufactured on a large scale at various places, especially near Manchester in England, and is pressed when in a semi-fluid state into wire, and then flattened into ribbon, in which form it is generally sold. It is used in taking photographs in places into which the sunlight does not penetrate, in signaling for naval and military purposes, and in pyrotechny, as well as in some operations connected with chemical analysis. The magnesian combinations are widely distributed in nature. From 5 to 6 per cent. of the solid material held in solution by the water of the ocean is magnesium sulphate, and from 8 to 11 per cent. magnesium chlorid. Next to sodium, chlorin, and sulphuric acid, magnesium is the most abundant ingredient in solution in the ocean. It is, with rare exceptions (as in the case of the genus Serpula), not taken from the ocean by animal life, differing greatly in this respect from lime. Magnesium carbonate, in combination with calcium carbonate, forming dolomite, occurs in enormous quantity among the stratified formations. Beds made up of almost chemically pure dolomite hundreds of feet thick cover thousands of square miles in the valley of the upper Mississippi. Magnesium carbonate also occurs in great abundance, mixed in varying proportions with the calcium carbonate, in much of the rock designated as marble and limestone, which, when this fact becomes known by chemical analysis, are denominated dolomitic. Magnesia also plays the part of base in great numbers of silicates, especially in talc, meerschaum, serpentine, olivine, and the pyroxenes and hornblendes. Magnesian silicates form an important part of numerous meteorites. The pure magnesium carbonate (magnesite) occurs in various localities, but is by no means an abundant mineral. The non silicated soluble compounds of magnesia are also of rather rare occurrence in nature, but are found in considerable quantity in a few localities, among which that in the vicinity of Stassfurt in Prussia is economically of by far the greatest importance. The combinations found there are kainite, carnallite, and kieserite. (See these words.) Both magnesium sulphate and magnesium chlorid occur in the water of many mineral springs as well as in that of the ocean. The bones of animals and the seeds of various cereals contain a small amount of magnesium phosphate, and the salt is also found in guano. Magnesian salts are used to a limited extent in medicine, especially the sulphate (Epsom salts); they are also used in dressing cotton goods and in dyeing; but, on the whole, the economical importance of the combinations of magnesium, considering their abundance and the cheapness with which they could be furnished in large quantity, is exceedingly small.

magnesium-lamp (mag-nē′ṣium-lamp), n. A lamp in which magnesium is burned for the purpose of illumination. Such lamps are of various types, being adapted for the combustion of the metal in the form of a wire or ribbon or in a pulverized state.

magnes-stone†, n. [Tr. L. magnes lapis, Gr. Μάγνης λίθος: see magnet.] A magnet.

On thother syde an hideous Rocke is pight
Of mightie Magnes stone. Spenser, F. Q., II. xii. 4.

As if the sight of the enemy had been a magnes stone to his courage, he could not contain himself.
Sir P. Sidney, Arcadia, iii.

magnet (mag′net), n. [< ME. magnete = D. magneet = MHG. magnes, magnēte, G. magnet = Dan. Sw. magnet = OF. magnete, manete (the mod. F. term is aimant: see adamant, aymant) = Sp. Pg. It. magnete, < L. magnes (magnet-) (with or without lapis, stone), a magnet, < Gr. μάγνης, also μάγνησσα, prop. adj., Μάγνης, Μαγνῆτις, Μαγνησία, Μάγνησσα (sc. λίθος), a magnet, lit. stone of Magnesia, < Μάγνης (Μαγνητ-), also Μαγνήτης, an inhabitant of Magnesia, < Μαγνησία, Magnesia, a district in Thessaly, where the magnet or magnetic iron ore appar. first came to notice.] A body which possesses the property of attracting fragments of iron or steel, and which, when freely suspended, tends, under the action of the earth, to take a certain definite position, pointing approximately north and south. The lodestone, a variety of the mineral magnetite, or the native magnetic oxid of iron (Fe_3O_4), is a natural magnet; but the properties of the magnet are best shown by an artificial magnet (see below), which has commonly the form of a straight bar or that of a horseshoe. When a bar-magnet is dipped into iron-filings, it is found that they adhere most strongly at the extremities of the bar (which are called the poles of the magnet), and not at all along the line midway between them. Strictly speaking, however, except in the case of a long thin magnet, the poles are not exactly at the ends. The middle line is called the neutral line or equator of the magnet; the straight line joining the poles is the axis of the magnet, or magnetic axis. A magnetic bar may abnormally have one or more intermediate points of maximum attraction, which are then called consequent poles. Again, if a magnetic needle is suspended at its center of gravity so as to be entirely free to turn, it is found that in general it places itself with its axis in a direction nearly north and south, and with one end inclining downward. The pole which is directed toward the north is called the north or north-seeking pole, also the boreal, positive, or red pole, or marked end of the needle; the other, the south, south-seeking, austral, negative, or blue pole, or unmarked end. It is found, further, that the like poles of two magnets repel and unlike poles attract each other. If a magnet is broken into halves, each half is found to be a complete magnet with a north and a south pole; and this is true no matter how often the process of division is repeated. On this and other more fundamental grounds, it is concluded that the magnetic polarity belongs to each molecule throughout the bar, and the maximum attraction observed near the ends is only the resultant effect of all these individual forces. (See magnetism.) A magnetic substance is one which may be attracted by a magnet, but has not the property of attracting other magnetic substances, and therefore has no polarity. Soft iron is a magnetic substance, as is also most magnetite, the lodestone variety being exceptional. A permanent magnet is one which retains its magnetism after the magnetizing influences (see below) cease to act. Steel and the lodestone have this property, on account of their high degree of coercive force. (See coercive.) Soft iron has very little coercive force, and accordingly its power of retaining magnetism is small. An artificial magnet (as a compass-needle) is made by contact with other magnets, and the methods employed are described as single-touch, double-touch, and separate-touch, according to the way in which the substance to be magnetized is rubbed by the magnets. Such a magnet may also be made by magnetic induction without actual contact. (See induction, 6.) Again, a magnet may be made by passing a current of electricity through a wire wound about the bar to be magnetized; this is called an electromagnet (which see). By this means magnets of very great strength may be made. They have usually a horseshoe form, and the bar is of soft iron, so that it retains its magnetism only so long as the current is passing. The earth may be considered as a huge magnet, whose poles are situated in the neighborhood of the geographical poles, though not coinciding with them; the north magnetic pole of the earth corresponds in polarity to the south-seeking pole of a magnetic needle. The action of the earth causes a freely suspended needle to set in a plane called the magnetic meridian, which in general makes an angle east or west of the geographical meridian (see declination), and with one pole (in the northern hemisphere, the north-seeking pole) inclined downward (see dip of the needle, under dip). The earth's magnetic force also serves to induce magnetism in masses of iron lying in or near the magnetic meridian. An iron ship is thus magnetized in the course of its construction. Similarly, iron columns, etc., are often found to be feebly magnetic. Magnetic properties belong also to some other compounds of iron besides the magnetic oxid, as pyrrhotite or magnetic pyrites (Fe_7S_8), and to some varieties of the native sesquioxid, hematite (Fe_2O_3); also to the magnetic metals nickel, cobalt, chromium, and manganese. Some varieties of platinum are strongly magnetic, and occasionally masses have polarity also, but this may be due to the large percentage of iron present, although all so-called iron-platinum does not show this property. Finally, it is found that a powerful electromagnet exerts an effect on all substances, in accordance with which they are divided into the two groups paramagnetic and diamagnetic (this is explained under diamagnetism).—Compound magnet. Same as magnetic battery.—Deflecting-magnet, a magnet used for deflecting a magnetic needle: often attached to a galvanometer for the purpose of fixing the zero of the needle in a certain position, or for altering the sensitiveness of the needle by changing the magnetic field. Also called zero magnet, directing-magnet, and deflector.—Horseshoe magnet, a magnet having a form somewhat resembling a horseshoe (see figure), being bent so that the two poles are brought near together, and hence can act at the same time upon the keeper or armature. A horseshoe electromagnet commonly consists of two bobbins side by side, whose cores are connected at one end by a piece of soft iron.—Moment of a magnet. See moment.—Permanent magnet. See the definition.—Portative force of a magnet, the maximum weight which a magnet can support.—Receiving-magnet. Same as relay-magnet.—Relay-magnet, or relay, in teleg., a sensitive electromagnetic receiving instrument used to close a circuit in the receiving station, which contains a battery and a less sensitive receiving instrument, such as a sounder or a register: also used to retransmit a message over another section of the line. See translate.—Saturated magnet. See magnetism.—Solenoidal magnet, a long and thin bar-magnet, uniformly magnetized, whose poles are at or very near the ends. In such a magnet the distribution of the magnetism is said to be solenoidal, in distinction from the lamellar distribution of a magnetic shell (which see, under magnetic).—To arm a magnet. See arm[2].—To make the magnet. See make.

Steel Magnet with consequent poles at a and b.

Horseshoe Magnet.

magnetic (mag-net′ik), a. and n. [= F. magnétique = Sp. magnético = Pg. It. magnetico (cf. D. G. magnetisch = Dan. Sw. magnetisk), < NL. magneticus (NGr. μαγνητικός), of a magnet, < L. magnes (magnet-), < Gr. μάγνης (μαγνητ-), a magnet: see magnet.] I. a. 1. Pertaining to the magnet or to magnetism; possessing the properties of the magnet: as, a magnetic bar of iron; a magnetic needle.

The magnetic axis of the magnet is the line joining the two poles, and the direction of the magnetic axis is reckoned from the negative pole towards the positive one.
Atkinson, tr. of Mascart and Joubert, I. 285.

2. Pertaining to the earth's magnetism: as, the magnetic north; the magnetic meridian. See phrases below.—3. Having properties analogous to those of the magnet; attractive; winning.

Doubtlesse there is a certaine attraction and magnetick force betwixt the religion and the ministeriall forme thereof. Milton, Church-Government, i. 3.

Magnetic axis. See magnet.—Magnetic azimuth. See azimuth.—Magnetic battery, a kind of battery formed of several magnets (usually horseshoe magnets) combined together, with all their poles similarly disposed. Also called a magnetic magazine or a compound magnet.—Magnetic cohesion. See cohesion.—Magnetic curves, the name given to those curves in which an infinite number of very minute needles would arrange themselves when placed round a magnet and at liberty to move round an axis. An idea of these curves is given by the appearance of iron-filings when scattered upon a sheet of paper and agitated immediately above a magnet. They show the direction of the lines of force in the magnetic field—that is, in the space about the magnet within which its action is felt.—Magnetic declination. See declination.—Magnetic density, the amount of free magnetism per unit of surface.—Magnetic dip. Same as dip of the needle (which see, under dip).—Magnetic elements of a place. See element.—Magnetic equator. See equator and magnet.—Magnetic field, the space through which the force or influence of a magnet is exerted; also, the space about a conductor carrying an electric current in which, as it may be shown, magnetic force is also exerted. Compare magnetic shell (below) and magnetism.—Magnetic fluid, a hypothetical fluid the existence of which was assumed in order to explain the phenomena of magnetism.—Magnetic force, the force exerted between two magnets, or, more definitely, between two magnetic poles. It is repulsive between like and attractive between unlike poles, and varies in intensity with the product of their strengths directly, and with the square of the distance between them inversely.—Magnetic guard. See guard.—Magnetic induction, the power which a magnet or a current of electricity possesses of exciting temporary or permanent magnetism in such bodies in its vicinity as are capable of receiving it. See induction, 6.—Magnetic-induction capacity. Same as magnetic permeability.—Magnetic intensity. Same as magnetic force.—Magnetic limit, the temperature beyond which a magnetic metal ceases to be affected by the magnet. For iron this is the temperature of bright-red heat; for cobalt it is above that of white heat; for nickel it is about 350° C.—Magnetic magazine. Same as magnetic battery.—Magnetic matter, an imaginary substance possessing magnetic properties, the distribution of which in a magnet is conceived by Sir William Thomson to represent magnetic polarity.

Magnetic Curves.

It will very often be convenient to refer the phenomena of magnetic force to attractions or repulsions mutually exerted between portions of an imaginary magnetic matter, which, as we shall see, may be conceived to represent the polarity of a magnet of any kind.

Sir W. Thomson, Elect. and Mag., p. 351.

Magnetic meridian, moment, etc. See the nouns.—Magnetic needle, any small magnetized iron or steel rod turning on a pivot, such as the needle of the mariners' compass.—Magnetic north, that point of the horizon which is indicated by the direction of the magnetic needle. It is seldom the true north. See magnetic meridian.—Magnetic observatory, a station provided with apparatus for making both absolute and differential determinations of the elements of the earth's magnetism, and at which systematic observations are maintained. The instruments used for absolute measures are the magnetometer for the declination and horizontal force, and the dip-circle for the inclination. The instruments used for differential measures are the declinometer, which shows the changes in the declination, and magnetometers, which register the variations in the horizontal and vertical components of the force. By the application of photography a continuous registration of these variations is obtained.—Magnetic permeability. See permeability.—Magnetic points of convergence, the magnetic poles of the earth, around which are drawn the isogonic lines, or lines of equal declination.—Magnetic poles of the earth, two nearly opposite points on the earth's surface, where the dip of the needle is 90°. They are at a considerable distance from the geographical poles of the earth.—Magnetic potential. See potential.—Magnetic pyrites, a bronze-yellow magnetic iron sulphid, varying in composition from Fe_7S_8 to $Fe_{10}S_{11}$. Also called pyrrhotite.—Magnetic resistance or reluctance. See the nouns.—Magnetic retentiveness. Same as coercive force.—Magnetic rotation of currents, the dynamical effects, observed under suitable conditions, produced by a magnet in rotating a conductor carrying a current, or conversely of a stationary conductor traversed by a current in rotating a magnet.—Magnetic rotatory power, the rotation of the plane of polarization of a ray of light passing through a transparent medium in a powerful magnetic field. According to the direction of rotation, it is designated as + or −. Verdet's constant for a given substance is the amount of rotation between two points whose difference of magnetic potential is 1 c. g. s. unit. See polarization.—Magnetic scale, a table or diagram exhibiting the paramagnetic and diamagnetic metals in the order of their strengths.—Magnetic screen, a soft iron shell—for example, in the form of a sphere—which, if of the proper thickness, cuts off a magnetic needle within from the effect of a magnet without. Such a screen is sometimes used to free a needle from the earth's force, so that it can obey the impulse of a current sent about it.—Magnetic sense, a supposed special sense by which magnetic influences are perceived.

Neither in my own case, nor in several others who tried, was anything left that could be attributed to a magnetic sense.

Proc. Soc. Psych. Research, II. 18.

Magnetic separator, an apparatus or instrument for separating iron from other substances, as iron from brass-filings, or scraps of nails or wire from wheat. E. H. Knight.—Magnetic shell, a magnet in the form of a very thin plate or sheet, the surfaces of which have opposite polarity. A thin slice off a cylindrical bar-magnet would be a magnetic shell; or, in other words, a bar-magnet may be thought of as made up of a great number of magnetic shells placed together with their poles facing in the same direction. A closed electric circuit—for example, a circular wire traversed by a current—is equivalent to a magnetic shell; and a series of such circuits, or practically a solenoid, has all the properties of a bar-magnet, and is surrounded by a similar field of force.—Magnetic storm, an abrupt disturbance of the equilibrium of the magnetic forces controlling a freely suspended magnetic needle, which is thereby thrown into rapid oscillation and displaced from its mean position: usually observed simultaneously over a considerable portion of the earth, and hence inferred by some to be of cosmical origin. Magnetic storms are often accompanied by electrical earth-currents, observed, for example, as a disturbing element in connection with telegraph-lines. They are most frequent during those periods (at intervals of about eleven years) when auroras are common, and both phenomena accompany the time of sun-spot frequency.—Magnetic substance. See magnet.—Magnetic susceptibility. See susceptibility.—Magnetic telegraph, the electric telegraph. See telegraph.—Magnetic tick, a faint metallic sound produced when an iron bar is rapidly magnetized or demagnetized.

When an iron or cobalt bar is magnetized it becomes longer and somewhat more slender, but does not appreciably alter in volume; it also emits a slight sound—a magnetic tick.

A. Daniell, Prin. of Physics, p. 609.

Magnetic unit. See unit.—Point of magnetic indifference, that point of a magnet, about midway between the two extremes, where the attractive force, after continually diminishing as one proceeds from either pole, ceases altogether; the equator of the magnet.

II. n. 1. Any metal, as iron, steel, nickel, cobalt, etc., which may receive the properties of the lodestone.—2. A paramagnetic body, or one which, when free to turn in a magnetic field, sets its longest axis along the lines of magnetic force: in contradistinction to diamagnetic. See diamagnetism.

magnetical (mag-net'i-kal), a. and n. [< magnetic + -al.] I. a. 1. Same as magnetic.—2. Exhaling or drawing out.

There is an opinion, that the moon is magnetical of heat, as the sun is of cold and moisture. Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 75.

Magnetical amplitude. See amplitude.

II.† n. A substance that has magnetic properties; a magnetic.

Men that ascribe thus much unto rocks of the North must presume or discover the like magneticals in the South. For, in the Southern Seas and far beyond the Equator, variations are large, and declinations as constant as in the Northern Ocean. Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., ii. 3.

magnetically (mag-net'i-kal-i), adv. In a magnetic manner; by magnetism.

magneticalness (mag-net'i-kal-nes), n. The property of being magnetic. Hist. Roy. Soc., IV. 253.

magnetician (mag-ne-tish'an), n. [< magnetic + -ian.] One skilled in magnetism; a magnetist.

magneticness (mag-net'ik-nes), n. The quality of being magnetic; magneticalness.

magnetics (mag-net'iks), n. [Pl. of magnetic: see -ics.] The science or principles of magnetism.

magnetine (mag'ne-tin), n. [< magnet + *-ine*2.] 1. The principle of magnetism; a hypothetical imponderable matter in which magnetic phenomena are supposed to occur. Compare lumine.

It is upon their operation, but more particularly on the influence of magnetine, that the vital functions in all their modifications are dependent.

Ashburner, in Reichenbach's Dynamics (trans. 1851), p. xiv.

2. A compound of some kind of cementing material and a magnetic powder, such as iron-filings or magnetic oxid of iron, used in some forms of magnetic belts, etc.

magnetipolar (mag"net-i-pō'lar), a. [< L. magnes (magnet-), magnet, + polus, pole: see polar.] Possessing magnetic polarity: as, platinum is sometimes magnetipolar.

magnetisability, magnetisable, etc. See magnetizability, etc.

★magnetism (mag'ne-tizm), n. [= F. magnétisme = Sp. Pg. It. magnetismo = D. magnetisme = G. magnetismus = Dan. magnetisme = Sw. magnetism, < NL. magnetismus (NGr. μαγνητισμός), < L. magnes (magnet-), a magnet: see magnet and -ism.] 1. That peculiar property occasionally possessed by certain bodies (more especially by iron and steel) whereby, under certain circumstances, they naturally attract or repel one another according to determinate laws. According to the molecular theory of magnetism, the molecules of a magnetic substance possess permanent polarity, and as it is more and more highly magnetized the poles are arranged more and more perfectly in a common direction: when it is magnetized to the highest degree possible—that is, to saturation—all the north poles of the molecules point in one direction and all the south poles in the opposite direction. On this theory coercive force is simply that condition of the substance which retards this molecular arrangement during the process of magnetization and tends to retain it after magnetization. The current theory, or Ampère's theory of magnetism, supposes each molecule to be traversed by a closed electric circuit; these currents become parallel upon magnetization, and may then be regarded as equivalent to a series of closed electric currents about the exterior of the bar, these currents being clockwise at the south pole and counter-clockwise at the north pole. This theory derives its support from the observed fact that a spiral conductor traversed by a current (a solenoid) behaves as a magnet in all respects, being directed similarly by the earth and having a similar field of force about it. See magnet.

In many treatises it is the fashion to speak of a magnetic fluid or fluids; it is, however, absolutely certain that magnetism is not a fluid. . . . A fluid cannot possibly propagate itself indefinitely without loss.

S. P. Thompson, Elect. and Mag., p. 81.

2. That branch of science which treats of the properties of the magnet, and of magnetic phenomena in general.—3. Attractive power; capacity for exciting sympathetic interest or attention: as, the magnetism of eloquence; personal magnetism.

I do not think he [Dryden] added a single word to the language, unless, as I suspect, he first used magnetism in its present sense of moral attraction.

Lowell, Among my Books, 1st ser., p. 76.

Animal magnetism, the name given by Mesmer to the phenomena of mesmerism. See mesmerism and hypnotism.—Blue magnetism, that of the south pole of a magnet.—Diffusion of magnetism. See diffusion.—Induced magnetism. See induced.—Lamellar magnetism, magnetism distributed over a surface, as of a magnetic shell, in distinction from magnetism concentrated at a point, as at a pole.—Red magnetism, that of the north pole of a magnet.—Residual magnetism, the magnetism remaining in a mass of iron after the magnetizing influences have been removed. Its amount is relatively large in steel, greater in cast-iron than in wrought iron. In perfectly pure soft iron it is practically zero for bars of moderate thickness compared with their length.—Retentive magnetism, permanent magnetism, as of an iron ship.—Terrestrial magnetism, the magnetic properties possessed by the earth as a whole, which give the needle its directive power and cause it to dip, and which also communicate magnetism by induction, as to a bar of iron placed parallel to the dipping-needle. See declination, dip; also aclinic, isoclinal, *isogonic*1.

magnetist (mag'ne-tist), n. [< magnet + -ist.] One who is versed in the science of magnetism; a magnetician.

magnetite (mag'ne-tīt), n. [< magnet + *-ite*2.] Magnetic oxid of iron; a black oxid of iron ($FeFe_2O_4$ or $FeO.Fe_2O_3$) which is strongly attractable by a magnet. It sometimes possesses polarity, and is then called lodestone. It occurs in isometric crystals, generally octahedrons or dodecahedrons, and also more commonly massive in beds in the older crystalline rocks; in the form of scattered grains or crystals it is a common constituent of many igneous rocks. It is an important ore of iron, and occurs in large quantities in Norway and Sweden, in the Adirondack and West Point regions of New York, and in New Jersey. Titaniferous magnetite is a variety containing some titanium.

magnetitic (mag-ne-tit'ik), a. [< magnetite + -ic.] Pertaining to magnetite; of the nature of magnetite; containing magnetite: as, magnetitic slates.

magnetizability (mag-ne-tī-za-bil'i-ti), n. [< magnetizable: see -bility.] The power or susceptibility of being magnetized; the coefficient of magnetic induction. To increase the magnetizability is to increase the coefficient of magnetic induction; to load with magnetizability is to load with magnetic induction. Also spelled magnetisability.

magnetizable (mag'ne-tī-za-bl), a. [< magnetize + -able.] Capable of being magnetized. Also ★spelled magnetisable.

magnetization (mag"ne-ti-zā'shon), n. [< magnetize + -ation.] The act of magnetizing, or the state of being magnetized. Also spelled magnetisation.—Magnetization of light, a phrase used by Faraday to express the mutual relation which he proved to exist between magnetism and light. He applied it especially to the phenomenon of the rotation of the plane of polarization of a light-ray passed through a transparent medium in a powerful magnetic field.

magnetize (mag'ne-tīz), v.; pret. and pp. magnetized, ppr. magnetizing. [= D. magnetiseren = G. magnetisiren = Dan. magnetisere = Sw. magnetisera = F. magnétiser = Sp. magnetizar = Pg. magnetisar = It. magnetizzare; as magnet + -ize.] I. trans. 1. To communicate magnetic properties to: as, to magnetize a needle.—2. To attract as if by a magnet; move; influence.—3. To put under the influence of animal magnetism: mesmerize; hypnotize.

II. intrans. To acquire magnetic properties; become magnetic: as, a bar of iron standing some time in an inclined position will magnetize.

Also spelled magnetise.

magnetizee (mag"ne-ti-zē'), n. [< magnetize + *-ee*1.] One who is magnetized or mesmerized. ★Also spelled magnetisee.

magnetizer (mag'ne-tī-zer), n. 1. That which communicates magnetism.—2. One who magnetizes or mesmerizes.

★ Also spelled magnetiser.

magneto (mag'ne-tō), n. [Short for magneto-electrical machine.] A magneto-electric machine: as, a magneto-motor. S. P. Thompson, Dynamo-Elect. Mach., p. 368.

magneto-. A combining form of magnet or magnetic, often implying especially magneto-electric. As applied to electric machines, it is used (in contradistinction to dynamo-) to indicate that the magnetic fields involved are due to permanent magnets.

magneto-bell (mag'ne-tō-bel), n. An electric bell in which the armature of the electromagnet is polarized—that is, is a permanent magnet. The armature is alternately attracted and repelled when the alternate current from a magneto-electric machine is passed through the coil of the electromagnet, and a hammer attached to a continuation of the armature placed between two bells rings them. It is used as a telephone call-bell. Also called magneto call-bell.

magnetod (mag'ne-tōd), n. [< magnet + od.] Magnetine; magnetic od; the hypothetical odic force or principle of magnetism. Reichenbach.

magneto-electric (mag"ne-tō-e-lek'trik), a. Pertaining to magneto-electricity. See electromagnetism.—Characteristic of a magneto-electric machine. See characteristic.—Magneto-electric induction. See induction, 6.—Magneto-electric machine. See electric machine, under electric.—Magneto- electric telegraph, a telegraph in which the currents are produced by magneto-electric machines, in contradistinction to telegraphs in which voltaic batteries are used.

magneto-electrical (mag″ne-tō-ē-lek′tri-kal), a. Same as magneto-electric.

magneto-electricity (mag″ne-tō-ē-lek-tris′i-ti), n. 1. Electricity evolved by the action of magnets.—2. That branch of science which treats of phenomena in which the principles of both magnetism and electricity are involved. See electromagnetism.

magnetogram (mag-net′ō-gram), n. [< magnet(ic) + Gr. γράμμα, a writing: see *gram*².] The automatic record of the movements of the magnetic needles in an observatory. Nature, XXXVIII. 256.

magnetograph (mag-net′ō-grȧf), n. [< magnet(ic) + Gr. γράφειν, write.] 1. A magnetometer arranged to give an automatic and continuous record of the changes in position of the magnet under the influence of the earth. This is accomplished by the reflection of a spot of light from a mirror attached to the magnet on to a drum of sensitized paper turned by clockwork.

2. The record of a magnetometer; a magnetogram.

magneto-instrument (mag′ne-tō-in″strō-ment), n. Same as magneto. Eissler, Mod. High Explosives, p. 177.

magnetometer (mag-ne-tom′e-tėr), n. [< Gr. μάγνης (μαγνητ-), a magnet, + μέτρον, a measure.] An instrument used to measure magnetic forces or the strength of a magnetic field, especially one used to measure the intensity of the earth's magnetic force at any place. Magnetometers are arranged to measure the horizontal and vertical components of this force, from which its total intensity and direction are calculated.—Bifilar magnetometer. See bifilar.

magnetometric (mag″ne-tō-met′rik), a. [< magnetometr(y) + -ic.] Pertaining to or employed in the measurement of magnetic forces; obtained by means of a magnetometer: as, magnetometric observations.

magnetometry (mag-ne-tom′e-tri), n. [< Gr. μάγνης, a magnet, + -μετρία, < μέτρον, a measure.] The art of measuring the intensity and direction of magnetic fields; especially, the measurement of the earth's magnetic force; the use of a magnetometer.

magnetomotive (mag″ne-tō-mō′tiv), a. Producing active magnetic effects.—Magnetomotive force, the quantity which divided by the magnetic resistance gives the intensity of magnetization. It is equal to the work done in carrying a unit pole once around a magnetic circuit. Analogous to electromotive force.

magneto-optic (mag″ne-tō-op′tik), a. Pertaining to magneto-optics.

magneto-optics (mag″ne-tō-op′tiks), n. That branch of physics which considers the modifying action of a magnet upon light. Its most important effect is the rotation of the plane of polarization of a light-ray on passing through a transparent body in a powerful magnetic field. Since electromagnets are employed in these experiments, this subject is mainly included under the more general head of electro-optics.

magnetophone (mag-net′ō-fōn), n. [< Gr. μάγνης (μαγνητ-), a magnet, + φωνή, sound, voice.] An apparatus devised by H. S. Carhart, consisting essentially of a horseshoe magnet, in front of which is a disk of sheet-iron pierced with a number of holes, and on the other side a small induction-coil in circuit with a telephone. Upon rotating the disk, a clear musical note is heard in the telephone, the pitch rising as the rapidity of rotation is increased. This is explained by the intermittent action of the magnet upon the core of the coil, caused by the presence of the rotating perforated disk.

magneto-pointer (mag″ne-tō-poin′tėr), n. The index of a magneto-electric dial-telegraph.

magneto-printer (mag″ne-tō-prin′tėr), n. A printing telegraph in which a magneto-electric machine is the working-power. More fully called magneto-printing telegraph. T. D. Lockwood, Elect., Mag., and Teleg., p. 62.

magnetoscope (mag-net′ō-skōp), n. [< Gr. μάγνης (μαγνητ-), a magnet, + σκοπεῖν, view.] 1. A person supposed to see, or a thing supposed to aid in seeing, by means of magnetism; a clairvoyant, or a clairvoyant's device.—2. In physics, a contrivance for indicating the presence of magnetic force, but without measuring its intensity.

magneto-telegraph (mag″ne-tō-tel′ē-grȧf), n. Same as magneto-electric telegraph (which see, under magneto-electric).

magneto-telephone (mag″ne-tō-tel′ē-fōn), n. A telephone in which variations in the strength of a magnet produce, or are produced by, undulatory currents in a coil of wire surrounding either the whole or a part of the magnet and forming part of the telephone circuit. See telephone.

magneto-transmitter (mag″ne-tō-tranz-mit′-ėr), n. 1. In telephony, a magneto-telephone used to transmit speech or other sounds.—2. In teleg., a magneto-electric machine used to produce the telegraphic currents.

magnifiable (mag′ni-fī-a-bl), a. [< magnify + -able.] 1. Capable of being magnified or enlarged.—2. Worthy to be magnified or extolled.

Number, though wonderful in itself, and sufficiently magnifiable from its demonstrable affection, hath yet received adjections from the multiplying conceits of men.
Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., iv. 12.

magnific (mag-nif′ik), a. [Formerly also magnifique; < F. magnifique = Sp. magnifico = Pg. It. magnifico, < L. magnificus, great in deeds or sentiments, noble, high-minded, < magnus, great (see *main*², magnitude), + facere, do: see fact.] Making great or illustrious; glorifying or glorious; splendid; magnificent. [Rare.]

O parent! these are thy magnific deeds.
Milton, P. L., x. 354.

This King [Henry VIII.] at Eologne was victorious; In peace and warre, Magnifique, Glorious; In his rage bounty he did oft expresse His Liberality to bee excesse.
John Taylor, Memoriall of Monarchs.

Then too the pillar'd dome magnific heav'd Its ample roof.
Thomson, Autumn, l. 135.

magnifical (mag-nif′i-kal), a. [< magnific + -al.] Like a magnifico: same as magnific.

His port & state is in maner as magnifical as the other aforesaid ambassadors. Hakluyt's Voyages, II. 294.

magnifically (mag-nif′i-kal-i), adv. In a magnifical manner; with pomp or splendor. Jer. Taylor, Holy Dying, iv. 9.

Magnificat (mag-nif′i-kat), n. [< L. magnificat (3d pers. sing. pres. ind. act. of magnificare, magnify: see magnify), as used in the Vulgate, Luke i. 46: "Magnificat anima mea Dominum."] 1. The song or hymn of the Virgin Mary in Luke i. 46–55, beginning "My soul doth magnify the Lord." It is very similar to the song of Hannah (1 Sam. ii. 1–10), which has accordingly been called the Old Testament Magnificat. The Magnificat was in use in the hours or daily service of the Christian church as early as about A. D. 500. In the Greek Church it is the ninth ode (canticle) at Orthros (Lauds), and is called the Ode of the Theotocos. It was at first omitted from the American Prayer-book, but was restored in 1886.

2. A musical setting of this hymn.—Magnificat at matins†, something out of place (in allusion to the proper place of this canticle in the even-song).

The note is here all out of place, . . . and so their note comes in like Magnificat at mattins.
Andrewes, Sermons, v. 49. (Davies.)

magnificate† (mag-nif′i-kāt), v. t. [< L. magnificatus, pp. of magnificare, magnify: see magnify.] To magnify or extol.

That with oath
Magnificates his merit.
B. Jonson, Poetaster, v. 1.

★magnification (mag″ni-fi-kā′shon), n. [= OF. magnification, < LL. magnificatiō(n-), < L. magnificare, magnify: see magnify.] 1. The act of magnifying, or the state of being magnified or enlarged, as by a lens.

Psychological magnification is not more absurd than physical, although the processes in the two cases must be materially different; but of course in no case is magnification possible without limit.
J. Ward, Encyc. Brit., XX. 48.

2. In micros., specifically, increase of visual power in respect of penetration as well as superficial enlargement, thus contrasting with amplification.

Little is gained by expanding the image of an object from the ten-thousandth of an inch to an inch, if there be not an equivalent revelation of hidden details. It is in this revealing quality, which I shall call magnification, that our recent lenses so brilliantly excel.
Döllinger, 1884. (Nature, XXX. 62.)

3. The act of magnifying or extolling. Jer. Taylor.

magnificence (mag-nif′i-sens), n. [< ME. magnificence, < OF. and F. magnificence = Sp. Pg. magnificencia = It. magnificenza, < L. magnificentia, greatness in action or sentiment, nobleness, splendor, < magnificen(t-)s*, magnificus, magnificent: see magnificent.] 1. The state or condition of being magnificent; grandeur, as of appearance or of character; splendor; brilliancy: as, the magnificence of a palace or of a procession; the magnificence of Shakspere's genius.

The truly good government is not that which concentrates magnificence in a court, but that which diffuses happiness among a people. Macaulay, Mirabeau.

2†. A high degree of generosity; munificence.

Thou helest Iaundes, goutes, and dropsyes,
By our lordes fauour, grace, and magnyfycence.
Joseph of Arimathie (E. E. T. S.), p. 51.

The magnificent man must be liberal also; for the liberal man, too, will spend the right amount in the right manner: only, both the amount and the manner being right, magnificence is distinguished from liberality by greatness.
Peters, tr. of Aristotle's Nicomachean Ethics.

3. A title of courtesy belonging of right to several high officers of ancient Rome, and also to the rector (rector magnificus), prorector, and chancellor of a German university, and to some other German officials: corresponding to lordship, highness, or eminence (with his or your prefixed).=Syn. 1. Pomp, éclat. See grand.

magnificency† (mag-nif′i-sen-si), n.; pl. magnificencies (-siz). 1. Magnificence; grandeur.—2. A magnificent thing; an instance or example of magnificence or grandeur. [Rare.]

This canopy or arch of water I thought one of the most surprising magnificencies I had ever seene.
Evelyn, Diary, May 21, 1645.

magnificent (mag-nif′i-sent), a. [< L. as if magnificen(t-)s* (occurring in the compar. and superl. of magnificus, and its deriv. magnificentia: see magnific and magnificence), equiv. to magnificus, great in deeds or sentiment, noble, splendid, etc., < magnus, great, + -ficen(t-)s, an accom. form of -ficien(t-)s, the reg. form in comp. of facien(t-)s, ppr. of facere, do: see fact, facient.] 1†. Great in deeds or action; especially, very liberal; munificent; generous; open-handed.

Know, you court-leeches,
A prince is never so magnificent
As when he's sparing to enrich a few
With the injuries of many.
Massinger, Emperor of the East, ii. 1.

That Cittie in reward of vertue was ever magnificent.
Milton, Hist. Eng., ii.

2. Making a great show; possessing or pretending to greatness; stately; ostentatious.

A letter from the magnificent Armado.
Shak., L. L. L., i. 1. 193.

3. Grand in appearance or character; exhibiting greatness; splendid; brilliant; of extraordinary excellence: as, a magnificent building or view; a magnificent victory or poem; magnificent conceptions.

This was thought and called a magnificent answer.
Byron, Childe Harold, iv. 31, note.

4. Exhibiting greatness of size or extent: as, the preparations were upon a magnificent scale; a city of magnificent distances.

Far distant he descries,
Ascending by degrees magnificent
Up to the wall of heaven, a structure high.
Milton, P. L., iii. 502.

=Syn. Superb, Splendid, etc. (see grand); imposing, august, gorgeous.

magnificently (mag-nif′i-sent-li), adv. In a magnificent manner; with magnificence; splendidly; brilliantly; gorgeously.

Magnificet (mag-nif′i-set), n. [< L. magnificet, 3d pers. sing. pres. subj. of magnificare, magnify: see magnify.] A name of Mid-Lent Thursday, taken from the first word of the collect. Hampson, Medii Ævi Kalendarium, II. 254.

magnifico (mag-nif′i-kō), n. [It., < L. magnificus, noble, great: see magnific.] 1. A title of courtesy formerly given to Venetian noblemen; hence, a grandee; a man of high rank or pretensions; a great man.

The duke himself, and the magnificoes
Of greatest port, have all persuaded with him.
Shak., M. of V., iii. 2. 282.

2. A by-name for the rector of a German university, who is entitled to be addressed as your Magnificence. See magnificence, 3.

magnifier (mag′ni-fī-ėr), n. 1. One who or that which magnifies or enlarges.

Mens hilaris, requies, moderata dieta is a great magnifier of honest mirth. Burton, Anat. of Mel., p. 298.

2. Specifically, an optical instrument that magnifies; a convex lens, a concave mirror, or a combination of lenses or mirrors, which increases the apparent magnitude of bodies.

magnifiquet, a. An obsolete form of magnific.

magnify (mag′ni-fī), v. t.; pret. and pp. magnified, ppr. magnifying. [< ME. magnifien, < OF. (also F.) magnifier = Sp. Pg. magnificar = It. magnificare, < L. magnificare, make much of, esteem highly, praise highly, extol, magnify, < magnus, great, + facere, make. Cf. magnific.] 1. To make greater; increase the size, amount, or extent of; enlarge; augment. [Rare in this literal sense.]

The least error in a small quantity, as in a small circle, will, in a great one, as in the circles of the heavenly orbs, be proportionally magnified.
N. Grew. Cosmologia Sacra, ii. 5.

Speak, e'er my Fancy magnifie my Fears.
Congreve, To Cynthia.

2. To cause to appear greater; increase the apparent dimensions of; enlarge or augment to the eye: as, a convex lens magnifies the bulk of a body to the eye.

Since the shorter the focus of the lens the more closely may the object be approximated to the eye, the retinal picture is enlarged, causing the object to appear magnified in the same proportion. Encyc. Brit., XIV. 259.

3. To exalt the power, glory, or greatness of; sound the praises of; extol; glorify.

O, magnify the Lord with me, and let us exalt his name together. Ps. xxxiv. 3.

Those highly magnify him whose judicious inquiry into his acts, and deliberate research into his creatures, return the duty of a devout and learned admiration.
Sir T. Browne, Religio Medici, i. 13.

4. To represent as greater than the reality; exaggerate: as, to magnify a person's deeds; to magnify the evils of one's lot.

My wife . . . used every art to magnify the merit of her daughter. Goldsmith, Vicar, xvi.

Magnifying power of a microscope, the ratio of the length upon the retina of any part of the image of the object looked at with the microscope to the length of the retinal image of the same object looked at without the microscope at a standard distance of 10 inches. In regard to the magnifying power of eye-glasses, complicated considerations have to be introduced.—Magnifying power of a telescope, the ratio in which the angle subtended by any linear dimensions of the object looked at is increased by the telescope. It is always equal to the focal length of the object-glass divided by that of the eye-piece. For a distant object the focal length of the object-glass is that for parallel rays—that is, its principal focal length; for nearer objects the focal length is greater, and the magnifying power is correspondingly increased.

magnifying-glass (mag'ni-fī-ing-glȧs), n. In optics, a convex lens: so called because objects seen through it have their apparent dimensions increased.

magnifying-lens (mag'ni-fī-ing-lenz), n. See lens.

magniloquence (mag-nil'ō-kwens), n. [< L. magniloquentia, a lofty style or strain of language, < magniloquen(t-)s*, magniloquus, speaking in a lofty style: see magniloquent.] The quality of being magniloquent; a lofty manner of speaking or writing; exaggerated eloquence; grandiloquence; bombast.

All the sects ridiculed this magniloquence of Epicurus, as inconsistent with his whole system.
Bentley, Remarks, § 44.

There was something surprising and impressive in my friend's gushing magniloquence.
H. James, Jr., Pass. Pilgrim, p. 107.

magniloquent (mag-nil'ō-kwent), a. [< L. magniloquen(t-)s*, equiv. to magniloquus, speaking in a lofty style, < magnus, great, lofty, + loquen(t-)s, ppr. of loqui, speak: see locution.] Speaking or writing in a lofty style; grandiloquent; bombastic.

magniloquently (mag-nil'ō-kwent-li), adv. In a magniloquent manner; with loftiness or pomposity of language.

magniloquous† (mag-nil'ō-kwus), a. [< L. magniloquus, speaking in a lofty style, < magnus, great, lofty, + loqui, speak: see locution.] Magniloquent.

magniloquy (mag-nil'ō-kwi), n. [< LL. magniloquium, loftiness of speech, < L. magniloquus, speaking in a lofty style: see magniloquous.] Magniloquence; high-sounding pedantry. [Rare.]

Of many anatomical terms the chief characteristics are antiquity, magniloquy, and unintelligibility.
Buck's Handbook of Med. Sciences, VIII. 520.

magnisonant (mag-nis'ō-nant), a. [< L. magnus, great, + sonan(t-)s, ppr. of sonare, sound.] High-sounding; bombastic. Southey, The Doctor. [Rare.]

magnitude (mag'ni-tūd), n. [= F. magnitude = Sp. magnitud = Pg. magnitude = It. magnitudine, < L. magnitudo, greatness, bulk, size, rank, dignity, < magnus, great, large, grand, noble, important, etc.; compar. major (see major), superl. maximus (see maximum); with formative -n, < mag*, akin to Gr. μέγας (μεγαλ-), great, large, = AS. micel, great, much, Skt. √mah, orig. magh*, be great: see mickle, much. Cf. main[2].] 1. Greatness; vastness, whether in a physical or a moral sense; grandeur.

With plain heroick magnitude of mind.
Milton, S. A., l. 1279.

We commonly find in the ambitious man a superiority of parts, in some measure proportioned to the magnitude of his designs. Horsley, Works, I. iv.

2. Largeness of relation or significance; importance; consequence: as, in affairs of magnitude disdain not to take counsel.—3. Size, or the property of having size; the extended quantity of a line, surface, or solid; length, area, or volume.

And fast by, hanging in a golden chain,
This pendent world, in bigness as a star
Of smallest magnitude. Milton, P. L., ii. 1053.

One may learn how the feeling of magnitude varies with changes in the absolute magnitude of the object, and so reach a more precise and scientific statement of this particular aspect of the coexistence between body and mind.
J. Sully, Sensation and Intuition, p. 44.

4. Any kind of continuous quantity which is comparable with extended quantity. In this sense we speak of the magnitude of a velocity, force, acceleration, or other vector quantity; but we do not properly speak of a magnitude of heat, energy, temperature, sound, etc. The use of the word as a synonym of quantity, as in the following passage, is to be deprecated.

By intensive magnitude is meant the strength of a sensation; by extensive magnitude, its volume, which roughly speaking corresponds to the area of the sentient surface and the number of nervous elements acted upon.
J. Sully, Sensation and Intuition, p. 44.

5. In astron., the brightness of a star expressed according to the numerical system used by astronomers for that purpose. In this sense magnitude translates Greek μέγεθος, used in the same sense in the Almagest, the expression being due to the fact that bright stars, by an effect of irradiation, look larger than faint ones. The brightest stars are said to be of the first magnitude, while those of the sixth magnitude are hardly noticed by casual observers in ordinary states of the sky. Since the brightness of stars has been measured photometrically, the interval between successive magnitudes has been defined by a constant ratio of brightness, which in the so-called absolute scale, now generally used, is $\sqrt[5]{100}$, or 2.51.

6. In anc. pros., the length of a syllable, foot, colon, or meter, expressed in terms of the metrical unit (primary time, semeion, or mora): as, a foot of trisemic magnitude; a colon of icosasemic magnitude.—Absolute magnitude. See absolute.—Angular magnitude, the quantity of an angle.—Apparent magnitude of an object, that magnitude which is measured by the optic or visual angle intercepted between lines drawn from the extreme points of the object to the center of the pupil of the eye. This angle may be considered to be inversely as the distance of the object. [This phrase is used chiefly with reference to the heavenly bodies, but is employed also in many branches of optical science, with the same general meaning.]—Center of magnitude. See center[1]. = Syn. Bulk, Volume, etc. See size.

magnoferrite (mag-nō-fer'īt), n. See magnesioferrite.

Magnolia (mag-nō'li-ȧ), n. [NL. (Plumier, 1703), named after Pierre Magnol, a French botanist (1638–1715).] 1. A genus of plants, type of the family Magnoliaceæ and the tribe Magnolieæ, characterized by a sessile cone-shaped cluster of pistils, and two-ovuled persistent carpels which open down the back at maturity. They are trees or shrubs with entire alternate leaves, often evergreen, conduplicate in the bud, and then protected by membranous stipules, and large showy flowers which are solitary and terminal. The calyx consists of three deciduous sepals, and the corolla of six to twelve petals, usually white or purplish; and the stamens and pistils are numerous. The flowers are generally fragrant, and the fruit is a spike, consisting of a number of follicles, from the openings of which the scarlet or brown seeds are suspended at maturity by long and slender threads. There are about 15 a, one of the stamens; b, vertical section through one of the pistils, showing two ovules; c, cone of ripe fruits.

Flowering Branch of Magnolia fœtida.

species, indigenous to subtropical Asia and the eastern part of North America. They are almost all very ornamental, and are frequently cultivated. M. conspicua is the yulan. M. fœtida is the big laurel or bull-bay of the southern United States, a fine forest-tree, 60 or 80 feet high, evergreen, with fragrant flowers. M. macrophylla is the great-leafed cucumber, a less common tree of the same region. M. tripetala is the umbrella-tree. M. acuminata, the cucumber-tree or mountain-magnolia, extends north to New York and Ohio. Another cucumber-tree is M. cordata, growing in the Southern States. M. Virginiana, a tree, or northward a shrub, grows in swamps from Massachusetts to Florida and Texas. It has globular fragrant flowers, 2 inches long, the leaves evergreen in the south. It is variously named small or laurel magnolia, sweet-bay or white-bay, white laurel or swamp-laurel; also beaver-tree and swamp-sassafras. The genus appears very early and very abundantly in the fossil state, over 50 species having been described. They range from the Middle Cretaceous to the Pliocene, being more numerous in the Cretaceous than in the Tertiary in both Europe and America, and also occurring in Greenland, in Australia, in Japan, and in Java.

2. [l. c.] A plant of this genus.

Magnoliaceæ (mag-nō-li-ā'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (J. Saint-Hilaire, 1805), < Magnolia + -aceæ.] A family of dicotyledonous choripetalous trees or shrubs, belonging to the order Ranales, based on the genus Magnolia. It is characterized by having the sepals and petals in from two to an indefinite number of rows or series, petals and stamens usually very numerous, the receptacle bearing extrorse carpels, and the seeds with a minute embryo and no albumen. The order embraces 4 tribes, 12 genera, and about 98 species, growing chiefly in tropical and eastern Asia and North America (a few in tropical and South America), and in Australasia.

magnoliaceous (mag-nō-li-ā'shius), a. [< magnolia + -aceous.] Of or pertaining to plants of the family Magnoliaceæ; resembling the magnolia.

Magnolieæ (mag-nō-lī'ē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (A. P. de Candolle, 1824), < Magnolia + -eæ.] A tribe of trees and shrubs of the family Magnoliaceæ, including four genera of which Magnolia is the type, the other three being Liriodendron, Talauma, and Michelia. They inhabit North America, tropical and eastern Asia, and tropical America.

magnoperate† (mag-nop'ę-rāt), v. t. [< L. magnopere, magno opere, greatly: magno, abl. of magnus, great; opere, abl. of opus, work, labor: see opus, operate.] To cause or effect a great increase of.

Which will not a little magnoperate the splendour of your well knowne honour to these succeeding times.
Hopton, Baculum Geodæticum (1614). (Halliwell.) magnosellarian (mag″nō-se-lā'ri-ȧn), a. [As Magnosellar(idæ) + -ian.] Having large saddles, as a goniatite; of or pertaining to the Magnosellaridæ. Hyatt.

Magnosellaridæ (mag″nō-se-lar'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < L. magnus, great, + sella, a seat, saddle (> sellaris, of or belonging to a seat), + -idæ.] A family of goniatites having smooth shells, sutures with undivided ventral lobes, and a very large pair of entire lateral saddles, whence the name. Hyatt, Proc. Bost. Soc. Nat. Hist., 1883, p. 318. Preferably called Magnisellidæ.

magnum (mag'num), n. [< L. magnum, neut. of magnus, great: see magnitude.] 1. A large wine-bottle, usually twice the size of the ordinary bottle used for the same kind of wine.—2. The quantity of wine contained in such a bottle: as, a magnum of port.

The approbation of much more rational persons than the B. club could have mustered even before the discussion of the first magnum. Scott, Waverley, x.

3. Pl. magna (-nȧ). In anat., the largest bone of the human carpus, in the distal row, between the trapezoid and the unciform, in special relation with the head of the middle metacarpal bone: more fully called os magnum. It is the third carpale of a typical carpus, and is also known as capitatum, or os capitatum, from its shape in man.

magnum-bonum (mag'num-bō'num), n. [L., a great good: magnum, neut. of magnus, great; bonum, a good thing, neut. of bonus, good: see bonus.] A kind of large-sized barrel-pen: a trade-name.

magnus† (mag'nus), n. [A corruption of manganese.] Manganese as used in the decoration of enameled pottery. Solon, The Old English Potter. [Local Eng.]

Magnus hitch. See hitch.

Magnus's law. In thermo-electricity, the law that in circuits of the same metal throughout no electromotive force is produced by variation in temperature or of section of the conductor at different parts of the circuit. In order that this law should hold, it is necessary that the conductor should be of uniform quality, hardness, etc., at all points of its length.

The Norwegian Flimmer-ball (Magosphæra planula) in section. The pear-shaped cells are seen bound together in the center of the gelatinous sphere by a thread-like process. Each cell contains both a nucleus and a contractile vesicle.

Magosphæra (mā-gō-sfē'rȧ), n. [NL., < Gr. μάγος, magical, + σφαῖρα, a ball.] A genus of protozoans of Haeckel's group Catallacta, characterized by a ciliate globular body consisting of a single layer of simple pyriform nucleated cells bound together by gelatinous processes converging to a common center, the animal having the form-value of a vesicular morula or planula. M. planula is the Norwegian flimmer-ball.

magot[1] †, n. A Middle English form of maggot.

magot[2] (mag'ot or ma-gō'), n. [< F. magot, the Barbary ape.] 1. The Barbary ape, Inuus ecaudatus, which has a small tubercle in place of a tail. It is naturalized on the rock of Gibraltar, and is remarkable for docility and attachment to its young. See cut under ape.

Magot[2], 2.

2. A small grotesque figure; especially, one of the crouching or cross-legged figures common in Chinese or other Oriental art as knobs on the covers of large vases, and in similar uses.

magot-pie †, maggot-pie † (mag'ọt-pī), n. [Also maggoty-pie, maggaty-pie, magaty-pie, magot-a-pie, magot o' pie, etc.; < magot*, maggot*, < F. margot, a magpie, a dim. of Marguerite, Margaret, a common fem. name (< L. margarita, < Gr. μαργαρίτης, a pearl: see margarite), + pie[2]. Cf. equiv. mag[1], madge[1], magpie.] A magpie.

> Augurs and understood relations have,
> By magot-pies, and choughs, and rooks, brought forth
> The secret'st man of blood. Shak., Macbeth, iii. 4. 125.
>

★magpie (mag'pī), n. [< mag[1] + pie[2], or abbr. of magot-pie. Cf. mag[1], madge[1], etc.] 1. A well-known bird of Europe, Asia, and America, of the genus Pica and family Corvidæ; the Pica pica, P. rustica, P. caudata, or P. hudsonica. This pie is lustrous-black, with green, purple, violet, and golden iridescence; the under parts from breast to crissum, the scapulars, and a great part of the inner webs of the primaries are white; the bill and feet are black. The bird is from 15 to 20 inches long, according to the development of the tail, which is 12 inches or less in length, extremely graduated; the stretch of wings is about 2 feet. Magpies are omnivorous, like most corvine and garruline birds, and noted for their craftiness, kleptomania, and mimicry. They nest in trees and shrubs, building a very bulky structure, and lay from 6 to 9 pale-drab eggs, dotted, dashed, and blotched with brown. As a book-name, magpie is extended to all the species of Pica and some few related pies or jays with long tails. The yellow-billed magpie of California is P. nuttalli. Blue magpies are certain long-tailed jays of the genus Cyanopolius, as C. cyanus of eastern Asia and Japan, or C. cooki of Spain; also of the genus Urocissa, as U. erythrorhyncha, the red-billed blue magpie of the Orient. The bird called French magpie is the red-backed shrike, Lanius collurio. The name magpie, or magpie-pigeon, is given to a strain of domestic pigeons bred to colors resembling those of the magpie. Magpie is often used adjectively with reference to some characteristic of the bird.

Magpie (Pica caudata).

2. The Australian piping-crow, Gymnorhina.

> Below us in the Valley a mob of Jackasses were shouting and laughing uproariously, and a magpie was chanting his noble vesper hymn from a lofty tree.
> H. Kingsley, Geoffry Hamlyn, p. 167.

3. A halfpenny. [Slang, Eng.]

> I'm at low-water-mark myself — only one bob and a magpie; but as far as it goes I'll fork out and stump.
> Dickens, Oliver Twist, viii.

4. A bishop: so called from the black and white of his robes. [Old slang, Eng.]

> Let not those silk-worms and magpies have dominion over us. Tom Brown, Works, I. 107. (Davies.)

5. Among British marksmen, a shot striking that division of the target which is next to the outermost when the target is divided into four sections: so called because the markers indicate this hit by means of a black and white disk.

magpie-diver (mag'pī-dī″vėr), n. The smew or white nun, Mergellus albellus. [Prov. Eng. and Irish.]

magpie-finch (mag'pī-finch), n. Any one of the smaller spotted or otherwise varied birds of the genus Spermestes.

magpie-maki (mag'pī-mā″ki), n. The ruffed lemur, Lemur macaco, having black and white spots.

magpie-moth (mag'pī-môth), n. A moth of the genus Abraxas, A. grossulariata. Its color is white with black and orange spots, and the same colors appear on it in its larval and pupal states. The larva feeds on currant- and gooseberry-leaves, and where abundant is very destructive. See Abraxas, 3. Also called gooseberry-moth.

magpie-robin (mag'pī-rob″in), n. A dayal; any bird of the genus Copsichus, as C. saularis of India. See cut under Copsichus.

magpie-shrike (mag'pī-shrīk), n. 1. A South American tanagrine bird, Lanius picatus of Latham, now known as Cissopis leverianus, about 10 inches long, glossy black and white in color, with a long graduated tail, thus resembling a magpie. It inhabits Guiana, Venezuela, Colombia, Ecuador, Peru, and Bolivia, and in some parts of Brazil is replaced by an allied larger species or variety, C. major, 11½ inches long.

2. The pied piping-crow of Australia, somewhat resembling the English magpie, having a rich bell-like warble. This bird is Gymnorhina tibicen. Commonly called magpie by the English residents.

magret, magreet, prep. Middle English forms of maugre.

magsman (magz'man), n.; pl. magsmen (-men). [< mag[5] (as if poss. mag's) + man.] A street swindler who preys on countrymen and simple persons. [Slang, Eng.]

maguari (ma-gwä'ri), n. [Tupi.] A South American stork, Euxenura maguari. It has a black bill and a peculiar formation of the tail.

maguey (mag'wā, Sp. mä-gā'), n. [Sp., prob. < Haytian. Also surmised to be a "misreading of allaguey, a Sp. form of aloe." Int. Dict.] The American aloe, Agave Americana, and several allied species. — Gum maguey. See gum[2].

Magus (mā'gus), n.; pl. Magi (mā'jī). [L., < Gr. Μάγος: see mage.] 1. One of the members of the learned and priestly caste in ancient Persia, who had official charge of the sacred rites, practised interpretation of dreams, professed supernatural arts, and were distinguished by peculiarities of dress and insignia. Their origin may be traced to the Accadians, a Turanian race, the earliest settlers of the lower Euphrates valley. The first historical reference to the Magi occurs in Jer. xxxix. 3, 13, where a Babylonian rab-mag, or chief of the Magi, is mentioned in connection with the siege, capture, and rule of Jerusalem.

2. In Christian history, one of the "wise men" who, according to the Gospel of Matthew (ii. 1, 2), came from the East to Jerusalem to do homage to the new-born King of the Jews. A tradition as old as the second century (resting on Ps. lxxii. 10; Isa. xlix. 7) makes them kings, and at a later period the names Melchior, Kaspar, and Balthasar become attached to them. As the first of the pagans to whom the birth of the Messiah was announced, they are honored at the feast of Epiphany; in the calendar, however, the three days immediately following the first of the new year are called after them. In works of art the youngest of them is represented as a Moor.

Magyar (mo'dyor), n. [Hung., > Turk. majār.] 1. A member of a race, of the Finno-Ugrian stock, which invaded Hungary about the end of the ninth century, and settled there, where it still forms the predominant element of the population. — 2. The native tongue of Hungary. It belongs to the Ugrian branch of the Ural-Altaic or Scythian tongues.

magydar † (maj'i-dăr), n. [< L. magydaris, magudaris, maguderis, < Gr. μαγύδαρις, the seed or stalk of the laserpitium, also another plant.] Laserwort, a plant of the genus Laserpitium.

Mahabharata (ma-hä-bhä'ra-tä), n. [Skt., < mahā-, great, + Bhārata, a descendant of a king or a tribe named Bharata, < √ bhar = Gr. φέρειν = E. bear[1].] The name of one of the two great epic poems of ancient India, the other being the Ramayana. It contains a history of the contest for supremacy between the two great regal families of northern India, the Pandavas and the Kurus or Kauravas, ending in the victory of the former and the establishment of their rule. In reality, this narrative occupies but a fourth of the poem, the other three fourths being episodical and added at various times. The Mahabharata thus became a sort of encyclopedia, embracing everything that it concerned a cultivated Hindu to know.

Mahadeva (ma-hä-dā'vä), n. [Skt. mahādeva, < mahā-, great, + deva, god: see deity.] A name of Siva, the third deity of the great Hindu triad.

mahalath (mä'ha-lath), n. A Hebrew word of disputed meaning, occurring in the titles of Psalms liii. and lxxxviii. (in the last of which the qualification leannoth is added): according to Gesenius, a lyre or cithara; according to others, antiphonal singing or a direction to sing in an antiphonal manner.

mahaleb (mä'ha-leb), n. [Ar. mahleb.] A species of cherry (Prunus Mahaleb) whose fruit affords a violet dye and a fermented liquor resembling kirschwasser. It is found in the middle and south of Europe. Its flowers and leaves are used by perfumers, and its wood by cabinet-makers. Tubes for tobacco-pipes, called cherry-sticks or -stems, are made of its young stems, sometimes several feet long and perfectly straight. See cherry[1], 1.

mahaly, n. Same as mahala, which see in the supplement.

Maharaja, Maharajah (ma-hä-rä'jä), n. [Skt. mahārāja, < mahā-, great, + rāja, a prince or king: see rajah.] The title borne by some ★Indian princes whose sovereignty is extensive.

mahatma (ma-hat'mä), n. [Skt. mahātman, great-souled, magnanimous.] An adept in Brahmanism: a name recently applied by "theosophists" to certain imaginary beings, of preternatural powers, asserted to exist in or near India. No beings so named and endowed have any ancient recognition in Indian literature.

Mahdi (mä'dē), n. [Also sometimes Mehdee (< Turk. mehdī); < Ar. mahdī, a guide, leader, esp. a spiritual director, lit. 'the guided or directed one,' < ma-, a formative prefix, + ehdi, guide (> hēdi, a guide in religion, spiritual director, hidāya, guidance).] According to Mohammedan belief, a spiritual and temporal ruler destined to appear on earth during the last days. Some sects hold that the Mahdi has appeared, and in concealment awaits the time of his manifestation. There have been a number of pretended Mahdis, of whom the latest of importance was the chief whose armed followers resisted the advance of the British troops into the Sudan in 1884–85, and overthrew the Egyptian power in that region, which they continued to hold. The belief apparently grew out of the Jewish belief in the coming of the Messiah.

> It is from the descendants of 'Alee that the more devout Moslems expect the Mehdee, who is to reappear on earth in company with the Prophet Elias, on the second coming of Christ. J. P. Brown, The Dervishes, p. 74.

Mahdi, or 'the well-guided,' is the name given by the Shi'ites to that member of the family of 'Ali who, according to their belief, is one day to gain possession of the whole world, and set up the reign of righteousness in it. Encyc. Brit., XVI. 570.

Mahdian (mä'di-an), n. [< Mahdi + -an.] One who holds that the Mahdi whose coming was foretold by Mohammed has already appeared; specifically, one who holds that the Mahdi has already appeared in the person of Mohammed Abu el-Qasim, the twelfth Imam, who is supposed to be concealed in some secret place awaiting the hour of his manifestation. The Shiahs in general hold this view. Also Mahdist.

Mahdiism (mä'di-izm), n. [< Mahdi + -ism.] The doctrine of, or belief in, the coming of the Mahdi. Fortnightly Rev., XLIII. 701.

Mahdism (mä'dizm), n. [< Mahdi + -ism.] Same as Mahdiism. The Academy, Oct. 20, 1888, p. 249.

★Mahdist (mä'dist), n. [< Mahdi + -ist.] 1. Same as Mahdian. — 2. A follower of the pretended Mahdi of the Sudan in Africa. See Mahdi.

> Another body of Mahdists coming round on our right reinforced them. Daily Telegraph (London), March 21, 1885.

Mahernia (mā-hėr'ni-ä), n. [NL., an anagram of Hermannia.] A name proposed by Linnæus in 1767 as a generic name for certain species of sterculiaceous plants, but considered by recent authors as a section of Hermannia. It is characterized by the indefinite number of ovules and the reniform seeds with a curved embryo, and differs from other sections of Hermannia in having the filaments dilated at the middle.

maheymt, n. An obsolete form of mayhem. Chaucer.

mahlstick (mäl'stik), n. [Also maulstick, malstick; < G. mahlstock, malstock, < malen, paint, + stock, stick, staff.] A staff, from three to four feet long, used by painters as a rest for the right hand, and held in the left. It tapers toward the upper end, which is surmounted by a ball of cotton-wool covered with soft leather, to protect the picture from injury in case of contact.

mahmoodis, mahmoudis, mahmudis (mä-mō′-dis), n. pl. Same as mammodis.

mahoe (mä-hō′), n. [Also (F.) mahot, maho; Carib makv.] 1. A tree or shrub, Hibiscus (Paritium) tiliaceus, common on tropical coasts. The inner bark has been much used for cordage.—2. Sterculia Caribœa, a tall West Indian tree.—3. Melicytus ramiflorus, a small New Zealand tree of the violet family, with small flowers in bundles on the branches.—Blue, gray, or mountain mahoe, Hibiscus (Paritium) elatus, a West Indian tree yielding the Cuba bast.—Congo mahoe, Hibiscus clypeatus.—Seaside mahoe, Thespesia populnea, also one of the Malvaceæ, whose bast has been used in British Guiana for making coffee-sacks.

mahoganize (mą-hog′ą-nīz), v. t.; pret. and pp. mahoganized, ppr. mahoganizing. [< mahogan(y) + -ize.] To cause to resemble mahogany, as by staining.

mahogany (mą-hog′ą-ni), n. [= F. mahagoni, mahogon = Pg. mogono, mogno, magno = It. mogano = D. mahonie = G. mahagoni = Sw. mahagony, mahogny, mahogni = Dan. mahogni = Turk. maghun (NL. mahogoni), < W. Ind. or S. Amer. mahogoni. Cf. *acajou*1.] 1. A tree, Flowering Branch of Mahogany (Swietenia Mahagoni).

a, the flower; b, the fruit.

Swietenia Mahagoni, belonging to the family Meliaceæ. It is native in the West Indies, Central America, Mexico, and the Florida Keys. Its importance lies in its timber.

2. The wood of the above tree. It combines a rich reddish-brown color, beauty of grain, and susceptibility of polish with unusual soundness, uniformity, freedom from warping, durability, and largeness of dimensions. On account of its costliness, its use is restricted mainly to furniture-making, cabinet-work, etc., often in the form of a veneer. The quality of the timber varies with the conditions of its growth, exposed situations and solid ground yielding the finest. Mahogany with figured grain is especially prized, and is obtained largely, but not exclusively, from the San Domingo and Cuba wood, called Spanish mahogany. The Honduras mahogany, or baywood, shipped from the Bay of Campeachy, is more open-grained and plain, and of larger dimensions, yielding logs sometimes 40 feet in length. The Mexican mahogany has the largest growth of all, is similar to the last-named, and supplements its diminishing supply.

Hence—3. A table, especially a dinner-table.

> I had hoped to have seen you three gentlemen with your legs under the mahogany in my humble parlor in the Marks.
> Dickens, Master Humphrey's Clock.

4†. A kind of drink. See the quotation.

> Mr. Eliot mentioned a curious liquor peculiar to his country, which the Cornish fishermen drink. They call it mahogany; and it is made of two parts gin and one part treacle, well beaten together.
> Boswell, Johnson (ed. 1835), VIII. 53.

African mahogany. Same as Senegal mahogany.—Australian mahogany, Eucalyptus marginata (see jarrah); also, other eucalypts (as below) and species of the related genus Angophora.—Bastard mahogany, in Jamaica, Matayba apetala; in Australia, Eucalyptus marginata, the jarrah, and E. botryoides.—Ceylon mahogany. Same as jack-wood.—Forest-mahogany, in New South Wales and Queensland, Eucalyptus resinifera.—Horse-flesh mahogany. Same as sabicu.—Indian or East Indian mahogany, Toona Toona, the toon-tree; also, Soymida febrifuga, the Indian redwood, and Chukrasia tabularis, the Chittagong-wood—both formerly classed under Swietenia.—Kentucky mahogany, a rare name of the Kentucky coffee-tree. See Gymnocladus.—Madeira mahogany. Same as canary-wood.—Mountain mahogany, a tree of the genus Cercocarpus, especially C. ledifolius and C. parvifolius; sometimes also same as mahogany-birch.—Red mahogany. Same as forest-mahogany.—Senegal mahogany. See Khaya.—Swamp-mahogany, in New South Wales, Eucalyptus botryoides and E. robusta.—White mahogany, in Jamaica, Stenostomum bifurcatum; in Australia, Eucalyptus acmenioides and E. robusta.

mahogany-birch (mą-hog′ą-ni-bėrch), n. The cherry-birch, Betula lenta. See birch.

mahogany-brown (mą-hog′ą-ni-broun), n. A reddish brown, the color of mahogany.

mahogany-color (mą-hog′ą-ni-kul″ėr), n. A reddish-brown color resembling that of mahogany.

II. a. 1. Being a maid; belonging to the class of maids or virgins.

His maiden sister and his orphan niece, whom he . . . used to boast of as the only women he had ever seen who were well broken in and bitted to obedience.
Scott, Antiquary, ii.

O'er Mænalus, amid the maiden throng.
Addison, tr. of Ovid's Metamorph., ii. 513.

2. Of or pertaining to a maid or to maids: as, maiden charms.

Now, by my maiden honour, yet as pure
As the unsullied lily, I protest.
Shak., L. L. L., v. 2. 351.

3. Like a maid in any respect; virginal; chaste.

Indeed I knew
Of no more subtle master under heaven
Than is the maiden passion for a maid,
Not only to keep down the base in man,
But teach high thought. Tennyson, Guinevere.

4. Young; fresh; new; hitherto untried or unused; unsullied; unstained.

Full bravely hast thou flesh'd

But the seventh day is the sabbath of the Lord thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, . . . nor thy maid-servant. Ex. xx. 10.

maieutic (mā-ū′tik), a. and n. [< Gr. μαιευτικός, of or for midwifery (fem. μαιευτική, sc. τέχνη, the art of midwifery), < μαιεύεσθαι, act as a midwife, < μαία, an old woman, a nurse, midwife.] I. a. Serving to assist or facilitate childbirth; hence, in the Socratic method (see II.), aiding in bringing forth, in a metaphorical sense; serving to educe or elicit. [Rare.]

II. n. The art of midwifery: applied by Socrates to the method he pursued in investigating and imparting truth; intellectual midwifery. It consisted in eliciting from a person interrogated such answers as lead by successive stages to the conclusion desired by the interrogator.

This positive side of the Socratic method is the maieutic (that is, maieutic or obstetric art). Socrates likened himself, namely, to his mother Phænarete, who was a midwife, because, if no longer able to bear thoughts himself, he was still quite able to help others to bear them, as well as to distinguish those that were sound from those that were unsound. J. H. Stirling.

maieutical (mā-ū′ti-kạl), a. [< maieutic + -al.] Same as maieutic.

maigniet, n. Same as meiny.

3. A fabric of meshes, especially and almost exclusively of metal, used as a defense against weapons; a kind of armor, specifically called chain-mail, composed of rings of metal, interlinked as in a chain, but extended in width as well as in length. Chain-mail seems to have been introduced into the Roman army in imitation of the Gauls, and was much worn under the later empire. It was the favorite armor in Europe during the twelfth and thirteenth centuries, but was slow of fabrication and expensive. It was of three kinds: (1) that in which the rings kept their shape by their stiffness alone, and which was therefore very heavy; (2) that in which the links were riveted and forged; (3) that in which each link was braced across by a small bar—a rare form. See hauberk, chausses, banded mail (under banded[2]), gusset, and camail.

Coat of Chain-mail (Hauberk), and detail of same.

He put a silk cote on his backe,
And mail of manye a fold.
Old Robin of Portingale (Child's Ballads, III. 38).

Some wore coat armour, imitating scale:
And next their skins were stubborn shirts of mail.
Dryden, Pal. and Arc., iii. 27.

4. By extension, armor of any sort.

To teach that right is more than might, and justice more than mail! Whittier, Brown of Ossawatomie.
